road-way to the dis-tant long a-go If so, all your thoughts are maid-en who you long to call your wife, Love's sweet tale to her you man-sion, see! the flames leap high'r and high'r! Soon a crowd is there colchast-ened as in vi-sions you can see, Life, in all it's gold-en whis-per, in Love's lan-guage ev-er dear, Then you get the lit-tle lect-ed, and they stand with ba-ted breath, As the gal-lant fire-men hey-day, Life as once it used to be, Fa-ces min-gle with the prom-ise that you long so much to hear, Soon you set-tle down in brave-ly rush to what seems cer-tain death, One by one they bring down mem - 'ry of those days be - yond re - call, But one sweet face shines more com - fort, with your trea - sured lit - tle wife, All the fu - ture seems so safe - ly all the in - mates of the place, What is that at yon - der clear - ly, one fair face that's ev - er dear, Your moth - er, as you gold - en, but un - cer - tain is this life, For pov - er - ty or win - dow? See the pale and hag-gard face! "For God sake, save the used to know her, she, who'd al - ways share Ev - 'ry sick - ness comes to claim you as it's own, This then child," the fire - man hears the Nurs - es cry, And the lit - tle boy - ish trou - ble, ev - 'ry lit - tle child - ish care! is the try - ing hour that true wom an's love is shown!

child is saved, but see! the nurse, has stagg-ered back to die!
