its lost power, and has succeeded so far as to detach numbers from the republican cause, it is highly necessary that there should be a rallying point which may shield from danger, what was the result of a long and arduous struggle—the liberties of a virtuous people. To this point we may be guided and saved, only by the wisdom of a Jefferson. Pennsylvania, though foremost in opposing the arbitrary acts of the federal party, and proud with the success of her efforts, is now swayed by men, who are either openly or secretly endeavoring to overthrow the administration. Much as republicanism owes its rise to our state, not one of its officers can be found who is not a professed federalist, or who does not combine with, and support federal men. In this state of things, however, we do not despair;—the cause of the people, aided by our patriotic and enlightened President, will triumph over all the desperate designs of our desperate opponents. Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of three from the city and three from the county of Philadelphia be appointed on the part of the democratic young men, to unite and confer with all committees, that are or may be appointed by the citizens generally, for the purpose of addressing Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, upon the propriety of his serving for another constitutional period, whereupon Thomas Irwin, Geo. G. Leiper, James Wilson, (pr.) from the city—Daniel Addis, Richard Heimberger, and James M. Linnard, from the county, were appointed the committee.

In presenting the following table to our readers, we invite their attention to the interesting fact, that while 1685 persons died of the Small Pox, only ONE died of the Cow Pox.

COMMUNICATION.

It is observed that the newspapers of the U. States publish the following new act of British executive government. It exceeds all the former irregularities of England, and is of course uncommonly injurious to neutral rights.

(COPY.)

Downing-street, July 26.

BLOCKADE OF VENICE.

The King has been pleased to cause it to be signified by the right hon. Chas. James Fox, his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, to the ministers of friendly and neutral powers residing at this court, that his majesty has judged it expedient (for the protection of his subjects, & the annoyance of his enemies) to establish the most rigorous blockade at the entrance of the port of Venice, and to maintain and enforce the same in the strictest manner, according to the usages of war acknowledged and observed in similar cases; and that the port of Venice must be considered as being in a state of blockade; and that from this time all the measures authorised by the laws of nations, and the respective treaties between his majesty and the different friendly and neutral powers, will be adopted and executed with respect to all vessels attempting to violate the said blockade."

It is believed, that "the mere or general protection of the subjects" of a belligerent power is not a legitimate reason for a blockade; nor is the mere or general "annoyance of his enemies" a lawful object of a blockade. Nor is it (as is firmly believed) by any means within the law of nations, that the executive government of a country, at the distance of some thousands of miles, should declare a port of the further extremity of Europe in a state of blockade. This is an act only fit and proper for a military or naval commander actually investing the place. The national civil power has no right "to establish a blockade" of a remote port. An enemy or a gale of wind may have destroyed the little fleet of the blockader. This act from Mr. Fox's office (in Downing street) is entirely unsupported by the law of nations in the three particulars mentioned, and these are its whole essence. It is a curious pretence, that the protection of the subjects of Great Britain requires the blockade of Venice. The nearest of them are the British forces in Sicily. After this act, any purpose for a blockade may be assigned. So the mere annoyance of an enemy is a curious pretence for a blockade. Hereafter a declaration of war may be deemed to legalise universal double blockades, for it will then be the subject of each belligerent to "annoy" its enemy. It is impossible to account for such open, continued, new and diversified violations of the law of nations, and of neutral rights and trade. It is not doubted that the government and people of the United States will be duly impressed with these extreme and fatal irregularities.

Natchez, Sept. 9.

Gen. James Wilkinson arrived in this city on Sunday last, and departs this morning, we understand, for Natchitoches, by the way of Fort Adams.

Extract of a letter from Natchitoches, dated August 30, 1806.

"On Sunday last his excellency gov. Claiborne arrived at this place, accompanied by col. Henry Hopkins, adj. gen. of the territory of Orleans, and a handsome escort of gentlemen of the county of Rapides; no intelligence of his excellency's coming was received at Natchitoches, until a few minutes before his arrival, which was announced by a federal salute from Fort Claiborne. The governor's arrival has made the most favorable impression on the minds of all those of the inhabitants who are attached to the interest of the U. S.; who saw a large armed force advancing within five leagues of Natchitoches, evincing an hostile disposition, already imprisoning and transporting into the dominions of Spain, no less than five citizens of the U. S. who had never offended them; cutting down and taking away the flag of the U. S. from the Caddo nation, which country was acknowledged within our jurisdiction, and carrying the flag through the country, exhibiting it as a trophy of victory and superiority; an armed party of upwards of 300 cavalry and mounted infantry, opposing and turning back a scientific exploring party, ascending Red River by order of the President of the U. S. under the direction of major Freeman and capt. Sparks, harboring and protecting slaves absconding from their masters, together with reports of still larger reinforcements advancing to join them.

"This situation of affairs will probably prolong for some time his excellency's stay here, for the purpose of organising and putting himself at the head of such of his militia as may be proper to call in on the occasion."

New-Orleans, Sept. 4.

The Natchez Herald mentions, that all the troops excepting one company have left Fort-Adams for Natchitoches.

Letters from Fort-Adams state that nothing has transpired relative to the movements of the Spaniards near Natchitoches, and that dispatches had passed thro' that place from the war office for the commanding officer of the American troops at Natchitoches.

A NEW WORK

Just received and for Sale by

J. MARCH

High street, George Town,

In a beautiful octavo volume, containing near 500 pages, with plates.

Price THREE Dollars in extra boards.

PLAIN DISCOURSES

OF

THOMAS EWELL, M. D.

LATE OF VIRGINIA.

WHICH detail the properties of Matter, on principles of Modern Chemistry, designed for domestic as well as professional gentlemen.

Unfortunately; for the interests of mankind, of late years, there has been obtruded on the world, many books relating to Chemistry, which have not only in part mistaken the objects of this science, but have been obscured by technical terms, which only scholars could understand. In consequence of this, the word Chemistry generally conveys with it something mysterious. An attempt is made in these discourses to restore the science to its beautiful simplicity and proper objects: for, instead of devoting pages to the consideration of useless compounds, the work is engrossed by subjects of importance to every individual. The plan of the undertaking, it will be readily recollected, has not long since been distinguished by the approbation of many of the first characters of the country; and the publishers now offer the work to the public with peculiar pleasure, because they can confidently assert that the execution is equal to the plan. With a strict regard to truth, it may be asserted that no Chemical Work contains more suggestions entirely original, or more information so important and so interesting to every part of the community.

To detail all the valuable topics treated of in these discourses, would be giving almost an index. The economical management of heat—the burning of fuel—the preparation of soils—of manures—of spirituous and fermented drinks—of vinegar and of food—the arts of working metals—of making mortar—bricks—potter's ware—of purifying butter—meats—infectious or contagious airs—putrid or impure waters—and hundreds of other subjects of equal importance, are fully treated of in this volume. In fact, it will be difficult to find a character, from the most learned philosopher, down to the most uninformed farmer, or dairy maid, who will not be benefitted by the perusal of this work. Under such circumstances it would be useless to make further remarks; as discernment is too prevalent in this country to suffer it to be said, that American citizens were not the first patrons of American genius and labors, when devoted to purposes so universally useful.
