The ancient Music of the Church of Egypt is a thing of rare beauty. But it is gradually becoming lost. As sung in most of the Churches today it is in a state of chaos & confusion. Accordingly, an effort is being made by Mr. Raghet Moftah, assisted by the leading Church singers, to regain the authentic tradition & set it down in a book: to the end that, in future, there may be not only a Standard Work of reference, but also a true & uniform method of singing; -- & that in accord with the Ancient Usage. As an English Catholic, who is neither "Roman" or "Protestant", I feel that the service he is rendering is likely to be of incalculable benefit to the Church. It should surely receive the sympathy & support of every loyal Copt. In this Mr. Michael agrees. Also it should help to restore a sound devotional worship, & strengthen the Church in resisting the onset of Modern Civilization. My life has been devoted to religious music, but I do not remember ever before to have met with such devotion & zeal for the welfare of the Church as that shown by Mr. Moftah.
