George<sup>334</sup>, like his brothers, was an industrious, expert farmer boy; he was the best liked boy in the neighborhood, and has always been highly esteemed by his acquaintance. He had no taste for public life, but quietly pursued his occupation until compelled by infirmity to confine himself to the house. He still suffers severely with rheumatism, his joints are stiffened, and the last two or three years has only been able, with some assistance, to get from his bed to a rolling chair, in which he can move himself about the house. When he married, he bought the Bissell place, the old homestead of the first Ebenezer<sup>11</sup> Hayden (who left it in 1751, and removed to Harwinton), and he (George<sup>334</sup>), has since added by purchase from the heirs of the late Ezra<sup>39</sup> Hayden the balance of the original William<sup>1</sup> Hayden lot, and now with his son holds nearly all, including the old house (the second one built) on the ground.

- 335. Uriah Pliney Hayden, (Nathaniel Lyman<sup>155</sup>, Capt. Nathaniel<sup>59</sup>, Dea. Nathaniel<sup>54</sup>, Samuel<sup>10</sup>, Daniel<sup>2</sup>, William<sup>1</sup>); born at Haydens, May 9, 1818; "living west, 1886."

Uriah<sup>335</sup> remained home during his minority, went south and engaged in teaching, and continued there about ten years, when he
