

10. SAMUEL<sup>3</sup> WALDO (Jonathan,<sup>2</sup> Cornelius<sup>1</sup>) was brought up a merchant in his father's counting room, and afterwards was in business with his cousin Cornelius on King Street and later in Merchants Row, but may not have continued long with him. He became a very wealthy and prominent man, was an intimate friend of Sir William Pepperrell and of William Shirley, whose appointment as governor he was instrumental in obtaining, much to the wrath of Gov. Belcher. He was an owner in the Muscangus Patent in Maine, and eventually became almost the sole proprietor of that property, which contained about 500,000 acres. He was also a large proprietor of lands in Massachusetts and Connecticut, and at his death his property inventoried £71,020:14:6 lawful money, an enormous fortune for those days. He is described as "an accomplished gentleman, active and enterprising, an elegant military officer, tall and portly." Feb. 7, 1745, he was commissioned brigadier general, and was second in command to Sir William Pepperrell in the Louisbourg expedition. In connection with his Maine lands, he made many voyages to Europe. He settled what is now Waldoboro' with German colonists. He lived on Queen Street in Boston, but also owned a residence in Falmouth. He died suddenly, while on an expedition with Gov. Pownall, at or near the site of the present City of Bangor, May 23, 1759. He married (published June 9, 1722) Lucy, daughter of Francis and Sarah (Whipple) Wainwright of Ipswich, who was born April 30, 1704, at Ipswich, and d. Aug. 7, 1741, at Boston. Mr. Waldo was councillor 1742-5 and 1758.
