PREFACE.

After a hundred and fifty years of Colonial settlement, supplemented by a hundred years of National existence, it has become in these later years a pleasant pursuit of thoughtful persons to search the records of the past to learn something of the origin and history of their ancestors.

The motive and spirit with which such researches are prosecuted in this country is rarely in the expectancy or even hope of elevating some ordinary though respectable individual or family in the public consideration by the possible discovery that some person bearing the family name was a Knight in the army of William the Conqueror, and who consequently became a lord of vast domains when the confiscated estates of the Saxons were parcelled out, though necessitated, like the American Indian, to impress his totem instead of writing his name—the original of the later aristocratic “Coat of Arms”—or of finding perhaps their noble ancestor to have been a rich brewer and representative of a “rotten borough” in an ancient parliament.

The inspiration which prompts societies and individuals to genealogical research in this country, springs from a nobler sentiment, even like unto that which we call patriotism, or love of birth-place, home or country, family affection, and reverential regard for the memory of ancestors.

Nevertheless, the reflection is gratifying that in the long list brought to view in this record, no one bearing the name of Noyes has been found wanting in moral rectitude, while several in the line, embracing a period of nearly three hundred years, have been eminent as clergymen and physicians, graduates of universities, deacons in churches, officers in civil and military life, and all manifestly excellent men and women, the heads of prolific families and good citizens.

The genealogical compilation herein relates mainly to the direct ancestors and descendants of the late Joseph Clark Noyes, of Morristown, Vt., who was the son of Oliver of Hyde Park, Vt., the son of John of Stonington, Vt., the son of Deacon John of Stonington, the son of Rev. James of Stonington, the son of Rev. James of Newbury, Mass., the immigrant of 1634, who was the son of Rev. William Noyes, Rector of the Parish of Choulderton, county of Wiltshire, England, from 1602 to 1621, and whose wife was sister of Rev. Robert Parker, a Puritan and Nonconformist, driven to Holland, whose nephew, Rev. Thomas Parker, came to America in the same ship with Rev. James Noyes and settled in Newbury.

The compiler of this record, conscious that he is not the right person in the right place in pursuing genealogical investigation, requiring peculiar qualifications which he assumes not to possess, and whose time is occupied in business affairs, has availed himself largely of the friendly aid of the late lamented Horace G. Cleveland, an accomplished gentleman and an expert genealogist, to whose industry these results are mainly due. His death a year since precluded the possibility of following out, as had been intended, the numerous branches of the ancient and venerable, yet thrifty, genealogical tree.

The "Reminiscences of an Nonagenarian," an exceedingly readable tale of early New England life, by Sarah Anna Emery, published at Newburyport, Mass., 1879, contains a fund of information relating to our immigrant ancestor, Rev. James Noyes, and of his numerous descendants in and around the original town of Newbury from 1634 to date. This book has been to me not only a lamp of historical light, but a photographic picture as well of domestic and social life in Colonial times.

We are likewise under obligations to R. A. Wheeler, of Stonington, Ct., for information regarding Rev. James Noyes the second, who preached in that town for fifty years.

Our thanks are extended to Miss Nellie A. Noyes, of Newbury, Mass., for her contribution to family research, and Miss Mary Noyes especially for a recent photograph of the ancient family homestead, built in 1646, which has always been owned by some member of the family, and which she now occupies.

Our regrets for want of more extended research into the collateral branches of the Noyes family are materially lessened by the information received that at least two gentlemen are delving in the same historical mine, the output of which will be richer, we doubt not, than the shaft which we have worked. We trust they may be not a little aided by the historical notes herein made, and that the result of their labors will soon be published.

HORATIO N. NOYES.

GENEALOGY.

Rev. James Noyes, the immigrant ancestor of our branch of the numerous Noyes family in this country, was born in Choulderton, Wiltshire, England, in 1608, came to New England in 1634, and died in Newbury, Mass., October 22, 1656, in the forty-eighth year of his age. His father, Rev. William Noyes, was rector of the parish of Choulderton, situated between Amesbury and Andover, near the great Salisbury Cathedral, built in 1220, whose lofty tower overlooks the dead Roman city of Sarum and "Stonehenge," the ruins of the wonderful prehistoric temple of the ancient Celtic Druids, in the midst of Salisbury Plain. The register of the diocese shows that he officiated in the parish from 1602 to 1621, when he resigned and was succeeded by Rev. Nathan Noyes, possibly a son or nephew. The wife of Rev. William and mother of our immigrant ancestor, was sister of Rev. Robert Parker, a learned Puritan divine and a graduate of Oxford, who was driven to Holland for non-conformity. Our ancestor, Rev. James, married in 1634 Sarah, eldest daughter of Mr. Joseph Brown, of Southampton, England, and in March of that year embarked for New England, in company with his brother Nicholas and his cousin Thomas Parker, in the ship "Mary and John," of London. He preached first at Medford, Mass., where he was made a freeman September 3, 1634; then for a time officiated at the Watertown church, and in 1635 he went to Newbury, where he preached until his death. His will was dated October 17, 1656, five days before his death, the inventory showing a good estate. His widow survived until September 13, 1691.

CHILDREN.

1. JOSEPH², born Oct. 15, 1637, died in Newbury, 1717; married first in 1662, Mary, daughter of Robert Darvell, by whom he had 8

Rev. Nathaniel Noyes, born Aug. 12, 1735, graduated at Nassau Hall in 1759, was ordained in South Hampton, N. H., Feb. 23, 1763; dismissed Dec. 8, 1800, and died in Newburyport in Dec., 1810. Sarah, consort of Rev. Nathaniel Noyes, died at South Hampton May 20, 1771, aged 25 years 8 months

Rev. Thomas Noyes, son of Col. Thomas Noyes of the West parish of Newbury, graduated at Harvard in 1795, and died young.

Nathan Noyes, M. D., graduated at Dartmouth, a physician of Newburyport.

Rev. Jeremiah Noyes, graduated at Dartmouth in 1799, ordained Nov. 16, 1803, in Gorham, Me., and died Jan. 15, 1807.

Moody Noyes, Harvard, 1800, died young.

Daniel Noyes, born Jan. 29, 1739, graduated at Harvard in 1758, was register of probate for Essex, and died in Ipswich March 21, 1815.

Joshua Noyes, born 1739, graduated at Nassau in 1759; was pastor elect of the church in Kingston, N. H., and died July 8, 1773, aged 34.

John Noyes, born May 9, 1709, graduated at Harvard in 1753, and died Aug. 13, 1759.

Rev. George Rappall Noyes, born March 6, 1798, graduated at Harvard in 1818; was ordained in South Brookfield, Mass., Oct. 30, 1827; resettled in Petersham Oct. 15, 1834. Elected professor in the divinity school, Cambridge, in 1840. Received the degree of D. D. the same year. He died June 3, 1868, aged 70 years and 3 months.

During his ministry he translated the poetical books of the Bible—the book of Job and the Psalms and the Prophets, and during his professorship a translation of the New Testament. At his death many distinguished divines paid appreciative tributes to his memory.

Francis V. Noyes, born Sept. 22, 1809, graduated at Dartmouth, received the degree of M. D. at Harvard, Aug., 1831. He was a physician in Newburyport until 1844, when he became a resident of Billerica.

Rev. Daniel Parish Noyes, born June 4, 1820, graduated 1840 at Yale College. Taught school till 1843; was a tutor till 1847; student at Andover till 1849; pastor of 3d Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., from 1849 till January, 1854. Secretary of the American Home-Missionary Society from January, 1854, till June, 1865. Secretary of Home Evangelization in Massachusetts from January, 1865, till 1873. While prosecuting this work, he founded a church in Pigeon Cove, Cape Ann, acting as pastor for the time. October, 1877, was installed pastor of a church in Wilmington.

Joseph M. Noyes, a distinguished teacher, and Henry Durant Noyes of the firm of Noyes, Snow & Co., publishers, 13½ Bromfield street, Boston. These are grandsons of Rev. Elijah Parish. Isaac Parsons Noyes, born Dec. 10, 1822, appointed assistant postmaster at Newburyport June 19, 1861; and postmaster in 1887; served on the Board of Overseers of the Poor three years, in the Common Council one year, Secretary of School Board six years, and re-elected on School Committee in 1878 for two years.

William Henry Noyes, M. D., born in Newbury July 28, 1825, graduated at Harvard University in dental medicine March 9, 1870; married May 14, 1848, Sarah M. Parshley of Stratford, N. H. Children: Ella Ada; Ernest Henry, born Nov. 20, 1853, graduated at Bowdoin College July 8, 1875.

George E. L. Noyes, son of Geo. W. Noyes, born in Newburyport Aug. 28, 1850, graduated at Harvard University in dental medicine March 10, 1872; married Nov. 27, 1878, Mary Hill Goodwin of Newburyport, daughter of Daniel A. Goodwin.

The "Nonagenarian" relates the following regarding the religious disturbance in Newbury caused by the preaching of the famous Whitefield. Rev. William Johnson would not admit him into his pulpit, and the great revivalist was obliged to preach in a private house. "I have often heard my great aunt Sara Noyes describe the sensation produced by the eloquent divine. My great grandfather, Dea. John Noyes, fully sympathized in the disapproval evinced by his pastor, and issued a strict edict forbidding any of his family attending what he termed "those disorderly assemblies." Aunt Sara, then a girl in her teens, entertained, as was natural, a strong desire to see and hear one whose name was on every tongue, and whose words and their effects were the chief topic of conversation on every side. At last, after much fear and trembling, she mustered courage to make a clandestine attempt to satisfy her curiosity. An evening meeting was to be held at a house in the vicinity, and she determined to brave her father's displeasure, if her absence was discovered, and go. It was a dark, cheerless night, when, with a throbbing heart, stealing down the stairs and noiselessly opening the door, she ran lightly down the gravel walk. Her hand was on the latch of the front gate, when a voice, in an authoritative tone, exclaimed "Go back!" Startled, affrighted, she stopped, turned, and peered into the darkness. No one was in sight. Through the uncurtained window she could see her father and the other members of her family seated around the bright wood fire. Concluding that, owing to the nervous timidity which this disobedience to paternal mandates had caused, imagination had conjured up this voice, with another long and searching look around, she opened the gates. "Go back!" reiterated the voice, even more decidedly than at first, just in her ear. What could it mean? Again she stopped, waited, looked and listened. Nothing unusual could be seen, and not a sound could be heard save the wind sighing through the trees. Sarah Noyes was a resolute girl, not easily turned from any purpose she had deliberately formed, neither had she much belief in the supernatural. Thrusting back her fears, with a strong will she stilled her throbbing heart, and with a firm step, she again started forward. "Go back, go back," thundered the voice, in such a powerful and authoritative tone, that, thrilling in every nerve, the astonished girl, completely subdued, hastily turned, and fled into the house. Though she lived to a great age, and could never be reckoned a credulous person, to the last hour of her life she firmly believed that this was a Divine interposition to keep her from evil."

It is further related by the venerable Nonagenarian that it had been the rule of the Church that every child presented for the rite should be admitted to baptism. It was whispered among the people that Parson Woods intended to set aside the "half-way covenant," and baptize only the offspring of church members. A niece of Aunt Sara Noyes (recently married) and her husband had come to reside with and take care of the old lady and her farm. A son was born to this couple, which Aunt Sara desired christened. As neither of the parents were communicants, she thought it proper to ascertain the clergyman's sentiments. Without hesitation, he promised to baptize the infant: "It was too cold (March) to take out such a young babe; when the weather grew milder he would arrange for the ceremony." But Sunday after Sunday passed; the minister could never be made to appoint a day for the rite, some excuse was always ready, till at length it became understood that thenceforth only church members would be permitted to present their children at the baptismal font. Aunt Sara was excessively indignant! The great granddaughter of the Rev. James Noyes; the daughter of the former senior deacon (one next in dignity to the pastor), and herself one who at all times had been most active, not only in the families of the clergymen, but throughout the parish, whenever her services or money could promote the good of the Church, Aunt Sara had come to be regarded, and I think, also (though she would have disdained my assertion), to look upon herself somewhat in the light of a lady elect. A slight to such a person could not remain unnoticed. Many were really grieved at this change in the baptismal ordinance; others were angry at what they considered duplicity; many remarked that it was "the cunning, the maneuvering that excited ire and aversion. The pastor's manner was so arbitrary and domineering that they must regard it as positively insolent. He ought to be taught that he was not a pope to head a hierarchy, but simply a preacher chosen to minister to a Congregational society. Several refusing longer to listen to his teachings, left the society for other parishes, while Aunt Sara passed the day in private devotion at home."

Among the numerous clergymen and doctors which the Noyes families of Newbury contained in early days, it would be strange if there should not be found at least one less grave and sedate, if not absolutely eccentric, and such a character is found in the person of Lieut. Joseph Noyes, described in the Emery book. He was an old revolutionary officer, and was employed on a time to split wood for the minister of the church. The parson was noted for his thriftiness, not to say covetousness, in exacting contributions from his parishioners of turkeys, cheese, provisions and wood beyond that of any former minister. The morning that Joseph commenced work the parson went into the yard, and after looking over the pile he said, "Lieutenant, here are some nice logs, too good for firewood, it would be a pity to burn them; here are three or four just right for trunnels, put them aside, they are too nice for fuel."

The Lieutenant made no exact reply, but as soon as the minister's back was turned, he fell to work with might and main on those identical logs. After dinner the parson came out again. Gazing hurriedly about, he excitedly exclaimed, "Where are those logs, those nice trunnel logs I told you to save?" "Save?" queried the wily old officer, with an air of bewilderment. "Yes, I told you to put them aside, that they were too good for fire-wood."

"Well, really now! Sometimes I am a little hard o'hearing, parson. I thought you told me to split them fine logs first," innocently returned the unfaithful old sinner, with a deprecatory air.

"Well, well," said the pastor, "I am sorry, but it cannot be helped now. I was not aware that you were deaf lieutenant, is that the cause of your absence from divine worship?"

"Why, yes; I used to go regularly when a youngster, but going into the army upsets people. War is a glorious thing when fighting for one's liberties, but it kind of unsettles a fellow. I've had so many bullets whistling around my ears, that half the time it seems as if I could'nt hear anything else."

"If you cannot hear, come and sit in the pulpit; I should be most happy to have you," the pastor replied in his most polite manner, as he turned to reenter the house.

As the lieutenant had said, the war did unsettle a great many. Good officers made but poor civilians. Lieut. Noyes would not have deliberately performed a bad deed, but his moral sense had become somewhat stretched, and a good joke was the very breath of his nostrils.

Though since the end of the war he had led somewhat of a desultory life, he had always managed to dress and appear like a gentleman. The next Sunday, to the wonder and consternation of the congregation, just as the parson had taken his place in the pulpit, the lieutenant, in his best suit, his hair elaborately frizzed, powdered and cued, marched up the broad aisle with his most imposing tread, and slowly ascended the pulpit stairs. With a profound military salute he seated himself beside the pastor. "What could it mean?" The amazement increased when, as the clergyman arose to begin the service, the lieutenant rose also; standing a little back with his head slightly inclined forward, and his hand behind his ear, he continued to occupy his post beside the pastor through the long prayer and the longer sermon. As every one knew the old scamp was not the least deaf, they began to surmise that some mischief was on foot, but "what was the mystery?" After two or three Sabbaths in which the pranky old officer, with the gravity of forty judges, occupied a place in the pulpit, the story of the trunnel logs became whispered about, and his presence then created such a sensation that the tithing man was compelled to give him a seat on the long bench in front. Some members declared that some judgment must fall on the reprobate; but notwithstanding these menaces, he went on his way rejoicing, getting more treats than ever at the tavern, and more hearty welcome to good cheer throughout the vicinity.

Enoch Noyes, says the Nonagenarian, was noted for the manufacture of combs and horn buttons. He was a great genius, and had contrived many inventions and made much improvement in the business. Mr. Noyes was a great oddity. He would run over the parish bare-headed and barefooted. It was no uncommon thing for him to appear at our house after dinner of a hot summer day, in only a shirt and breeches, having ran across the fields, two miles, "just to take a noon-ing." A great joker and a capital story-teller, his appearance was a signal for a general frolic. He was fond of telling strangers that his father used to say he had four remarkable children: Molly was remarkably handsome, Tim was remarkably sloven, John was remarkably wicked, and Enoch was remarkably cunning."

If pride of ancestry was a characteristic of the descendants of the primitive Noyes family of Newbury, Mass., there was at least one remarkable woman who lived in the Puritanic days of New England whose memory should be held in preeminent regard.

Monuments are now erected over the graves of noble women who, in the seventeenth century, were persecuted unto death by a fanatical priesthood and an insane church. Our ancestor, Margaret Noyes, had the honor above all other women bearing the name, of being deemed a "Witch." It was, however, her good fortune to live a generation later than the period when whipping from street to street and from town to town at the cart tail, drowning in ponds, and strangling was the fate of many good women who were discovered by ecclesiastical tigers to be too intelligent and intellectually independent to be fanatically orthodox.

The venerable Nonagenarian lady already quoted describes the class of persons who obtained "the unenviable notoriety of witches as being usually inoffensive women, possessing a marked individuality, strong intellectual faculties, quick perception and keen wit, united to a firm will and independence of action, characteristics which, in some way, brought upon them the ban of the community. The witch of the Falls Parish (Newbury), was an old woman called "Tuggie Noyes"; her real Christian name was Margaret. I never heard how she obtained the nickname of Tuggie. I have only a faint remembrance of her, a dim recollection of stealing behind my mother to peep at the witch, as she bargained for some tobacco which my father had raised. I think this woman gained a livelihood by spinning and weaving. I have often heard David Emery relate an incident of his boyhood by which his disbelief in witches was fully confirmed. One cold winter morning, David and his chum Nate Perley were on their way to school, when they descried Tuggie advancing over the half-trodden path, the hood on her gray lambkin cloak drawn around her face, and a bunch of woolen yarn in her hand.

"There's the witch," Nate exclaimed, lamenting the lack of a sixpence to place in the path to stop her farther progress. His companion expressed his credulity respecting such an effect, but nevertheless drew a sixpence from his pocket, which he adroitly dropped immediately before the old woman; she passed on directly over it with a courtsey and good day, and David again pocketed his coin, firm in the faith of Tuggie's innocence of the diabolical influence, with a full determination never to believe in any witch, save the witch of Endor."
