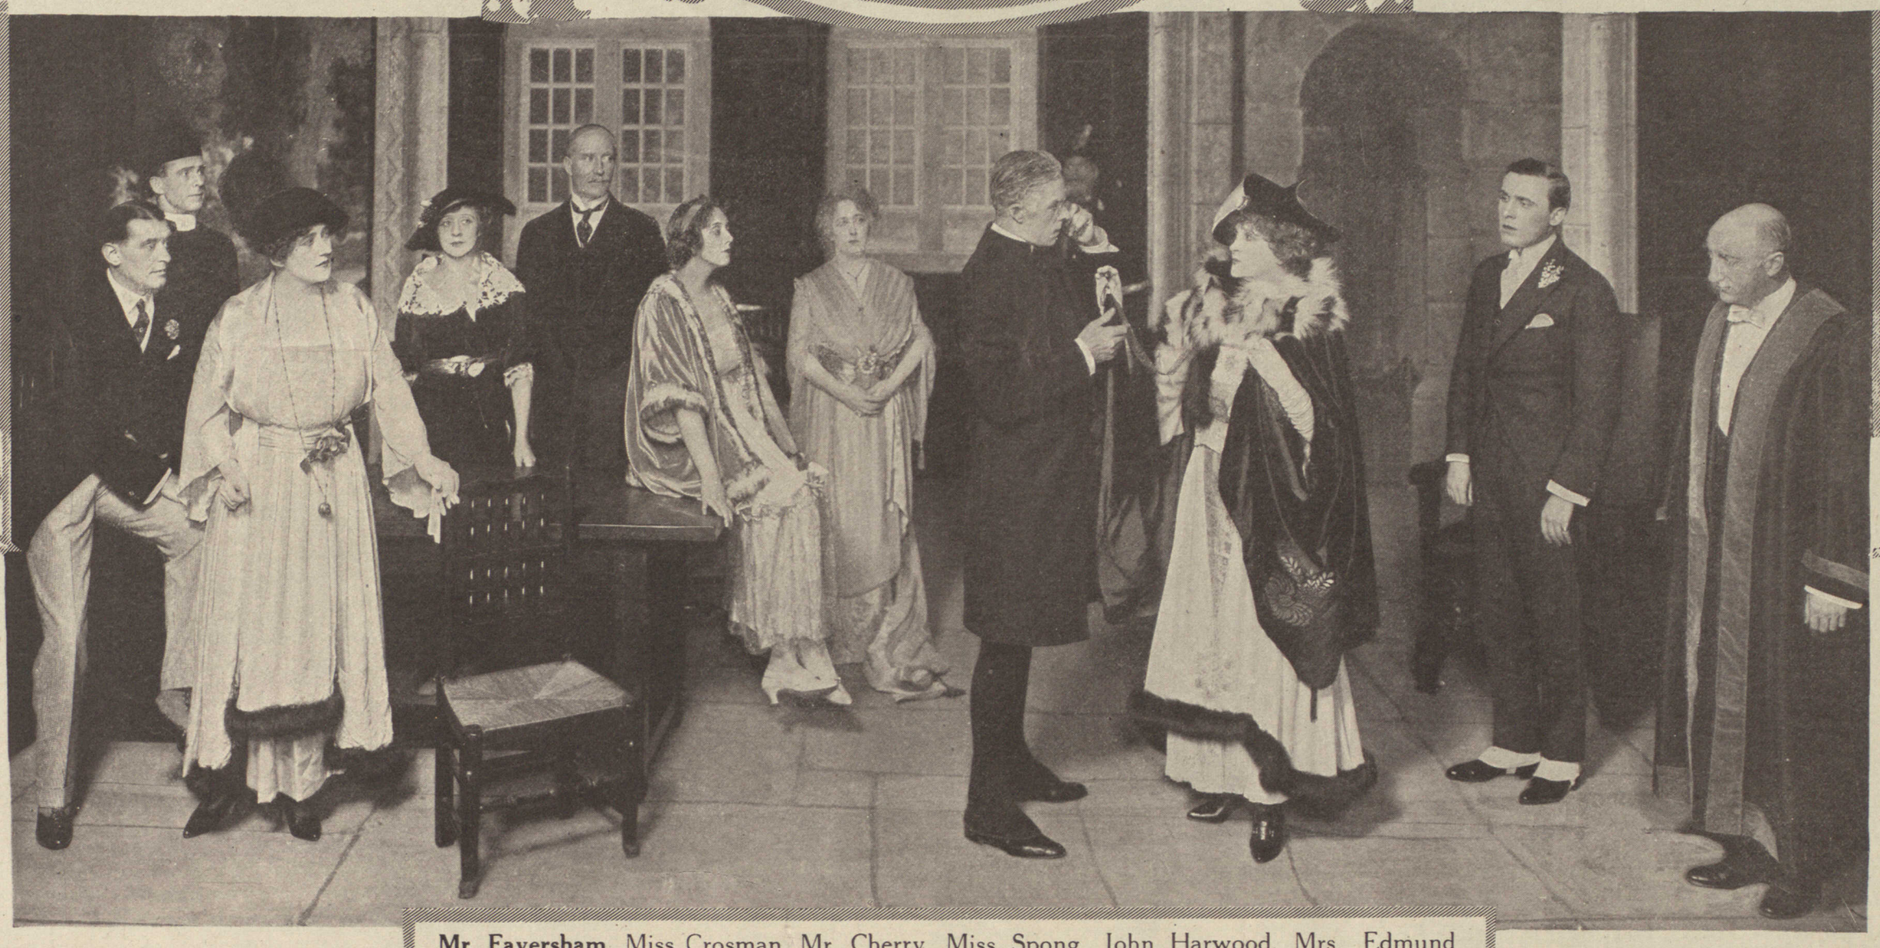
Mrs. George takes a chair to St. John Hotchkiss when he threatens to expose her husband.

Quite Unfeelingly Bernard Shaw Dulls His Blade of Satire on "Getting Married" When He Makes Sport of Marriage but Declines to Suggest a way around it.

The Bishop (William Faversham) tells Mrs. George (Henrietta Crosman) that even the devil is entitled to fair play in ethical arguments.



Mr. Faversham, Miss Crosman, Mr. Cherry, Miss Spong, John Harwood, Mrs. Edmund Gurney, Hugh Dillman, George Fitzgerald, Virginia Fox Brooks, Arleen Hackett, Herbert Belmore and Edwin Cushman in a scene from the play.

The General (Lumsden Hare) and the unmarried English lady (Hilda Spong) discuss matrimonial questions.

The Bishop admits to Mrs. George that there are discussions in which an iron poker is the best argument.

Edith Bridgenorth (Miss Brooks), about to be married, demands a word in private with the bridegroom.