Augusta, Sept. 22.

We learn that the commissioners appointed by the states of Tennessee and Georgia, for the purpose of designating and laying out the road from one state to the other, through the Cherokee nation, have had a meeting, and have agreed on the part of road, that each state will undertake to open—It is highly probably, that it will be completed before the close of the present year.

Columbia, S. C. September 9.

The President of the United States, has appointed Dominick Augustine Hall, Esquire, of this state, to be district Judge of the territory of Orleans.

LETTERS ON SILESIA,

Have lately been published in London. The advertisement states, that they "were written during a tour through that country in the years 1800, 1801 ; by his Excellency John Quincy Adams, then Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States to the Court of Berlin ; and since a Member of the American Senate ; in two parts :—Part I. Containing a Journal of a tour through Silesia, performed in the latter part of 1800, by Mr. Adams ; in which the topography, the agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and the morals and manners of the people of that dutchy are accurately described.—Part II. Containing a complete geographical, statistical, and historical account of Silesia ; together with a detail of its political constitution ; military, civil, and ecclesiastical establishments, seminaries of education, literature, and learned men.

The price is one dollar 78 cents, in boards ; embellished with a new map.

Boston Paper.

The Court of Session in Scotland lately gave judgment in the following case :—

Burns, the celebrated Poet, had written several letters, which he addressed to a lady, whom he chose to distinguish by the name of Clarinda. These letters found their way to the public, and being deemed by the friends of Burns in both pe honorable to his memory, they applied to the Court of Session for an interdict and prohibition of sale.—The abstract question decided by the court was, whether even on the supposition of a consent by the receiver, letters can thus be published without the consent of the writer, or (after his death) of his representatives? The judges were decidedly of opinion that the receiver of a letter has no right to publish it without the consent of the writer or of his representatives after his death : and therefore granted a perpetual interdict against the publication and sale of Burn's Letters to Clarinda.

From the Gazette of the United States.

We are informed that three persons have been apprehended at Tioga, in consequence of the governor's proclamation, among whom is Gillet, supposed to be a principal. Against him the grand jury have found a bill. The bills against the other two have been returned ignoramus.

Extract of a letter from Williamsport, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, dated Sept. 13, 1804.

" Aaron Gillet has been taken and brought to this place, and two bills found against him by the grand jury.—He has entered bail for his appearance at our next court. Dorman Bless and his family are come in, and I am informed by him, that Gillet has sold the tract in the name of Mark Willcox, to a certain Samuel Sattarbe.—The grand jury found bills against a number of the Yankees for a forcible entry on Willcox's tract, but if government does not take some decisive measures, it will be of no use to get possession of any lands by a course of law, as the persons to whom you lease, are drove off by those villains.—There is one way they might be kept in subjection, which is, for the governor to station a garrison on the Tioga and one at the mouth of Sugar creek, which would keep them in fear, and the civil officers would be able to do their duty.—At present no process can be executed of any kind.

The Yankees have cut up Willcox's tract and one below, into small tracts of 30 perches—on the Tioga and extending one mile back they give one hundred acres to each Connecticut settler.—If something is not done by government to put a stop to these intruders, we may as well give them the country. I intend forwarding by next post all the depositions I have."

EMIGRANT'S GRAVE.

FOUNDED ON A TRUE STORY.

Why mourn ye, why strew ye those flow'rets around,
To yon new sodded grave as you slowly advance?
In yon new sodded grave (ever dear be the ground)
Lies the stranger we love—the poor exile from France.

And is the poor exile at rest from his woe,
No longer the sport of misfortune and chance?
Mourn on, village mourners, my tears too shall flow
For the stranger we lov'd—the poor exile from France.

Oh! kind was his nature, tho' bitter his fate,
And gay was his converse, though broken his heart ;
No comfort, no hope his heart could elate,
Though comfort and hope he to all could impart.

Ever joyless himself, in the joys of the plain,
Still foremost was he, mirth and pleasure to raise ;
And sad was his soul, yet how blithe was his strain,
When he sung the glad song or more fortunate days !

One pleasure he knew—in his straw cover'd shed,
For the snow beaten beggar his faggots to trim ;
One tear of delight he could drop on the bread
Which he shar'd with the poor who were poorer than him.

And when round his death bed profusely we cast
Every gift, every solace our hamlet could bring,
He blest us with sighs, which we thought were his last
But he still had a prayer for his country and king.

Poor exile, adieu ! undisturb'd by thy sleep !
From the feast, from the wake, from the village green dance,
How oft shall we wander, by moonlight to weep,
O'er the stranger we lov'd—the poor exile from France,

To the church going bride shall thy mem'ry impart,
One pang as her eyes on thy cold relics glance ;
One rose from thy garland, one tear from thy heart,
Shall drop on the grave of the exile from France.

Annecdote of the late Sir Richard Arkwright.

When sir Richard first went to Manchester he hired himself to a petty barber, but being remarkably frugal, he saved money out of a very scanty income. With this saving he took a cellar ; at the cellar head he displayed this inscription :—" Subterranean shaving, with keen razors, for a penny !" The novelty had a successful effect, for he had plenty of customers, insomuch, that several brother tonsors, who before had demanded two pence for a clean chin, were obliged now to come down to a reduced price, and they also stiled themselves sub-terraneous shavers, though they all lived and worked above ground. Upon this sir Richard went still to a further reduction, and shaved for a half penny ! A neighbouring cobler, one day descended the original tonsor's steps to be shaved—the fellow had a remarkable strong rough beard. Arkwright beginning to lather him, told him he hoped he would give him another halfpenny, for his beard was so stiff he was afraid it might spoil his razor. The cobler replied, " I'll see you hang'd first !" Arkwright shaved him for a halfpenny, and immediately gave him two pair of shoes to mend ; and this was the basis of Arkwright's extraordinary fortune : for the cobler, struck with the unexpected favor, introduced him to the inspection of the cotton machine, invented by his particular friend, which Arkwright got possession of, and which gradually led him to the dignity of knighthood, and the accumulation of half a million a year.
