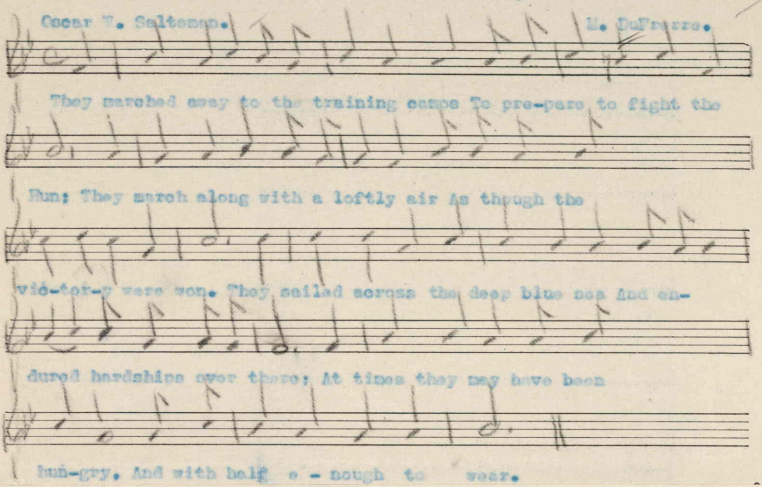
THE YANKEE DOUGHBOYS.

Oscar W. Saltsman. M. DuFrerre.



They marched away to the training camps To pre-pare to fight the Hun; They march along with a loftly air As though the vic-tor-y were won. They sailed across the deep blue sea And endured hardships over there; At times they may have been hun-gry. And with half e - nough to wear.

None of us know of the trials of war
That our soldier boys have faced,
Of tragedies they have witnessed,
Caused by men of the human race.
And now the awful war is over,
They come marching back again,
Relating tales of victories
And of the deaths of comrades slain.

(3)

We shouted and cheered them onward
To the fight against the Hun,
But now the battle is over,
And the great world war is won;
Won by the Yankee soldiers,
We see them every day,
Some are at work beside us,
And some are by the way.

(4)

Let us each and all remember
In the years that are to come,
What we owe to the Yankee soldiers
That whipped the cruel Hun!
And let us be unmindful
Of what ancipitals may say,
But remember the Yankee doughboys,
And the good old U. S. A.
