

Judge Dudley left many published works, some in book or pamphlet form, and some in the Transactions of the Royal Society. One of the latter, printed in 1720, was an article, or essay, upon the "Method of Making Maple Sugar in New England." Another, "An Account of the Poison-wood Tree (Rhus Vermix, Lin)."
Another, "Upon the Methods of Discovering Beehives and Wild Honey." Also, "An Account of the Moose Deer (Cervus Alces, Lin)."
An "Account of the Falls of Niagara." An "Account of the Locusts in New England."

In the Philosophical Transactions, Paul Dudley's works occur in Vols. 31, 33, 34 and 39. Some of his original letters to Dr. Cromwell Mortymer, Secretary of the Royal Society, are preserved in the British Museum; and I saw them there in his hand-writing in 1849-50. One letter, dated at his house in Roxbury, Dec. 18, 1733, says, he had undertaken, at the desire of Dr. Irving (Secretary of the Royal Society, previous to Mortymer), a Journal of the Winds and Weather, and last year "I sent it to him, but have not yet heard whether it came safe to his hand."

Other articles and essays of Mr. Dudley were: "An Account of the Rattle Snake"; "The Indian Sweating Houses," A.D. 1724; "On Some of the Plants of New England, and Remarkable Instances of the Nature and Power of Vegetation"; "On the Natural History of Whales, and the Ambergris found in Spermaceti Whales"; "Account of the Several Earthquakes which have happened in New England, A.D. 1724"; "A Short Account of the Names, Situations, Numbers, &c., of the Five Nations of Indians in Alliance with New York, under the Crown of Great Britain," written at Albany in October, 1721. Paul Dudley was employed as an agent to visit them. They were: 1, Mohawks; 2, Oneidas; 3, Onondagoes; 4, Cayugas; 5, Senecas. He says, they have a common language, but slightly different dialects.

In another letter, April 18, 1735, he says: "I am very glad that my History of the Locusts in New England came safe to your hands, and that the Society were pleased to accept it in good part. I am very much obliged to the Society for the present of the Italian Cicada; nothing could have been more acceptable."

One letter has endorsed on the back of it: "Letter to Dr. Mortymer, Secretary to the Royal Society, answered Sept. 14, 1734, Dudley of Locusts, Cicada."

Another work of Judge Paul's which I saw was, "The Merchandize of Souls," being an Exposition of Certain Passages in the Book of Revelation.
