merous crowd of relatives and neighbours. It may perhaps be thought unnecessary to offer any encomium upon a life and character so well known as that of Gen. Locke. But to those who survive him, it may have its utility, inasmuch as it may excite to an imitation of those virtues, and of that conduct in life, which so deservedly raised him in the general estimation of mankind. Passing over his social turn of mind, his acknowledged liberality of sentiment, his benevolent disposition, and his uniform attachment to the rights and liberties of his country, we hasten briefly to state a few of his many and able services, devoted to the interest of his country and to the happiness of the individuals of it, before, during, and after the Revolution.—Early in life, he was chosen a member of the State Legislature, in which he served during a period of above thirty years, with the utmost utility to his Country, and the unremitted and increasing confidence of his constituents. He was a member of the Convention for the ratification of the Federal Constitution, and the ensuing year when it was adopted. In the year 1792, he was chosen a Representative, and for six successive years served in the Congress of the United States, until the aspiring and ambitious Federalists had monopolized all offices, and the most faithful services of the best of Republicans were forgotten, amidst the pretended impending danger of their country, and the continual paper warfare of the supposed protectors of it. He retired (though not without the utmost exertions for the better information of his deluded fellow-citizens) to concerns more domestic, though not less declining, and breathed his last a firm and fixed Republican.—Thus ended the long and useful life of a loving Husband, a tender Parent, a benevolent Friend, and a zealous Advocate for the Prosperity, Liberty and Independence of his Country.

An official letter from Rear Admiral Lacrosse, commanding at Guadaloupe, dated the 14th July has been published in the Paris papers. Among other subjects relating to the colony, he mentions the following of America.

"The rear admiral directed his attention to the manner in which the treaty between France and the United States was executed in the colony. He ascertained, indeed, that all the vessels which had been seized since the Convention, or condemned before the publication of it in the colony, had been restored to their respective proprietors—but he was astonished at the number of those condemned between these two periods; and the products of which had been divided between the fitters out and the crews of the privateers. He proposes to draw up a report, which will make known to the government the importance of the claims the subjects of the United States have still to make. The evil is the greater, because the decrees of the Consuls, constituting a Council of Prizes at Paris, was unknown in the colony until the rear admiral's arrival; so that the neutrals were liable to the condemnation usually exercised by the Tribunals of Commerce."

NEW-YORK, October 16.

It is with great pleasure we inform our readers, that for the twenty hours preceding yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, only three cases of the fever had been reported to the Resident Physician; and should the present pure, northerly winds continue till Monday, we are in hopes of [illegible] the immediate return of those who have left the city.

The following questions are proposed for decision by the Royal Society of Copenhagen.

1. "Is oxygen, or any gas containing it, absolutely necessary to the growth and expansion of the chick in the egg of the common domestic hen, or of any other fowl? Or, is it possible for that growth and expansion to take place in any gas unfit for respiration? and what is that gas?

2. "What influence has electricity, positive or negative, on the state of the air and on the capacity of the atmosphere to take up water in the state of gas vapour?

3. "For the best answer to each of these questions, will be given a prize of a gold medal, worth one hundred Danish Crowns. The memoirs must be sent in before the end of September, 1802."

"T. BUGGI."

The evidence of the efficacy of Perkins Tractors, of late the subject of so much controversy and speculation, is at length considered as decisive and medical characters of high reputation are now recommending their use. The idea entertained by some that their good effects were ascribable to imagination is proved to be erroneous, since they are found to cure infants and horses as readily as any other subjects. Indeed, the utility of the Tractors, as a remedy for inflamed eyes, sprains, contusions, and consequently lameness of horses, is now so well established that they are rapidly adopting in Gentlemen's stables. Among some singular cures upon horses recently communicated, and published during the present month, is a very remarkable case from A. Pincke, Esq. of Sheffield, Kent, but its detail would exceed our limits; also the following note from a highly respected Nobleman, who has liberally permitted it to be published for general information:

"London, Hartford-street May 25, 1801.

"Lord Rivers presents his compliments to Mr. Perkins, and requests he will send by the bearer a set of his Metallic Tractors, which he is desirous of purchasing in addition to those he has already had, and which he constantly leaves with his groom; they having been of the greatest use in his stables."

PARIS.

Decree of the 21st August.

The Consuls of the Republic, in order to assure the execution of the law of the 19th of November, 1797, prohibiting the introduction of British merchandise, upon the report of the First Consul, decree.

Art. I. Reckoning from the 23d of September next, all dimities, muslinets, linen cloths, and velvets, which do not bear the mark of the manufacturer, and the national stamp, with the number, shall be adjudged to be of English manufacture, and be confiscated, conformably to the law of the 19th of November, 1797.

II. The government will send to every prefect, in sufficient number, two sorts of stamps, the one to mark the stuffs at present in the magazines, the other to be placed on those manufacturing.

III. Each prefect shall name a commissary for every principal city, who shall stamp, without expence, all stuffs now in the magazines. He shall likewise appoint one for the manufacturing towns, to stamp the stuffs just issuing from the manufactory and before the glossing and bleaching.—These marks shall be made after a prescribed manner, and placed at both ends of each piece.

A register shall be opened containing the number of marked pieces, and the names of the manufacturers. The register shall be deposited in the municipality, and be signed by the mayor.

IV. After the 23d of September, the pieces seized without a mark, or with a forged mark, shall be confiscated, conformably to the law of the 19th of November, 1797; and delivered up to the government, in order that the sale should be made to a foreigner, and the money arising therefrom to be distributed to those who seized it according to the terms of the same law. viz. The half of the price, according to the computed value, shall be ultimately paid by the government.

V. The ministers of the interior and of finance, are charged with what concerns them in this respect, and with the execution of the present decree, which shall be inserted in the bulletin of the laws.

(Signed) BONAPARTE.
