"There's Blood Upon The Moon" By Emily Brachman.

There's blood upon the moon and on the lands across the water;
There's moans where cannons boom, above the awful fields of slaughter;
Brave hearts lie bleeding in the gloom of trenches with no quarter;
Grim death it seals there doom out there and they--they dare not falter.

CHORUS.

There's blood upon the moon; there's blood on land and sea;
There's hunger and there's gloom; homes filled with misery;
With fathers shot in trenches, and brothers, drowned, too soon;
There's blood upon the moon, yes, there's blood upon the moon.

2

By sea it is no better, ships are sunk by night and day;
Pray tell me why--you neutrals--there must be a better way!
Oh, break those murd'rous fetters--stop this mad and bloody fray--
Make men obey the letter --let all nations have fair play.
