SPLendid BOOKS TO STUDY

FOR

The Cultivation of the Voice.

GUIDE IN THE ART OF SINGING

BY GEO. L. OSGOOD.

To the author of this highly progressive work may be ascribed an honorable intention of compiling a system for Voice Culture that is at once high-class, practical, and based upon a true love of the Art in itself. It is modelled after the transmitted writings and traditions of the foremost Italian masters and schools, which experience has demonstrated to be the best, and further exemplified and tested by years of personal observation and study in the best music schools of Europe. Mr. Osgood has abundant qualifications for this work, is highly educated and advanced in his art, is a very successful teacher of the voice, has had ample experience in the most celebrated schools at home and abroad, and is located in all his movements by a high standard of excellence. He is in no wise satisfied with mediocrity, but has kept steadily pushing on to a success second to none.

In his "GUIDE," then, you will find the most approved system, which has been thoroughly tried and tested, thoroughly modernized, and in full accord with all the latest developments and improvements in the methods of pronunciation and respiration, as suggested by the science of laryngology.

It is divided into three parts, and successively treats of Vocal Hygiene, of Rules for Breathing, of Registers, of "Timbre," Italian pronunciation, with illustrative table and exercises for practice, and a course of Vocal Studies in Part I.

Part II consists of over 50 pages devoted to Scale Method and Scale Practice, while in Part III, we find chapters on Vocal Embellishments, a Theory of Pronunciation, Phrasing, and Respiration, technically considered; Cantabile, Recitative, and Declamation, including several very fine anatomical pictures. A few first-class arias from the operas fittingly conclude this excellent book. The subject is very fully treated, and in a manner that is pleasing and attractive. It is thoroughly practical, eminently instructive, and in every respect a very profitable method to use. Price, $4.00.

SIEBER'S ART OF SINGING.

By PROF. FERD. SIEBER.

Translated and adapted for English readers by A. W. Dohm.

A little book of less than one hundred pages, which is literally packed with information in regard to the proper training of the voice, in a very small compass, and gives better satisfaction than any larger and more elaborate works on the same subject. Price, 50 cts.

Johnson's Chorus Choir Instruction Book ($1.25), contains a very practical course of Voice Training in classes, including practice in pronouncing every vowel and consonant.

SCHOOL FOR THE VOICE.

BY WM. LUDDEN.

Mr. Ludden has been a painstaking and persistent student of the voice, in relation to its capacity and capabilities. By a very conscientious course of study under the guidance of the best American and European teachers, the value of which has been further increased by several years of successful work as a teacher, it may well be said that no one better understands the needs of American singers, or is better fitted to compile a method which should appeal directly to their present wants and necessities. As Osgood's "Guide," in a theoretic sense, follows more closely the tenets and teachings of the Italian system of voice cultivation, so Ludden's "School" may be said to be more directly applicable to the peculiar formation and attendant dangers of the voice of native singers. The localizing of the system, however, should not detract from its merit as a first-class method, for it has been very carefully constructed, and its author has been guided in his work by the experience and knowledge gained by a course of faithful study extending over a period of many years, both at home and on the Continent.

The book commences with an introductory chapter, explaining somewhat the method pursued, and the reasons therefor, which is quickly followed by progressive studies and exercises, which have, in the place of syllables, easy, smooth-flowing Italian and Latin words and phrases. In this way, 120 pages are well filled with exercises, études, and solfeggios, that are in turn succeeded by an interesting description of the vocal organs and their respective functions.

Then comes the "School for the Voice," which treats of the proper use and development of the vocal organs, including successive chapters on Tone Formation, Respiration, Tone Articulation and Portamento, Registers, Flexibility of the Voice, Phrasing, Musical Expression, Ornamentation, Time, Style, Enunciation, Italian Pronunciation, and Vocal Hygiene, concluding with general observations and suggestions to teachers. In addition to the above, we find appended a goodly number of recitative pieces from the best authors, occupying over thirty pages.

This book of 175 full-sized music pages is very popular, and has received the heartiest recommendations from teachers from all parts of the country. Price, $3.50.

VOICE AS A MUSICAL INSTRUMENT.

By CHAR. H. STANLEY DAVIS, M. D.

A very practical essay on the human voice, by a physician thoroughly acquainted with its proper use, and containing many valuable hints as to his subject training, as well as medical treatment in accordance with the principles of physiology. Price, 40 cts.

EMERSON'S VOCAL METHOD.

BY L. O. EMERSON.

In contradistinction to the two systems previously described, Emerson's "Vocal Method" may be appropriately called the "popular system," for the reason that it is of a very convenient size and shape, contains but a moderate number of pages, and embraces a course of vocal study in every way simple, practical, and progressive, with but little regard to theory or technicality.

Recognizing the field for such a work as this purports to be, Mr. Emerson was not loth to bend his energies in the right direction; and, as a result of his labor, must be gratified with the cordial reception accorded to his new method. It has received the hearty approbation of eminent teachers and professors of music, who, in speaking of it, use the warmest words of praise and commendation. The author is so well known, that it is not necessary to say that he was thoroughly capable of performing the work in hand acceptably and well, or of producing a "Method" full of merit, entirely comprehensive, and in perfect accord with the highest and most approved principles of the Art.

After stating in the Preface his motives for compiling this Method, the author proceeds to explain the several points incident to a thorough course of vocal training, including Respiration, Registers, Phrasing, Rules for Respiration and Expression giving practical exercises in Articulation, and Rules for Italian Pronunciation. Then follows a series of exercises, études, and solfeggi, illustrative of the various stages in the cultivation of the voice, supplied with easy Latin and Italian words and phrases, an comprising exercises for a correct tone-formation, études and vocal studies for the blending of the registers, for the practice of the swell, the shake or trill, portamento, and other relative subjects. The last thirty-five pages are occupied by several very beautiful compositions, chosen from the works of celebrated masters. There are 144 pages of good size every one of which is fully stocked with good material. Price, 1.50.

The three books which have been quite fully described above may be aptly termed representative systems; and in this connection it may be well to call attention to a few of the other methods that Ditson & Co. publish, and which are first-rate systems of instruction, and much in vogue in different sections of the musical world.
