

On page 87, 14th line, read her elegy instead of "his" elegy.

On page 88, 6th line from bottom, "amount" should be annuities; 3rd line from bottom "parents" should be portions.

On page 89, 13th line, "debts" should be debt; and 7th line from bottom, "only of the said" should be every of these; 5th line from bottom thereby should be yearly.

On page 91, 25th line, "baser," should be worser; 29th line, instead of "thereby," supply, I find mine estate; 31st line, "young" should be youngest.

On page 97, 23rd line, "Quinnipeah" should be Quinnipiak.

A friend makes the criticism on my No. 1, that my statement on page 40, that I had never heard of such a plant as a dodd, is contradicted on page 10. It is even so. But when I wrote page 40, that statement was true. After the page had been printed, I found the fact in Nash's Worcestershire, and thought it proper to be inserted in my Introduction, where I made some other corrections. Perhaps I ought to have there given this explanation. I shall reserve some pages in front of each number for such additions and corrections.

There is a pedigree of Sutton given by Thoroton in Hist. of Notts. which may have been the origin of the Bartram inscription described in the note at page 113. Dr. Thoroton says Richard de Sutton (brother to Rowland) had a daughter, Alice, whose daughter Joane had for her husband, Bertram de Moubouchier, in 3 Edward III., and they left posterity.

The Markhams were connected with the Suttons by Richard or Wm. de Markham marrying Cecilia Lexington, sister of Rowland Sutton's wife. The above Cecilia's son, Robert, was a great man in 2 Edw. I. and died 17th of his reign; said Robt's arms being, Or, a lion ramp. vert. So this Markham bore the arms attributed to Bartram and Sutton in the note at page 113.

Sir John Lisle's widow, mentioned on page 122, in the note, was not only tried by the infamous Judge Jeffreys, but convicted of treason and executed against all right, justice and humanity.

On page 129 the third stanza of the epitaph has two errors as it was printed without my seeing the proof; the word lay should be ley and deire should be desire; and in the middle stanza, the date "MCCCCVIII." is wrong. There should be five C's, the date being 1508.

On page 177, 9th line from bottom, "Waite. Winthrop" should be Wait-still Winthrop.
