This gentleman was s. by his son,

RICHARD SHALLCROSS, (XIV.) of Shallcross, entitled in himself

(1.) Arms.—As on p. 13.

(2.) His mother was relict of Leonard Shawcross.

(3.) The derivation of the name is difficult; see note p. 19. More probably it comes from the A.S. scacal, in modern English, shackle. There is a village of SHACKLECROSS, co. Derby, near Ockbrook. Shackle, 1377, Shackleton, and Seakel, are names. The contraction from SHACKLE to SHALL, and finally to SHAW, is violent, but not without precedent.

Shawcross, co. Dorset, bore the arms of the family under notice.

(4.) Francis Kinardsley, Esq., of Loxley, cousin of Richard Shallcross (XIV.).

(5.) Arms as Walker of Salt, p. 20, and of Bramshall, p. 31.
