These saints pass laws by majority votes, to force you to believe what they tell you and to do as they bid you. If you do not obey their commands, then you are fighting against God. Think of it! a man fighting against God! It seems to me that such a fight would be of very short duration. Is it not silly to talk about man fighting against God? What business has the preacher to step in to interfere in such a fight? Has God called on him for help? Is not God able to fight his own battles? Where does the preacher find out the fact that you are fighting against God?

All this talk about fighting against God is foolishness. God has no hand in this fight at all. It is a battle between the hoary past and the youthful present—between tradition and knowledge—between superstition and science—between humanity and inhumanity.

The churches see themselves robbed of their former power. The pews are occupied by fewer and less-attentive hearers. Very many of those who go to church are hypocrites who attend "divine service" through force of habit, to see their neighbors, and to be seen by them. The preacher sees the church decaying, and he is impelled, by the bread-and-butter question, to say nothing about his zeal without knowledge, to do something; and that something does not occur to him to be more faith and prayer, but the use of the strong arm of the law. "If people don't do right, why, make them do right." It is true there is nothing new about this method, but it never goes out of fashion.

It is just as good now as it was the first time it was tried. In the Iowa Sunday-law convention President Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill., said: "I would rather swear for half an hour than buy a Sunday paper for half a minute." This gentleman on one occasion was frank enough to say of himself and others like him that they "are the representatives of God." We are willing that these agents shall represent things spiritual. We will give up to them the affairs of the New Jerusalem, but when we put in our claims let them know that we "want the earth." We want all men to have equal agencies here for all the good things that the earth affords.

But why do the sky-pilots oppose the Sunday newspapers? Because when the people can have bright Sunday papers to read they will not attend church to listen to stupid sermons. The preacher wants to see the pews filled, for the more people the larger number of shekels drop into his pocket.

Why do these so-called reformers want the libraries closed on Sunday? Simply because the people prefer the useful information obtainable there to church mummeries.

Why do the crusaders want all places of amusement closed on Sunday? Because most people are employed through six days of the week in dull and wearisome toil, and when Sunday comes the desire of millions of workers is to find recreation, amusement, and sport. But they can't find it at church. They prefer the woods and streams, the mountains and lakes, picnics and all sorts of cheerful excursions that will take them away from the dull routine of daily life.

"But all these pleasure-seekers are invoking the wrath of heaven upon themselves." In reply we must again insist that these pleasure-seekers are responsible to God alone, if there be a God, and not to any self-appointed agents. Let these agents attend to their own business and leave other people free to do the same. No, that does not suit their purpose. They must rush in between the Almighty and the people to defend him. Just think of it! They are defenders of God. Who can tell what would happen to him if he were not properly defended? They want to drive the people like sheep into the church on Sunday, so as to keep God from sending earthquakes, floods, and famine to destroy the wicked Sunday-breakers. (We have no "Sabbath.")

Business is constantly growing less with these fire-insurance agents. The people are beginning to discover that these fire-insurance agents do not represent any company whatever. The agent represents himself and a small clique who gather about him. And to add to these difficulties there are quite a number of different fire-insurance companies, all of which claim to insure against sulphur and fire in another world, and each claims to be the only genuine and original company, and that all the rest should not be trusted. The poor people are greatly concerned about this fire alarm. They want to hear more about it, and if it is not convenient for the preacher at all times to gratify this yearning to know more about the great blaze, he is, however, able at all seasons of the year to keep up a great smoke.

The Sunday Rest bill pretends "to secure to the people the enjoyment of the Lord's day, commonly known as Sunday, as a day of rest, and to protect its observance as a day of religious worship." This word "protect" means not "rest" but the enforcement of its observance religiously by the strong arm of the law. It is as if they should say to us: "We will show you when we get the law on our side what we can do towards the maintenance of the Sunday laws and insuring it as a day of rest for all the people. Now we can only preach at you, and it is because we can do so little of this that we seek to have bayonets behind you to force you to conform to the will of God (as revealed through a majority vote). And then if you do not come to church, we shall have the comfort and consolation of knowing that you will not be permitted to play croquet on your own lawn or go to the opera, for there will be no opera. You will not be permitted even to have a picnic under the shade of your own trees on Sunday, as such misconduct would be Sabbath desecration."

While this is not said in so many words, it nevertheless is the spirit of the Sunday Rest bill. It is true that the professed object of the bill is to afford rest to all, but it also seeks to secure "the religious observance of the day." And instead of the new legislation only protecting "its observance as a day of religious worship" it will on the contrary enforce religious observances upon the people. Against such observances many persons will have conscientious convictions. It is not for the protection of religious liberty, the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, that these reformers are contending; for the laws of the land are based upon liberty (i. e., they are supposed to be). But it is out of its leech nature that the church cries "more, more." It is so with all churches and all governments. Power always seeks more power. Let us note some of the methods used by the reformers to gain power.

Colonel Shepard, an advocate of the Sunday Rest bill, has made himself ridiculous and contemptible by such arguments as the following which is attributed to him in a speech before the recent Dominion Evangelical Alliance:

The West Shore and Hudson River Railways, which were started for the purpose of running Sunday excursions, were driven into bankruptcy by the Lord. A new management cut off the Sunday traffic as far as possible, and now their finances are in good condition. At one time no Sunday elevated trains were run on the Sabbath, when it was arranged that a train should be asked for by a Christian minister, who, by the way, very soon was called away from earth.

What sort of a man is he who can talk such rot to the people, and what sort of people are they who will listen to it? The West Shore Railroad began a competition with the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad. They went into bankruptcy and the New York Central Railroad bought up the stock, and have run Sunday trains with passengers and freight on the Central and West Shore Roads, and are making money. And what is more, God does not throw their trains off the track. If he is angry with them and the people who desecrate Sunday (not the Sabbath) this would be a good way to give them object lessons. One good wreck every Sunday at half past ten A. M. for a month or two would be sufficient evidence to the stockholders of the New York Central Railroad that God had put his foot down against Sunday trains.

W. S. BELL.

THE PERSISTENCE OF EVIL.

To the Editors of Freethought:

While not wishing to open up a discussion in your columns on Dr. O'Neill's letter, that Mr. Harman was so indiscreet as to publish in Lucifer, I would like space to present a few thoughts on the criticisms of Carrie E. Haight. That her remarks were a trifle previous, her charges baseless, and her conclusions erroneous, is plainly apparent from her own admission that she had never read the letter mentioned. When she does read it, if she thinks there is any occasion to "engage the enemy" with such publications, or that the right of free speech and a free press is dependent on the privilege of publishing such evidences of human depravity and degradation, she will find herself at variance with many others besides the writer. I was not before aware that it was stabbing a person in the back to reject or oppose their ideas, opinions, or methods; and why a man's extreme views, or a foolish act, must be indorsed or viewed with silence, is something that assumes the shape of a puzzle to me. I hold that every public writer and speaker is a legitimate subject for comment and criticism; and to condemn some of his acts or utterances is a right and privilege just as much as the acceptance of some others. I am under no obligations to indorse all any man says or does; and when an act seems absurd or foolish, the condemnation of that act does not make me the enemy of that person.

There are many opinions which Mr. Harman and myself hold in common, but I do not believe so much in extremes as he does; and when he deals in a vile and disgusting matter, and violates the laws of the land in so doing, I think him very foolish and don't hesitate to say so. However much we may wish and desire that certain conditions might prevail, it is folly to lose sight of those that do exist. Laws, customs, and social conditions are stubborn facts that confront us on every hand; and while some might wish to destroy the first, change the second, and revolutionize the third, it is not yet done; and to violate civil laws, to ignore customs, and make war on social conditions is to invite a penalty according to the seriousness of the offense. If a law exists—whether right or wrong from a standpoint of justice and reason—it is as foolish to break it and invite inevitable punishment as it would be to seek a combat with a wild beast, for there is no mercy in either. I believe in working for reforms and the destruction of existing evils within that limit in which statute laws give freedom to act, but don't believe in going to such extremes as to invite martyrdom. Those who do believe in such extremes may excite sympathy, but not approval; and the man who tries to shoulder so many burdens of the world that he crushes himself is more sympathetic than sensible. Future generations must fight the battle of life as well as we, and though the desire in some to make a heaven of earth for those to come after us is strong, they will never see it done; and ten thousand years hence the human race will be the abode of conflicts, inharmonies, and injustice; of vice, crime, and depravity, the same as it is, and was thousands of years ago, as recorded in the Old Testament.

I do not believe in lying awake nights or in agonizing day-times because of the evils which exist in the world, for as fatalism is a universal law, everything results from necessity, and a natural cause is behind every effect. Blind impulse sways the whole human race to this day more than reason, and these natural impulses which lie back of human action are no more controllable by mortal man than the deadly cyclones that sweep without regard to obstructions over the bosom of the earth, or the mighty force that produces an earthquake. Man is but an automaton in the hands of nature, and always was, always will be, a creature of moods and impulses. Vacillating, erratic, unreason-able, and inconsistent, he is what he is from necessity, and never from choice; and viewing him in this light, perfection seems one of the greatest uncertainties in connection with his future. Hope—that pleasant and plausible liar—will doubtless continue to deceive the credulous in the future as it has in the past, but that person who sacrifices his liberty or happiness in the vain endeavor to destroy evil and exterminate vice and misery will find when he leaves this hard old world that the quantity remains about the same as when he entered it. Therefore the rule of Napoleon Bonaparte is a good one to follow: "Take advantage of conditions." Let us extract what comfort and happiness we can in the struggle for existence called life, and make the most of circumstances which fate has decreed to our lot. Let us do what we can to enlighten the world, assist the unfortunate, and relieve suffering and misery, without running to extremes or inviting martyrdom; but to avoid serious disappointment don't anticipate the advent of the millennium for some time to come, or believe that vices as old as the human family can or will be exterminated by the printing-press.

C. SEVERANCE.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER IX.

RELICS.

The House of Relics.—Slaughter of Egyptian Horses.—Description of Jacob's Ladder.—The Death of Judas.—Row in the House of Relics.

1. And in the narrow path the beast had erected a certain house called the House of Relics, and the house was built of parchment, and its foundation was of a certain soft substance called hard-lying.

2. And within the house were many curious things, and many relics of former and famous pilgrims; and of ancient and renowned guides.

3. And the name of one of the guides who showed the relics was Paternosterrow.

4. And Simon was near to the house, and Paternosterrow stood at the door with a drum, and drummed furiously, lest any of the pilgrims should go by without coming in.

5. And Simon gave the guide money, and went in.

6. And the guide showed him the wonders of the place; and while they were looking there came into the house many other pilgrims, and the man whose name was Blunt.

7. And the guide led Simon and the others towards the skeleton of an ass; and he said unto them, This is the ass of the prophet Balaam, which saw an angel.

8. And one of the pilgrims said, How wonderful it was that the ass, and not the prophet, should see the angel.

9. And Blunt answered and said, O fool, knowest thou not that the angels have ever shown themselves to asses, and to no other creature?

10. And the guide said unto the pilgrims, Heed him not; he is a scoffer. And they passed on. And the guide showed them a vessel, saying, Herein is some of the thick darkness of Egypt. And they looked in and saw nothing.

11. And Simon said, I see nothing. And the guide answered, saying, Nay, my son, how canst thou see anything, seeing the Egyptian darkness covereth all up? And they were all satisfied, and went on.

12. And the guide showed them a fowl, saying, This is one of the quails on which the Israelites fed.

13. And Simon said, 'Tis somewhat like a goose.

14. And Blunt answered, Yea, very like a goose; and there are many such hereabouts.

15. And Simon seeing a certain dishonorable utensil near by, cried out, saying, Who hath dared to bring that thing here? But the guide, smiling, bid him hold his peace, saying, Thou mistaketh it, my son; that is the cup which Rabshaketh sent to Hezekiah to drink out of; 'tis one of our greatest treasures.

16. Methinks, said Simon unto one of the pilgrims, this thing should be a grindstone. And he pointed towards a certain round stone near by. Yea, replied the other, verily I think it is.

17. Nay, said the guide, 'tis one of the hailstones which killed the Egyptian horses.

18. But, said Simon, my guide-book telleth me they were killed by a murrain.

19. Nay, said another, were they not all drowned in the Red Sea?

20. Foolish children that ye are, said the guide, they were thrice killed. Think ye that our great and mighty king is not able to kill a dead horse? And they were confounded and passed on.

21. And the guide showed them the skeleton of King Ahaziah and said, This is he who, by the unspeakable richness of our king's mercy, was two years older than the father who begat him.

22. And Simon was amazed, and opened wide his eyes, and his ears, and his mouth, and said, Nay, my brother, how could that be? Surely a father must be older than his son.

23. And the guide answered, saying, Verily, I tell thee, nothing is impossible with our king. Is not our king's son of the age of his father? And if a son can be of the age of his father, why not two years older? Hast thou not read the story in thy guide-book?

24. And Simon answered saying, Nay, if it is in my guide-book I verily believe it; and he passed on, gulping vehemently in his throat.

25. And Simon said unto the guide, What is this tied up in this napkin?

26. And the guide answered and said, Ah, my son, that is the greatest of all our wonders; 'tis the hole through which Korah, Dathan, and Abiram fell; and the napkin is never undone lest it should be lost. And the pilgrims passed on gulping.

27. And the guide showed them a certain ladder which he called the ladder of Jacob; and he said unto them, This is the ladder whereon the angels journey to and fro—even from the earth to the skies.

28. And Simon said, How might that be, seeing the ladder is no more than a league from the top to the bottom?

29. And the guide, answered, saying, Nay, my son, it is easy enough: they did but erect the ladder in the air, and when they had mounted to the top thereof they turned it the contrary end upwards, so that what was formerly the bottom was become the top; and when they had again ascended to the top they did as before. And the pilgrims were all satisfied, and more, and went on.

30. And the guide showed them divers bears called Elisha's bears, and there were betwixt two and three of them; and the guide said, These are they which chewed the naughty children. And he showed them the children within the bears, and the hair of Elisha's head also.

31. And Simon said, Verily, methought Elisha had been bald.

32. And the guide answered and said, Yea, my son, he was bald; and this is the hair which was not upon his head. And the pilgrims passed on choking.

33. And the guide took them up into a chamber, that was built upon the house, and the chamber was more newly built than the house, and in it also were relics.

34. And the guide showed them some napkins of the infant Emanuel, and the pilgrims smelled at them devoutly, and passed on.

35. And he showed him one of the fishes that had fed a thousand men.

36. And Simon said, Verily, 'tis somewhat like unto a whale. And the man Blunt answered, saying, Yea, very like a whale.

37. And the guide showed them a rope, saying, this is the rope wherewith Judas hanged himself.

38. And Simon said, Nay, my brother, he hanged not himself, but rather fell down and his bowels gushed out.

39. But another said, Nay, of a truth he hanged himself. And Simon and he disputed about the matter, and grew angry.

40. And the guide spake unto them, saying, Why wrangle ye thus, oh ye of little faith? Verily the man hanged himself, and his bowels gushed out also. See ye not the rope is of hay? And the man having hanged himself therewith on a very high tree, his ass, being an hungered, did devour the rope, and it brake, and the man fell down headlong and his bowels gushed out.

41. But, said Simon, if the tree was very high, how came the ass to reach the rope, so that it could devour it.

42. And the guide was exceedingly wroth at the question, and refused to show any more of the wonders of the place.

43. And I, Philo Aletheia, saw that there were certain portions of the chamber, and of the house also, that were not visited save and except by such as came in by the gate called Katholikos; and in these portions there were very great abundance of relics, but they were accounted as of no account by all save those that came up by the gate Katholikos.

44. And in this part of the chamber was one of the guides belonging to the gate Katholikos; and he would have shown the pilgrims the skeleton of a virgin and her children, but the guide called Paternosterrow came up, and forbade the pilgrims, and derided the virgin.

45. And the other guide grew very angry thereat, and they fell together by the ears and fisted it valiantly. And the fight grew fierce, and the pilgrims joined in the fray.

46. And in the fight the decayed virgin came woefully to grief.

47. And when the man Blunt perceived that the pilgrims and the guides were fighting together, he gat himself hastily down from the chamber, and took the napkin in which the hole was wrapped up, and he unfastened the napkin, and let out the hole.

48. And immediately there was as it were the sound of a mighty rushing wind, and the hole swallowed up everything in the house, and the chamber, and the relics, and the pilgrims and the guides, and everything whether small or great, went down quick into the pit.

49. But the hair that was not upon Elisha's head stuck in the hole's throat, and it could not by any means swallow the hair; and when the hole perceive this, it gave back what it had already swallowed.

To be Continued.

Professor Dawes's Lectures.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Mr. Geo. H. Dawes lectured here March 28 and 29 to good-sized and intelligent audiences. His first lecture, "What Will You Give Us in Place of Christianity?" was well received and highly appreciated. He told his audience in plain but eloquent language what Liberalism offered in place of cruel and superstitious dogmas. Liberalism teaches us not only to preach but to practice the golden rule, Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you—something that most Christians fail to do, and yet claim that the Christian religion is the originator of that rule, when we all know that it was taught long before their Christ's time. Confucius taught it six hundred years before Christ's time. Mr. Dawes said that Liberalism teaches us that "the world is our country, to do good our religion;" that we should all live in one common brotherhood. He closed his first lecture with an original poem, wherein he saw upon the horizon of Freethought a golden sign with the magic words "Love, Justice, and Truth" emblazoned thereon.

His second lecture was, "Has Christianity Benefited Woman?" His arguments were clear and concise. He quoted from the Bible to show woman was and is regarded by that book, which Mr. Dawes said he," "he," "he" all the way through, and in fact is nothing but an old "he-book" anyway; and the ladies present seemed to think so too. Some of the clergymen were invited to be present and criticise Mr. Dawes's lecture, but they did not come, as they knew very well they could not refute his arguments. After Mr. Dawes is out of the state they will get up in their churches and contradict every word he said, when in fact they did not hear him. They say, "We know all about it," like one man here in town whom I asked to come up and hear the lectures. He said no; he would not go to hear such lectures; did not believe in it. Said I, "Do you know what doctrine he preaches, or what the principles of Liberalism teach?" "No," said he, "and I don't want to know." He even had the assurance to say he could decide the matter without hearing both sides of the question. These are the kind of people the church wants. Stay there, brother, we don't need you. So long as you don't make use of your reasoning faculties, so long will you be the dupe and slave of superstition. I hope you will go to the New Jerusalem when you die. I don't want to go there. Oregon is good enough for me.

Mr. Dawes has done a good work here, and has opened the road for the march of Freethought; and as he does not live a great way from here he can make us an occasional visit and keep the torch of Freethought burning bright.

M. MILLER, JR.

Dayton, Or.

An Entrancing Book.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just read "A Woman's Journey Around the World Alone." I took up the book to merely look at it for a few minutes. But instead of reading only a chapter or two, I kept on for several hours before I laid the book aside to be taken up next day and read through.

It seems almost impossible for a little woman of about 100 avoirdupois to undertake and accomplish so splendidly a trip around the world alone as she has done. The dangers and vexations are without number, yet Lillian Leland overcomes them all, and the style in which she relates her experiences and observations possesses such a charm that we are fascinated with her. You turn over a leaf and wonder what trouble she is going to fall into next, and how she will get out of it. Much of the journey consists of struggles and mishaps from storms at sea, obtrusive travelers, obtusive railroad officials, hotel waiters, guides, etc. But no matter what the unpleasantness may be Lillian comes out of it triumphantly. There is, however, a bright side where we see nature in some of her attractive forms, and people of delightful character. There is a persistent and pervasive agreeableness in her writing that fascinates us.

The writer displays great will-power blended at times with wilfulness, which is deeply colored by an egoism that is never offensive, but on the contrary quite charming. As you read you are always conscious that Lillian is right here by your side. She has you in hand, and with pleasure as a guide, shows you the strange and perilous events of her travels. The ego is so vivid that one has an impression that the world is out on duty, and one of not the least of its duties is to stay out while Lillian goes around it alone and gets back to New York. She has been gratified, and I think that many people will read her book with as much pleasure as I and say, "Why did I not read it sooner?" or words to that effect.

Oakland, Cal.

W. S. BELL.

The Situation in Texas.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see that it has become customary when renewing the subscription to apprise you and your readers of the condition of the neighborhood around where the subscriber lives—of its mental and moral status. I have been a reader of your paper nearly since it started, yet never have said a word—either in praise or condemnation of the country around Sunset. However, I hope it is not yet too late. I believe I am the only subscriber to your paper in this community, although it is not for want of trying on my part, and it is not for want of Secular minds both male and female; but they are so lukewarm that it is not easy to judge by outward appearances what they are. We had Mr. J. E. Remsburg here last year speaking for us. They seemed to be well-pleased, and he caused quite a ripple in the neighborhood. He proffered his services again, but they never responded. They are afraid of what some people may say or think of them, and so for policy would rather deny themselves the privilege of thinking for themselves. Please find inclosed $2 to renew my subscription.

With success to FREETHOUGHT, Mrs. HARRIET DAVIS.
Sunset, Texas.

An Indignant Oregonian.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In justice to Mr. Beal and with surprise at the course of Mr. Reynolds, I must say I think the latter has gone a little too far when he questions Mr. Beal's honesty or that of Oregon Liberals. He hardly shows liberality, nor do those who, like him, want their money back because things didn't go just to suit them, and who for the general cause care not, unless they make "a mark" therein.

Now, let me say, if Mr. Martin, of Snohomish, wants his money back and the treasurer of the O. S. S. U. will not pay it, let him send bill of the amount and draft on me and I will pay it. Mr. Beal is a public spirited man and ever in the van of the cause of Freethought and one whose honesty is not to be questioned. I think it comes with ill grace from Mr. Reynolds to cast a slur on Mr. Beal and indirectly on all Oregon Liberals. We have no need of those Liberals who see state lines and narrow their help to the spot the horizon girls.

Portland, Or.

From Our Largest Stockholder.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Herewith please find draft so that I will not be reading the Freethought Publishing Company's paper instead of my own. I hope that every subscriber to FREETHOUGHT will do likewise. I want to record my vote to drop every one on the list that does not pay up or give a good reason for non-payment within four weeks from time of giving notice. I want to congratulate the Liberal workers of the Pacific Coast on the paper having survived the most phenomenal year of rain and tornadoes on record since the flood that landed Noah's ark on top of Ara-rat's icy mountain where the tropical bipeds and snakes crawled out to generate a second edition of new stock.

I have placed a secular circulating library in one of our book stores where any one that is not able or disposed to buy can borrow them for ten per cent. How will a similar plan work in San Francisco? Hoping for brightest skies and abundant success of our company.

Meriden, Conn.

Truly yours, N. F. GRISWOLD.

Wishes and $2.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Your complimentary notice received. Find within $2 for FREETHOUGHT. I am much obliged to Mr. Putnam for not stopping my paper when the time was out. I see that he has observed my request. We will be glad to see him up this way during the season. If he comes we will make it a point that he lose none of his rotund appearance by the venture. Do not stop my paper until you receive official notice to that effect. I believe that if I had taken FREETHOUGHT from the first I would have been alive to-day. I enjoy "Observations" immensely.

With my best regards and $2 for your future success, I am yours truly, Dayton, Wash.

R. E. PEABODY.

An Inefficacious Sacrifice.

DEAR BROTHER MACDONALD: I see by my tag that my time is up. You have been very generous. I hoped to have money ere this to send for the paper, but a late fire swept away in an hour my accumulations of years. So you will have to stop the paper for the present. Putnam will regret to learn that all those incubators and brooders, and the houses they were in, and the two hundred chicks have gone up in smoke, and I fear they didn't appease any wrath of any angry God either.

Santa Ana, Cal.

Yours truly,

D. EDSON SMITH.

Messrs. Pingree and Furgason Will Read it.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Having read the book notice in FREETHOUGHT of last Friday, I will order a couple of Putnam's "Religious Experience" for the use of the "firm" (Short & Long). I predict a big sale of the work wherever the champion is known.

Oakland, Cal.

C. H. FURGASON,

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater.
C. H. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 503 Fourth street

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Portland, Oregon

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.
Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.
Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.
Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.
The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.
Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

WEBSTER'S HANDY DICTIONARY

OF THE
ENGLISH LANGUAGE
GIVING

The Spelling, Pronunciation, and meaning of the words, Useful Tables, the Metric System, etc., and many engravings from the latest edition

of
The large Dictionary of

NOAH WEBSTER, LL.D.

Price, by mail, 30 cents. Address THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Ready for a Harp.

Sir George Bowen tells a weird story which he heard when he was governor of New Zealand: Among the loyal Maori chiefs invited to meet the Duke of Edinburgh was one of the original signers of the treaty of Waitangi, in 1840, and who had ever since been a firm friend of the English. One of the Anglican bishops afterward said to the governor: "Do you know, sir, the antecedents of that old heathen?" "No, my dear bishop," was the reply, "but I do know that he brought 500 of his clansmen into the field to fight for the queen, so I invited him to meet the queen's son."

"Well," continued the bishop, "when I first arrived in New Zealand that chief came to me and said that he wished to be baptized. I knew that he had two wives, so I told him that he must first persuade one of them to return to her family. He said he feared that would be difficult, but that he would see what could be done, and came back to me in two months. When he returned he exclaimed:

"Now, missionary, you may baptize me, for I only have one wife."

"I asked, 'What have you done with our dear sister, your first wife?'"

"He replied, smacking his lips, 'I have eaten her.'"

An attraction of the April 15 number of the Transatlantic is a collection of articles from the European press on Bismarck and the significance of his retirement. An article by Max Muller on "Thought and Breathing," which will interest the Theosophists and mystics, and a poem, "O Lovely Child," rendered from the German of Paul Heyse, are prominent among numerous other interesting features.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

By EDGAR C. BRALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeham, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm (large profits, quick sale), $1 SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 542 Broadway, N. Y.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

—BY—

LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.
404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

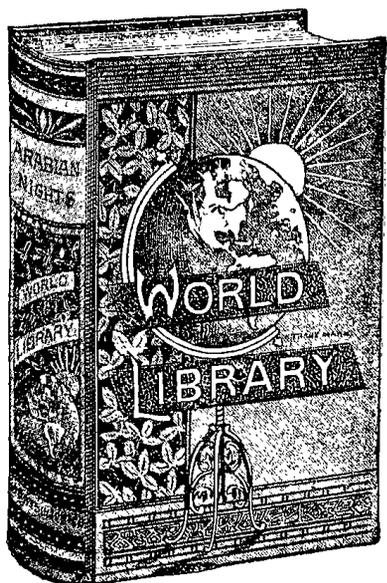

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

PREMIUMS!

Given with "Freethought" for 1890.

$2 Worth of Books and Freethought One Year, for Two Dollars.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are able to offer any TWO of the following DOLLAR BOOKS, sent postpaid, to each new yearly subscriber to "Freethought" for 1890.

The books are printed in large, clear type on good paper, illustrated, and handsomely bound. The subscription price of "FREETHOUGHT" is $2 per year.

CRAIG'S PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY. A popular dictionary of the English language, with illustrations on every page. A very attractive volume.

HOYLE'S GAMES.—Now for many years the standard authority for cards and other games. Perfectly indispensable in its way.

ADAM BEDE.—These admirable pictures of society hold a rare and abiding place in English literature.

SHE.—A remarkable story of adventure and of the supernatural, full of the most thrilling incidents. The scene is laid in the dark continent, where our explorers discover a fierce but intelligent tribe ruled by a beautiful woman called "She who must be Obeyed."

KING SOLOMON'S MINES.—A story of wild adventure in the diamond fields of Africa. Holds the attention of the reader from beginning to end.

JESS.—Haggard. An intensely dramatic story of South Africa, mentioning the Zulu war, the uprising of the Boers in the Transvaal English settlements, war and rapine, and at last an heroic sacrifice of one sister for another.

WITCH'S HEAD.—Haggard. A novel of English life, combined with adventures in Zululand, written in the author's best vein; readable from cover to cover.

ALLAN QUATERMAIN.—Haggard. A story of marvelous adventures in the heart of Africa. Our heroes having heard of a white race of great beauty living in the unknown wilds of the center of this country, resolve to and finally succeed in discovering the country, Zu-Vendis, full of amazing wealth, and ruled by beautiful women.

TENNYSON.—A very pretty edition of the works of the greatest of living poets.

NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS.—Stevenson. Collection of short stories; The Suicide Club; The Rajah's Diamond; The Pavilion on the Links, &c. Stories now very much admired.

POE'S POEMS.—The flow of all Poe's verse is remarkable for ease and gracefulness, and have placed him in the front rank of the poets of the world.

LONGFELLOW'S POEMS.—The poetry of Mr. Longfellow is marked by a very vivid imagination, great susceptibility to the impressions of natural scenery, and a ready perception of the analogies between natural objects and the feelings of the human heart.

IVANHOE.—(By Sir Walter Scott.) At first Ivanhoe proved hard reading. But when at last the portal was passed, and entrance was had into the enchanted palace of delight, which the Wizard of the North has created by his Aladdin's lamp of midnight oil, who could resist the magic of the wonder-worker?

BRYANT'S POEMS.—His poetry overflows with natural religion—with what Wordsworth called the religion of the woods. This reverential awe of the Invisible pervades all his verses, and imparts to them a sweet solemnity which must affect all thinking hearts.

WHITTIER'S POEMS.—Whittier is the most thoroughly American of all our native poets. Few poets have written so entirely for the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

BARON MUNCHHAUSEN.—The original Munchhausen was a German officer in the Russian service, who served against the Turks. He told the most extravagant stories about the campaign till his fancy completely got the better of his memory, and he believed his own extravagant fictions. The wit and humor of these tales are simply delightful.

ARABIAN NIGHTS.—The oriental fairyland, over which Queen Shehrazad reigns, is now and always will remain a classic.

WAVERLY.—Scott is just one of the poets (we may call poets all the great creators in prose and verse) of whom one never wearies just as one can lis'en to Beethoven, or watch the sunrise or the sunset day by day with new delight.

ROB ROY.—(Scott.) Everybody's favorite. Scott speaks of Rob as "The Robin Hood of Scotland, the dread of the wealthy but the friend of the poor."

COOPER'S THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS.—In his productions every American must take an honest pride; for surely no one has succeeded like Cooper in the portraiture of American character, or has given such glowing and eminently truthful pictures of American scenery.—W. H. PRESCOTT.

BENJ. FRANKLIN.—Never was the Arabian Nights read with greater zest than Franklin's Autobiography, and when I had finished it I began and read it all over again. It is this book that had the most influence upon my life.—J. L. GILDER.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.—How happy that this the most moral of romances is not only the most charming of books, but also the most instructive!—CHALMERS

ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND.—(By Lewis Carroll,) with 42 illustrations by Tenniel, 1 vol.

JANE EYRE.—An English classic. A masculine vigor and originality pervade the work. This individuality of character and description constitutes the attraction and the value of the novel. The scenes are drawn with piquancy and power.

EAST LYNNE; or THE EARL'S DAUGHTER.—Mrs. Wood's masterpiece, highly wrought, intensely interesting, a story of love, passion, and sacrifice, has been successfully dramatized.

TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA.—By Jules Verne. Perfectly enchanting story, full of the most exciting incidents, relates travels partly under the water, and around the globe, etc. The writer's wonderful imagination has, in many instances, anticipated actual scientific discoveries.

TOUR OF THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS.—Entertaining story of an English gentleman, who made a wager to make a trip around the world within eighty days. It is as exciting a story as ever was written, as our hero experienced hair-breadth escapes and had to overcome serious obstacles.

FIVE WEEKS IN A BALOON.—Of all writers for the young, Verne occupies the first rank. He is always interesting on account of his wonderful flights of imagination, which just touch the borderland of truth.

GULLIVER.—The most original and extraordinary of all Swift's productions. While courtiers and politicians recognized in the adventures of Gulliver many satirical allusions to the court and politics of England, the great mass of readers saw and felt only the wonder and fascination of the narrative.

ÆSOP.—Æsop, born in the sixth century before Christ, while traveling through Greece, recited his home truths. He did not write his fables, but they were easily remembered, became universally popular, and were passed on from mouth to mouth, and from generation to generation.

POE'S TALES.—Are admired very much for their ingenuity and powerful though morbid and gloomy painting.

VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.—By Oliver Goldsmith. One of the most delicious morsels of fictitious compositions on which the human mind was ever employed.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

EMERSON'S ESSAYS.—A handsome edition of the essays of our greatest philosopher and poet. Printed from large type on good paper.

GENERAL ISRAEL PUTNAM.—By George Canning Hill. A romantic life of one of the patriots of the Revolution, "Old Put," full of deeds of boldness and bravery.

Friends desiring to act as agents will have one of these books sent as a sample for canvassing purposes for forty cents.

Address FREETHOUGHT, 838 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 GLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

A Clerical Micawber.

Judge Ellsworth, of Oakland, granted Julia Park a divorce from her husband, the Rev. Chauncey Park, April 18. The evidence in the case is out of the usual run of ordinary divorce suits on the ground of failure to provide. The Parks were married in 1868 and have six children. In the complaint Mrs. Park alleged that her husband had failed to support her or her family since 1882. Park in an answer alleged that a rich aunt of his wife's in the East had conspired with Mrs. Park to take from him his eldest child, Ada, and they had lived apart since 1887; also that the aunt had threatened to cease financial aid unless he left his wife. At the trial Park failed to put in an appearance.

From the testimony of Mrs. Park, her son Charles and daughter Lizzie, and W. H. Chickering, Park possessed Micawberish proclivities to a degree which made him an excellent emulator of Dickens's well-known character. He was constitutionally opposed to labor of any sort, physical or mental, and idled about the house playing with the children or exhibiting his fine muscular proportions to advantage before the mirror by the hour. In perfect physical health, he disdained any occupation which would develop his already well-knit muscles, and, though very intellectual and possessing good powers of persuasion and argument, declined to put them to use, considering it more expedient to wait for something big to turn up.

When his wife suggested, since he had abandoned preaching, that he should avail himself of his natural gifts and practice law, Park declined, agreeing with Micawber that his wife and babies so absorbed his attention that mental concentration upon any other subject would be utterly impossible.

In view of the husband's great physical strength his wife urged him to go out and labor with his hands. This, of course, he refused to do. Friends of the family interested themselves and positions bringing in from $50 to $80 a month were offered Park, but all were refused as being beneath his dignity. The Rev. Mr. Park also had great schemes by which he could make barrels of money with but slight investments, but no capitalists were willing to embark with him. He would also send his children to friends with begging letters, saying that he was lying ill at home, when as a matter of fact he was lying in wait for the answer around a convenient corner.

Mrs. Park endured her husband's abuse and idiosyncrasies until her patience was exhausted and her health failing, and then applied for a divorce.

Hose Supporters Free.

Each of our lady readers can obtain a useful set of hose supporters free by complying with the offer in Dr. Scott's corset advertisement which appears in this issue. Dr. Scott promises to send a set of these hose supporters free to every reader remitting to him price for one of his Electric Corsets, adding 15c for postage. These supporters are said to be the most convenient and useful kind made and sell regularly at 50c per set. Dr. Scott's Electric Corsets are so well-known that they need no further recommendation here. Many of our lady readers have already tried them. Dr. Scott also offers inducements to good agents, and you are invited to write to him for terms. In addressing him always mention FREETHOUGHT.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Rack, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50

FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It acts forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreluctant practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

—BY—

W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.

The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO. 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.50.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science..... 1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization..... 2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin, 2 vols..... 4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species..... 2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses..... 1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals..... 2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols..... $4.00
 On Liberty..... 1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities..... 1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours..... 1.75
 The Moon..... 2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology..... $1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles..... 2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc..... 2.00
 Universal Progress..... 2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic..... 2.00
 Education..... 1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science..... 1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease..... 1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life..... 1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
 OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
 Telephone 1950.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
 For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"Bible Contradictions," 15 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address.

P. PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

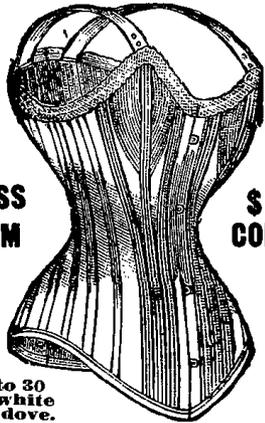

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

GIVEN AWAY WITH

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC CORSET

To introduce Dr. Scott's beautiful new Electric High Hip, Dress Form and Summer Corsets to the readers of this paper, The Pall Mall Electric Association of London and New York will, until further notice, make the following inducements: If you cannot get these Corsets at your nearest stores, remit at once for one of our High Hip Corsets at $1.25, or a Dress Form or Summer Corset at $1.50, accompanied by 15cts. for postage, mentioning this paper, and we will send you FREE with the Corset, postpaid, a Set of our Patent Gored Belt Hose Supporters retailing at 50cts., and a copy of that eminently interesting work, "The Doctor's Story," price 25cts., or a choice of Dr. Scott's 50ct. Electric Hair Curler or two of Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters instead of the Supporters. This special offer to run for limited period only, so that all feeling inclined to accept it should do so at once and not delay. Address DR. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

DRESS FORM CORSET $1.50.

DRESS FORM

$1.50 CORSET.

18 to 30 in. white and dove.

This Dress Form Corset is made with shoulder straps, detachable in sizes from 18 to 30 inches, dove and white. It is fitted with our patent combination spinal supporting back, invaluable to all Ladies. A beautiful silver-plated compass accompanies each corset, with which to test its power. Price, $1.50, and 15c. for postage, with free premium.

If you cannot obtain them at your Dry Goods or Fancy Stores, or Druggists, we will mail any Corset including either premium, postpaid on receipt of price with 15cts. for postage added. You thus obtain $2.25 value for $1.65 only. Agents Wanted. Remit by post-office money order, draft check, currency or stamps in registered letter payable to GEO. A. SCOTT, 842 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Mention this paper.

HIGH HIP CORSET, $1.25.

It is made of fine Alexandria cloth, dove and white, in size 18 to 30 inches; it is unusually strong and durable; a perfect fit; it possesses strong Electro-Magnetic curative qualities, and as such is cheap at $5.00. It has our patent combination spinal supporting back, invaluable to all ladies. Price, $1.25, with 15c. for postage, and the premium free.

THESE HOSE SUPPORTERS FREE to every Lady remitting price of either of these three new and beautiful Electric Corsets, with 15 cents extra for postage.

These Supporters are the most convenient and useful kind made and sell at 50cts.

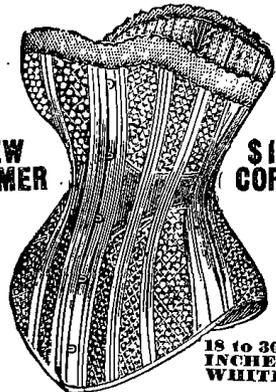

State whether Lady's or Children's is wanted, and size of waist.

Any person not desiring Hose Supporters can select Dr. SCOTT'S Electric Hair CURLER, or two of Dr. Scott's Electric PLASTERS instead, value of each, 50cts. We want a good agent in every town.

Send for terms. FREE catalogue illustrating all our goods.

SUMMER CORSET, $1.50.

NEW SUMMER

$1.50 CORSET

18 to 30 INCHES WHITE.

This is a beautiful Electric Summer Corset, made of extra strong and fine quality Nottingham net out of double thickness. It has a girde-shaped waistband which firmly secures the material preventing stretching and getting out of shape. It is made in white only, 18 to 30 inches. Has our patent spinal back invaluable to ladies. Price, $1.50, and 15c. for postage with free premium.

HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

True Nobility.

All hail the man of noble soul,
Who lives to bless his fellow man,
Who lives the evil to control,
And bring to pass what good he can.
No narrow views his mind enthrall;
No selfish aim his spirit knows;
His heart expands with love to all
The human race, both friends and foes
Though oft of "mean and humble birth,"
Stranger to wealth and pomp and show,
He shapes the destiny of Earth;
He strikes, and tyrants feel the blow.
He speaks, and words of lightning fall
That penetrate the darkest mind,
And in their flame intense, though small,
He melts the shackles from mankind.
And yet, however strange, 'tis true
That few accord the meed of praise,
While countless foes his pathway strew
With thorns where they should scatter bays.
Though hard his fate, he murmurs not—
Thus has it been since time began;
Yea, hard indeed has been the lot
Of every noble-minded man.

A few such men in every age,
Of almost every race and clime,
Have lived to brighten history's page,
Which else had been one blot of crime.
The blessings we most highly prize
Were by these men full dearly bought,
With toil and blood and sacrifice,
While scoffed, reviled, and set at nought.
And though in life they seldom drew
Applause, or won a worldly name,
Their deeds succeeding ages knew,
And crowned them with undying fame.
G. W. THURSTON.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

The Truth Seeker Annual

AND

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.

1890—(E.M. 290).

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS: Calander for 1890.
Freethought in the United States, 1889.
Faded Flowers (poem) By J. E. Remsburg
The Inauguration of the Bruuo Statue, by T. B. Wakeman.
Mostly Fools W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)
Record of the Spanish Inquisition.
Dates of the Fabrication of some Roman Catholic Dogmas.
The Boiler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a moral. Helen H. Gardener.
The Middle Ages, Illustrated.—The Priest, the Supernatural World, the Reformation, Future Terrors.
The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated.
Freethought Journals in the United States.
In Search of a Spirit, E. M. Macdonald
Why I Left the Church, Hugh O. Pentecost
115 pages, price 25 cents.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard street, San Francisco.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 18.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 3, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Leaving San Francisco at 6 P.M., while the sunset made the bay like a palace of fire, traversing the star-lighted night along the glimmering waters and through the green plains skirted with shadowy hills, at the drowsy hour of one thirty o'clock I arrive at Berenda. The hotel lantern was gleaming some quarter of a mile off, and over the sandy highway with a couple of other struggling passengers I wended to the shining goal, where I slumbered for the space of three hours, when the whistling of the five-o'clock train for Raymond compelled me to a resurrection, as if Gabriel's trump were blown. I reached the terminus in time for a good breakfast at the restaurant of Joe Poole, and the wayfarer could not drop into a more comfortable frontier establishment than this. Although the Palace Hotel did not stretch its stately dimensions, and marble walls were not apparent, nor the gilded saloon, yet the "inner man" was amply satisfied with what lay before him on the hospitable table.

My veteran friend Buckingham, and Joe Poole, a Grand Army comrade, a major under the colors of the flag, were at the station to see that I did not lose my way in this bustling new town and wander off to the quarries. Major Poole was not here last year, but I find him an old-time Infidel and genial companion, and not afraid to let the world know what he believes. Changes are going on at Raymond as elsewhere. A new hotel and other buildings are in process of erection. It looks as if there would be a big travel to the Yosemite this summer. Raymond is the point along the foothills where the change is made from rail to stage, and this makes it during the tourist season quite a lively place morning and evening, when the passengers come in and go out, and get a supper and breakfast. About forty a day is the average travel at the height of the season. On account of the vast amount of snow among the hills the opening of the line has been deferred. If one could get into the valley now he would behold a wonderful sight, for the waters are pouring abundantly over the mighty cliffs, and for the next six weeks they will increase in volume. It seems as if the snows were packed to the clouds upon the Sierras, and perhaps never before in its history has the Yosemite presented such a resplendent picture of dashing waterfalls as it will this summer when the fervent ray penetrates the icy barriers that frown about it. Now is the time to behold the valley in its most wondrous magnificence, for it is rarely that such vast columns of water sparkle along its gigantic walls and jewel it with such radiant splendors. The storm king of the past season has been preparing a gorgeous spectacle for the summer's blue eye to gaze upon.

It was a delicious, beautiful spring day at Raymond, and the quiet of the hills and the beaming sky, and golden light mingling with the green sward, and the softly moving mass of trees that stretched away to the glittering snow line made a scene of exquisite loveliness.

When evening drew its curtain, gemmed with stars, over this glowing vision the hall was filled to listen to a Freethought lecture, and I wandered from the land of dreams to work. I found quite an increase in the attendance, and this corner of the world feels the throb of progress. Major Poole made a ringing introductory address as chairman of the meeting, and this made the way smooth for the speaker of the evening. I suppose about half of those present were Christians of various sorts, but they did not look as if they would like to burn the heretic at the stake. It was a very cordial gathering, and one would wonder how so many people could gather together in so small a hamlet. But "the woods are full of them," as the saying goes, and folks seem to spring out of the very ground. After the lecture the floor was cleared, music began, and old and young joined in the festive circle. The little Furgesons, of San Francisco, gave an interlude between the sets, a clog-dance, which was neatly performed with their tiny feet. The gay hours flew rapidly, and midnight was winging itself away before the mazy motion dropped to the last note of the violin, and silence settled upon this metropolis of the woods.

Over a hundred men are at work in the quarries near the town, and seven carloads of granite are sent every day to San Francisco. Large quantities of wood are also hauled to this point, so there is quite a nucleus for business in connection with the railroad. Some time when plenty of water can be procured these hills will be vine-clad, and the now barren places will bloom and blossom like the rose. Town lots have doubled in value since I was here a year ago. Buckingham has moved to a more elevated situation, and his new environments are conducive both to health and pleasure. The wheel of progress keeps rolling. Raymond is evidently looking to the future with "prophetic soul." Freethought is by no means in the background. I met many friends at this point, both new and old, comrades who have battled with nature in all its forms, and who know what it is to think for themselves and trust in "innate inborn gumption." There is not much chance for a priest amid these sturdy workers, who have a heart for any fate.

Early on Thursday morning in the glorious sunshine I am en route to Grub Gulch with Maxwell, who holds the reins and guides the fiery steeds, that are not particularly disposed to lightning speed, since it is almost all the way up hill. However, the way is strewn with wild flowers, the wonderful wild flowers which grow upon the soil of California, with brilliant hues, blue and yellow and purple and crimson, making a carpet that would vie in splendor with the richest products of the loom of man. It is a little after noon when we arrive at Andersons and dinner is ready, and we make haste to eat. Anderson is still as prompt as ever to bear the standard and welcome the pilgrim.

Grub Gulch is a little slow just now, for one of the mills is shut down and the golden stream is not so prosperous as of yore, but the precious metal is still lurking in a thousand places and the lull is but temporary. A very good audience was present in the evening at the hotel, where mine host provided a hall for the occasion. It was beginning to grow cloudy and there were signs of rain, and those who lived afar off did not feel like tempting the weather. It did begin to pour about midnight, and the next day and the day after presented a very moist appearance, although the sun occasionally appeared and the clouds put on a magnificent array as they rolled over the dim valley. There was not much of a chance to take a look at things on account of the mistiness of the atmosphere, which dashed into rain almost at a moment's notice.

My friend Barney Williams, who is a heathen of the heathens and delights in the unfashionable cognomen, was going to pilot me to the top of Indian hill, whence the aborigines used to take a sentinel look over the vast surrounding country. The prospect from this height is exceedingly attractive. One way you look toward the everlasting hills sweeping to the ice-covered summits of the Sierras; and the other way gaze toward the far circling valley, where the gleam of river mingles with the flowery plain, till all are lost in the wide and blue horizon that glitters above the sea. But the oft-coming rain prevented the ascent, and I had to take the vision upon trust, as I do the New Jerusalem. However, if it remains there until I come again I shall certainly take a look at the splendid picture as did the ancient sons of the soil.

I have just found out why there has been so much rain this season. It all came about from Sheriff Poole's seven-parson power praying-machine. The sheriff by way of self-defense invented this machine, and on the first trial it beat five clergymen by about two inches. It was left at Grub Gulch to do service at the beginning of the season, but Anderson wound it up so tight to the praying-point for rain that it could not be let loose again, and the machine has been praying all winter, and hence the rains. What would happen if the same accident should occur to the clergymen—if they should be wound up to the praying-point and could not be released? There would be a "tidal wave" then, sure. I understand that the praying-machine finally came to a smash-up, and now fair weather is in order.

I found the Gulch just as it was a year ago in outward appearance, and the three days went pleasantly by. Saturday night it cleared off brightly and a larger number were present than on any previous evening. There are a few here to keep the fire sparkling. Capt. Smith is at the old stand, and the golden wedding-bells have pealed, and Smith, junior, is the happy man. Mrs. Ada Stubbs still has a woman's enthusiasm for Freethought. Poole had the "backache" down under the hill, one mile down and three miles up, and could not be present at the lectures, but comrade Forbes put in an appearance all the same, rain or shine, up hill or down; and McKenzie, the Branson brothers, Gus Linn, Fisher, and others, were ready to lend a hand. So the series of lectures, in spite of hard times and hail and rain, went off with sufficient eclat to warrant a return in the near future.

Early on Sunday, Laramore, of Fresno Flats, was at the gate to take me over to his place for a "morning meeting." He got up at four o'clock in order to be on time. It was a glorious morning. The sun shone splendidly, the clouds were rolling away in white masses, and the sky was a glittering sapphire. A little after nine o'clock, amidst the encircling hills, the green meadows and prancing stream and bright ranks of trees, Fresno Flats appeared to view, just as when I first saw it, a cosy village, and quite animated, although it is far away from the whistle of the locomotive. We drew up at the Mt. Raymond House, where Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ellis make the traveler as comfortable as he could be at Mt. Zion itself. It wasn't long before we were shaking hands with a host of Liberals—Joe Crane, Wade Rice, etc., names so many that I cannot enumerate them all. The Liberals here do congregate, and it is not a very easy field for the parson. They brought one here awhile ago, and built him a house to live in, but that was not sufficient. He had nothing to eat and he was obliged to go into the harvest field and earn money enough to leave the country. Superstition doesn't flourish among these mountains. I lectured on Sunday morning and evening and through the week to Thursday, and the hall was crowded every evening, and the advance of Liberalism has been decisive. It was hoped last year that when I returned some man of calibre in the church would be found for a debate, but Judge Johnson was obliged to admit, somewhat profanely, that no Christian champion could be induced to appear. It was hoped that Judge Johnson would take up the gauntlet, but he gracefully declined, and even almost signed the Demands of Liberalism although still a Methodist. He is evidently improving, and by the time he is elected coroner will be ready to sit upon the dead body of orthodoxy and administer its effects without the shedding of a tear. It was hoped that Professor Hawkins, who is on his tour of candidacy for superintendent of schools and who oftentimes declared his eagerness to meet any Infidel in debate, would be ready to fulfill his courageous intentions. But although he has been a Christian nigh on to forty years, and preached the gospel in various places, he was not "prepared." Undoubtedly if I were a hundred miles away he would be "prepared," and his war-paint would be on in all its glory. But when the Infidel is really face to face, then the war-paint disappears. I should think that one who had professed and taught the Christian religion for so long a period would be ready at any time to give a reason for the faith that is in him. Does his Bible grow dusty on the shelves at home that he is thus unable to meet the adversary?

There is quite a rushing time here with the candidates for office. The walls and fences and doors and bulletin boards are thick bestrewn with all kinds of announcements to the "unterrified Democracy." The primaries are held May 10, and a long string of candidates are making a journey over the county in search of nominations. It happened that this gathering together was announced for Fresno Flats on Wednesday evening, the 23d, at the same time and place of my lecture. However, I gave my lecture, and then the candidates took possession of the platform, Mr. I. Oakes, chairman. There were about fifteen present, and they made a pretty good presentation of themselves. I had never witnessed anything of the kind before, as "down East" they don't nominate in this sort of way. But it is a good democratic method, I should judge. It gives one a chance to blow his own horn, which otherwise would not be blown. Each candidate was allowed about ten minutes to deliver himself. The offices ran all the way from constable up to superior judge. Some of the speeches were excellent, and the programme on the whole was interesting. Lawyer Griffith took the cake for a rattling talker and story-teller, and to my mind he worked in considerable Freethought along his dashing and humorous discourse. The meeting was kept up until eleven o'clock. The audience was good-natured, and probably would like to elect all the candidates if possible. After the regular gathering there was a kind of spontaneous renewal of the picnic at the hotel, and Griffith, Oakes, Joe Crane, Professor Hyde, Judge Johnson, and Judge Edwards prolonged the "feast of reason and flow of soul." Judge Edwards claims to be a Christian, but he candidly confesses that his religion is not based on any facts. He is too sharp a lawyer not to know what evidence is. If elected judge he would have to fling Christianity out of court as having no case.

The religious ladies have established a free reading-room here, and the Liberals contributed a good part of the funds, and it was understood that they might contribute also some books and papers. But when Bell's "French Revolution" was put in, it instantaneously disappeared, and so with all like literature. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, and FREETHOUGHT are carefully excluded. The money of Liberals is acceptable, but that evidently is all which is wanted from that source.

Robert Laramore keeps his library on the move. He has on hand a large number of books, and where there was only one Liberal ten years ago there are scores now, through the influence of these traveling books and Liberal papers.

Joe Crane, like myself, once had the "hydraulic pressure" of Christianity upon him and was converted and baptized, and for many years was a "follower of the lamb." But being a miner and studying nature at first hand in the rocks and hills, he came to the conclusion that common sense and humanity were better than "mansions in the skies," and hence he has located his claim on earth and takes his chances here. There is not a better soldier in the ranks of Freethought.

Fresno Flats is a jolly place for children. There are plenty of them, and they grow fat and strong, and judging by their shining faces I don't think they dwell much in the shadow of orthodoxy. Some of them are beginning to show their natural aptitude. Little Jimmie Thurman, who goes to Sunday school, has concluded that he doesn't want to do so any longer. He can understand arithmetic and geography and mechanics, but he cannot understand what is taught in the Sunday school. He has declared his intention of becoming a "Freethoughter," and long may he live to enjoy that blessed privilege.

I have to thank Joe Crane and W. E. Laramore for a mess of the finest trout upon which I ever gazed, and which helped to give me "brain food" during the campaign.

H. M. Rice who was the first pioneer to strike gold at Canyon City, Oregon, and whom I met at Prairie City three years ago, is now at Fresno Flats. Like every old Californian, he has had a vast variety of fortune, but has always the same jovial soul. His daughter, who furnished music for my lectures at Prairie City, is now a teacher in the public schools of Portland.

Mrs. D. H. Meyers has the honor of being the first woman to sign the roll of membership of the Fresno Flats Secular Union. On the last evening of my lectures, Thursday, this organization was formed and the following are the list of signers: Robert Laramore, D. H. Meyers, I. Oakes, T. W. Westfall, A. J. Johnson, Geo. Hull, John H. Ellenbrock, Geo. Merritt, J. W. Davis, O. W. Bean, W. E. Laramore, G. W. Bagley, Joe Swanstrom, Mrs. D. H. Meyers, J. M. Ellis, Joe Crane, Samuel Noyes, J. M. Thurman. Robert Laramore was chosen president; Geo. Merritt, secretary; and S. W. Westfall, treasurer. Without doubt a membership of nearly a hundred will be made before the summer is over.

I. J. Westfall was present from Mariposa. The Westfalls make quite a family, and some of them are orthodox, S. W. Westfall's brother being a clergyman; but, take it all in all, they are Liberal by a large majority from the land of Jefferson, Old Virginia.

I was very sorry to find comrade Hoge on the sick list, but I hope the sunny air of the coming May days will cure him.

The outlook for future advancement is most promising in this mountain town. It is one of the most delightful places I have visited. The flag of liberty shall spread its radiant colors over these glittering meadows and heights.

Never was there a fairer day than Friday, and the drive from Fresno Flats to Grub Gulch and Raymond was simply exhilarating. Geo. Hull, as last year, was my companion with Sam Westfall. At Grub Gulch, my ample friend Anderson was sitting in the sunshine meditatively, and my Liberal Christian friend, Mrs. Smith, was holding the pretty baby to greet the beautiful scene; and Capt. John Wesley Smith gave greeting, but not in Methodist style; and friends Thurman, Williams, and others joined in the hospitalities of Anderson's plenteous table. In the afternoon we reached Raymond, and Major Poole, as usual, gave generous welcome. Buckingham was laid up with a lame foot, but was reading Freethought literature with all his might. His head was level although he could not walk. I found Mr. and Mrs. Stubbs on their way to Stockton where they will join the Liberals there for active service. Friday evening I reach Berenda, wander through the moonlight until 1:30 o'clock, and then speed southward to Porterville.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

* SALVATION THROUGH TAXATION.

We call attention to articles printed in another place—one a communication from Mr. E. O. Roscoe, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and the other copied from the Weekly Star. Mr. Roscoe says that under the single tax "no one who did not use land to the point of its highest productiveness" could pay the economic rent levied by the government. He does not define the highest point of productiveness, but in a crowded community that point, he will doubtless admit, would be determined by the height of the building erected upon a city lot. In agricultural districts it would be limited by the amount of fertilizer, machinery, and labor applied to the land. The man, therefore, with only sufficient capital to erect a one-story house could not live in the city, because he would not be able to pay the economic rent which the highest productive capacity of his lot would demand; for it must be remembered that under this system, according to Mr. Roscoe, land will be taxed not for what it is actually worth to the owner, but for what it would be worth to somebody else with capital enough to improve it to the point of its highest productiveness. Thus the system which freezes out the capitalistic speculator, freezes out just as effectively the non-speculator without capital.

It is the same in the country among farmers. There the man with capital to stock his ranch, if it be grazing-land, may hold it; or, if farming land, he can, by means of his capital, employ men and machinery so as to use it to the point of its highest productiveness. At present a laborer able to save something above expenses may buy a lot, and pay for it in installments, paying taxes only on the vacant lot, until he gets a house. But Mr. Roscoe asks for a system under which the laborer would be asked to pay taxes from the first on the amount his land would be worth with a seven-story building on it!

The single-tax theory, then, raises this question: Shall land be taxed for its exact value apart from improvements, and thus permit persons of small means to hold it? or, shall it be taxed at the value it would reach when used to the point of its highest productiveness, and thus be made a luxury which only the capitalist may enjoy?

In a note attached to his communication Mr. Roscoe says: "Let Jehovah alone. He can wait for his drubbing; but in the mean time our fellows are starving by thousands because they have not access to land." But what encouragement is there for them to acquire land if they must pay an economic rent on unimproved land equal to that levied on land used to the highest point of productiveness? As a matter of fact, land is about the cheapest commodity in the market; but to make it cheaper than it is now, or even perfectly free to the moneyless, would be much like giving the freedom of the ocean to a man who has no boat. By coming to California Mr. Roscoe may have his share of the earth's surface for the trouble of settling on it, and if he have the capital necessary to improve it he can make a good living. It seems to be not so much the want of access to land as access to capital that produces economic distress, for land without capital is like a human body without blood, or a steam engine without water. In this connection study the scheme of finance introduced by Senator Stanford.

Our single-tax friends should be grateful to FREETHOUGHT for bringing their central theory up for discussion, for nothing is so fatal to a good cause as the policy of silence. It is only the weak and faulty that desire to be let alone. The Christian religion, as an example, flourishes most when unquestioned. It does not ask to be examined and investigated; it demands only belief. It never appeals to reason or common sense, but only faith, which is another name for credulity. The true or scientific method, in other words the Freethought method, is exactly opposed to this, and nothing delights the Freethinker more than to be questioned. Offer to reason or argue with him, and he will meet you half way—not with personality or abuse, but with facts and logical deductions. Truth furnishes an answer to every objection against it, and takes just as much pleasure, and can afford to be as courteous, in answering the objection as in stating the original fact. The man who is sure of his ground does not grow impatient if asked to answer the same question twice. On the contrary, he is glad to find an excuse for doing so, for he knows that iteration and reiteration alone can make a lasting impression. It is like advertising—a sign hung out for one day or for one week is not sufficient for all time; it must be made a permanent fixture. People must become familiar with it, so that it will be before their eyes even when they are not looking at it.

This is true of arguments in favor of all reforms, the single-tax reform as much as any other. To say that the objector is "economically uneducated" does not remove his objection. To claim that a man is an "ass" or a "fool" if he performs certain specified acts is not necessarily convincing to a thoughtful mind. Even though a question be pronounced a "chestnut," if it is still left unanswered nothing of real value has been gained.

This paper is not committed to the advocacy of any economic reform; but when any economic reform is presented with the claim that it is of more importance than all other reforms besides, we are pleased to give its advocates opportunity to prove that it is so.

FORTHCOMING.

While weather-bound this winter Mr. S. P. Putnam has written a book which he calls "MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE." It is now being put in type, and will make a thick pamphlet.

As Mr. Putnam has passed through many of the various phases of religious thought—such as the Atheism of youth, conversion to orthodoxy, reversion to Unitarianism, and thence to philosophical Materialism—his work covers quite a large field, and cannot fail to be of interest and value to all who indulge in the luxury of thinking for themselves. The publication of the work is undertaken with the hope that it will meet with a large sale. The price is 25 cents, and we shall be glad to take as many orders as we can get in advance.

THE HARMAN CASE.

The trial of M. Harman, of Valley Falls, Kan., on a charge of mailing unlawful matter resulted in a conviction on four of the seven counts of the indictment. E. C. Walker and George Harman, indicted with M. Harman, were discharged, it being shown that the former was in the lecture field at the time the matter complained of was printed and the latter at work upon a farm, and that neither was responsible for the publication. The elder Harman was thus left alone to bear the penalty of the alleged offense, and having been convicted he moved at once for a new trial. Meanwhile the grand jury had found indictments against him for publishing the "O'Neill letter," and the government was ready to proceed with the trial of that case, but Mr. Harman requested a continuance until the next term, which was granted.

The trial, as reported by E. C. Walker in "Fair Play," was a botch from beginning to end. Mr. Harman's counsel, Overmeyer, had for good reasons withdrawn from the case, and Mr. Harman had determined to conduct his own defense. He, however, engaged one Colonel Bradley as counsel, and with his advent the degradation of the cause began. Bradley assumed the control of the whole affair, and insisted upon a method of defense wholly at variance with the right one, namely, that Moses Harman was insane! The plea of insanity left the merits of the case untouched, and the jury, knowing the plea to be false, had no recourse but to convict the defendant as a common vender of obscene literature.

If Mr. Harman's defense on the O'Neill letter is not conducted with more sense than was used in the case of the Markland letter, it will be no fault of the counsel if he is not imprisoned for life!

Mr. Walker, in his report, shows some of the true inwardness of Mr. Harman's latest offense, the publication of Dr. O'Neill's indecent recital of professional experience. It seems, says Mr. Walker, that E. W. Chamberlain, Esq., of New York, wrote to the editor of Lucifer saying that Dr. O'Neill was about to send a letter for publication, and advising Mr. Harman to print it; and that such was the latter's faith in the good judgment of his New York friend, that when O'Neill's letter came it was handed to the compositor without being read.

Of course arrest followed its publication. Messrs. Overmeyer and Clemens, who had previously acted for Harman and his co-defendants, protested, but they stood by their client until it became talked of that Mr. Chamberlain would come on from New York and take the leading place in the defense, when they withdrew. Mr. Chamberlain did not arrive in season to be present at the trial; as a consequence Mr. Harman was not defended at all, and the whole thing became a farce.

THAT BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

If any stockholder of the Freethought Publishing Company has not read the article published last week entitled "A Splendid Proposition," it is hoped that he will turn to and read it at once and send in his verdict. If we wish our enterprise to succeed we must build it up. If we wish FREETHOUGHT to do its best work we must extend its circulation. No more hopeful plan, no more practicable method, than that proposed by "A Stockholder" has been presented for consideration, and its fate will settle decisively whether we mean business or not. We fail to see any good and sufficient reason why the plan should not work, why FREETHOUGHT should not take its place among the great and influential journals of the country. True, it involves outlay, but what great good was ever accomplished without that? We know of none. FREETHOUGHT has not reached its present standing without labor and strenuous exertion, nor without the exercise of generosity and the helpful spirit. Neither was anything ever done unless there was unity of forces. We shall not be satisfied, nor should any Liberal be satisfied, until all that is possible to such a corporation as the Freethought Publishing Company is being done. And everything is in sight to those determined on success. The members of this corporation should look forward to something more than a rented office and a small, though pleasant, book depot. If the dupes of superstition can afford gorgeous temples all over the city, surely the apostles of light, if they have wisdom according to their knowledge, will be able to erect one building, one hall devoted to Freethought and universal mental liberty. It is not well to be too ambitious, or to look for too much, but when we have the means at hand and the way pointed out, we shall have only our own lack of enterprise to blame if we do not accomplish a result so far within the bounds of reason as what is here outlined.

Therefore vote on the proposition of "A Stockholder." It is not official and it is not mandatory; but it is much better—it is perfectly practicable.

SUNDAY NIGHT'S SOCIABLE.

The exercises at the Freethought Society will be varied next Sunday night, May 4, by the introduction of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, and a social dance. An admission fee of 25 cents will be taken at the door.

A LECTURE IN OAKLAND.

On Sunday, May 11, at 4 P.M., Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel will speak in Dania Hall, corner of Eighth street and Broadway, Oakland.

THE religious newspapers are asked by somebody to assist in securing the passage of a bill to exclude from the mails as second-class matter "all books or reprints of books, whether they be published complete or in parts, bound or unbound," etc. The movers of this scheme argue that "the result of the present classification is such that books, to the amount of hundreds of tons, are carried annually in the mails at one cent a pound, while other books, Bibles, miscellaneous school books, etc., cost eight cents a pound." This is certainly an unfair discrimination, but the remedy is not necessarily to raise the rates on books now mailed as second-class matter. It would be much better to put all printed matter on an equality at one cent per pound.

BENJ. R. TUCKER, the editor of "Liberty," claims to have heard from a reliable source that Edward Bellamy wrote his book "Looking Backward," "as a satire on Socialism, and submitted the completed manuscript as such to Harper & Brothers, which house, while not absolutely rejecting it, declined to take it unless the satire could be made less extravagant and given more of an air of probability." This is important if true.

"OUR religion first, our country next," was the sentiment uttered by the Rev. Father Teeling at Newburyport, Mass., in his St. Patrick's day sermon, to a congregation of Irishmen who had sworn allegiance to the Constitution of the United States!

If Pope Leo entertains the great admiration he professes to feel for American institutions, why does he not call off his priests from their continual attack on American schools?

OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. P. Healy was nominally a party to a debate with H. L. Knight before the Freethought Society last Sunday evening, and so far as shouting and occupying a given length of time in talking was concerned, he filled the contract he had undertaken. When it came to argument and veracity of statement, however, he was hardly a participator. Indeed, it might almost be said that he was not in it.

The meeting opened promptly at 8 o'clock, with Mr. Eastman in the chair on the platform, and one hundred and fifty persons in the chairs occupying the auditorium. After Miss Evangeline Ballou had sung a song and been rewarded with hearty applause, Mr. Eastman called attention to Mr. Healy, who, he said, was doubtless the only Roman Catholic member of the society. For this reason, he held, the audience should be indulgent and as respectful as circumstances would permit. The subject of Mr. Eastman's remarks was then introduced. Mr. Healy is a small-sized champion of the church, with red whiskers and a large reserve force of self-confidence. He regretted, he said, that he was obliged to apologize for coming into this debate almost unprepared. He was not a licensed defender of the faith, because the church was not in need of such "sporadic" endeavors as an unworthy son like himself would be able to make. He took the broad ground that anything not in favor of the church must of necessity be false. Mr. Healy here drew from his pocket a roll of manuscript and read from it that familiar passage in Macaulay which says that the Catholic church will still exist when some traveler from New Zealand shall stand on the crumbling towers of London bridge and sketch the ruins of St. Paul's. He also read quotations from the Rev. R. Heber Newton, and from the Rev. Dr. Stebbins, of San Francisco, eulogizing the Romish institution. He would maintain against all comers that Catholics were not only the best educated and most enlightened people on the planet, but also the most moral and law-abiding. The speaker instanced Ireland as a typical Catholic country, and Russia as a typical Protestant nation, oblivious of the fact that there are no Protestants to speak of in Russia. Mr. Healy discoursed thus for about half an hour.

Mr. Knight prefaced his reply by regretting, with Mr. Healy, that he (Mr. Knight) had not an abler opponent. He said it would not be questioned that the church had a great number of banners and burned expensive incense, but he should hold that the doctrines of the church were false and its history infamous. Its pomp and wealth were in strange contrast with the life of its alleged founder, who was a mild and inoffensive person, and whose name was not down on the assessment roll of Jerusalem for ten dollars. The church was aristocratic, while Christ and his apostles were Nationalists. The church had preserved images of Christ, but had thrown his teachings in the waste-basket. Roman Catholicism was a priestly invention. Mr. Putnam had called Spiritualism a combination of facts and inferences, but Christianity was mere inference minus all facts. Mr. Knight would admit that fewer crimes were recorded in Ireland than in England, but that was because not one-half the offenses were ever brought before the courts. In our own country, however, where Catholics compose but one-tenth of the population, they furnish two-thirds of the criminals. In opposition to the statement that Roman Catholic institutions were best, Mr. Knight drew attention to the institution known as the Republic of the United States, in which all were equal—no masters and no subjects. Some of our courts were corrupt and their sentences unjust, but compared with the trials of the Inquisition they shone in spotless white.

When Mr. Knight sat down the audience had nearly or quite forgotten that Mr. Healy existed. A discussion followed. Dr. O'Brock said what he had to say briefly and with commendable coherence. He argued that the testimony of writers in countries dominated by the Catholic church was of no value, since it was given under intimidation.

Mr. Curtis pointed out that Mr. Healy had erred in ascribing the spread of Catholicism to its moral force. It had no moral force, but pushed its way at the hilt of the sword. When within the memory of many present the pope had been obliged to leave Rome, it was not his moral power that reseated him, but the power of thirty thousand French soldiers under the bandit Louis Napoleon. Mr. Healy had also extolled the divorce laws of the Catholic church as a protection to women against being put away by her husband. Mr. Curtis declared that if these laws were protective as regards woman they were also tyrannical, since they denied her divorce from any brute whom she might have indiscreetly married.

A man named Kidney followed. He spoke dramatically for the allotted time, and then requested an extension, which being granted, he proceeded to become indecent. The Chair took upon itself a great responsibility in not calling him sharply to order.

Mr. Healy had the last inning. He would not, Mr. President, and ladies and gentlemen, attempt any display of dramatic ability, nor would he scrape the ceiling with his voice. Neither would he chew soap and fleck the habiliments of his hearers with the lather. Nevertheless, Mr. Healy shouted as loud as he could, and ceased only when a dissolving audience apprised him that he was not an attractive entertainment. He claimed that none of his critics had told the truth. The church was nearly two thousand years old, and would endure forever because God was with it.

Mr. Healy's argument to demonstrate the divinity of the Catholic church would, if applied to Barnum's circus, have proved that institution to be under the patronage of the almighty, since it is the greatest show on earth.

Next Sunday evening there will be a social and dance instead of a lecture. Tickets of admission are placed at 25 cents.

Among the many other curiosities in San Francisco besides the Greek church, the old post-office, and the new city hall, there is a Chinese printing-office on the corner of Washington and Dupont streets. They say there is no other like it in the country, which I am free to believe. I visited the establishment the other day in company with Mr. McMillan, a mining man from Fresno Flats, and Mr. Beattie, a newspaper man, formerly editor of the Colorado Kicker, published at Brighton in the said state.

The Chinaman is opposed to paying rent on vacant space, which accounts for his printing-office being crowded into a small room, with a mezzanine floor in it, upon which the pigtailed compositor performs his daily task. The lower half of the office contains a hand press that must have been old enough to vote when the "Washington" was invented. McMillan mistook it for an ore-crusher and criticised it as defective. Beattie recognized it as of Edinburgh build, manufactured for the Chinese trade, which accounted for the dragon on the top of it; but it looked like a cider-press.

There was also in the room an antique job press called the "Reliable," a sort of Chinese Gordon, as it were; and a Chinese compositor, getting up a form. He had a chase around his form and some quoins driven in where he evidently thought they ought to be; but he appeared to lack confidence in his lock-up, for he had his form on a tin galley, and trotted across the room with it elevated on the ends of his fingers as a waiter holds a tray. Then he put it on a sort of work bench and tinkered at it mysteriously.

The mezzanine or middle floor heretofore mentioned was high enough to clear the dragon on top of the old press, but so near the ceiling that a man of ordinary height could not stand upon it without getting whitewash in his hair. On this floor, as remarked, the "news" compositor plied his nefarious trade. He was surrounded by some sixty cases of type, the cases being of the kind called "cap" cases, which is to say, they were intended to hold the capitals and small capitals of the Roman alphabet. One of these cases in its natural state has ninety-eight compartments or "boxes," but the Chinaman divides every box and thus has twice that number of divisions. The cases lie flat, with the type standing on end, face upward. Sixty cases with one hundred and ninety-six boxes each, and a different character in every box, give an idea of the copiousness of the Chinese alphabet. There were other cases besides the sixty, but they contained display-type, with which the Celestial manufactures scare heads for sensational news.

This compositor wore a yellow-silk cloak with flowing sleeves, and had his blue trousers tied around his ankles with white tape. He also wore a silk skull cap having a red knot at the crown, thus in many respects differing from the ordinary member of the typographical union. He was distributing type out of a stick with a pair of nippers. He did not begin at the end of a line and throw the letters back as they had been set; he just planted himself in front of a case and stayed by it until all the characters which belonged in that particular case were distributed, when he proceeded to another. In this way he would distribute about as much type in an hour as an American printer would in five minutes.

All the Chinese types are on a square body, the ordinary news font being a trifle larger than pica, or some three-sixteenths of an inch each way. The metal is as soft as bullets. Beattie offered the pigtailed jour. two bits to let him bring away a few of the letters, but John would not be corrupted, and refused to sabby. There seem to be no fat takes on a Chinese newspaper, no poetry, no italics, and no punctuation marks.

The "Oriental News" is a four-page journal published weekly at five dollars per annum in advance; single copies, 10 cents. Its head occupies the last column of the fourth page, reading downward and looking much like the tail of a kite. We did not see the editor, but some of his copy was hanging on the hook. He writes his editorials with a small brush and a box of blacking.

A valued friend and adviser writes:

Say, George, couldn't you let up a bit on poking fun at our friends, the Spiritualists? Sixteen years of journalism may not have entitled me to tell you how to run a paper, but it taught me that the best way not to do it was to fire into my friends.

That is good advice which I have often wished somebody would give to me. Many of my best friends have an inclination to believe in a future life. Others are irrevocably committed to such a belief, and when I express doubt about it they gaze upon me with a commiserating expression of countenance. So I know they are sorry for me. A man in this office the other day told me the following story: He was at a materializing seance. A spirit form whom he recognized as a woman he had known came from the cabinet. He approached and held her hand, but being a doubting Thomas, he said, "If you are the party I take you for you have artificial teeth." Thereupon the spirit lady removed from her mouth a fine set, f store teeth and placed them in his hand. She then closed her mouth. He held the teeth firmly, and felt them gradually dematerialize until his hand was empty and they had disappeared. Upon expressing regret that he had robbed the departed of so useful an article as a set of triturators must be to a spirit, the lady again opened her mouth and reassured him with a view of the teeth in the place where nature and the dentist had designed them to be located.

When the man had ended this narrative he looked at me just a trifle scornfully, and remarked, "I suppose you don't believe that story."

I will not here record my reply, but any reader of these lines is at liberty to guess what it was. The person making the best guess will receive a chromo.

Let me introduce an extract from the Golden Gate:

One of the amusing idiosyncrasies of our so-called Freethought friends is that they are free to think; when the fact is that it is impossible for them to think outside of the crust of matter. That is, their thought is walled in with matter, and it is impossible for them to get away from their environment. Thus, in ridiculing spiritual things, or the fact of spiritual existence, and a future life, they simply delight to laud and extoll their ignorance.

Likewise the following:

WATERFORD, WASH., April 25, 1890.

Inclosed are two dollars for continuance of my subscription. I am extremely well-pleased with the paper, and with the broad liberality of the man with the pin. Though a Spiritualist, I am none the less a Liberal; and if your shoulder hits at Spiritualism will tend to bring some of its advocates down from their lofty spiritual elevations to a common sense position, from which their efforts will be directed toward improving this world in the way of knocking out, not only from themselves but from others, this infernal religion, you will get a harp in the next world at reduced rates. The Nine Demands far transcend spiritual "Fragments" for practical utility.

Yours very truly, J. BRUCE POLWARTH

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Two of San Francisco's ablest preachers have resigned their pulpits. The Rev. J. A. Cruzan retires from the Third Congregational church, and will go to Sioux Falls, N. D., for the benefit of his wife's health and a flattering salary. The Rev. Dr. Harcourt resigns from the Howard-street Methodist church because he is getting too unorthodox for his congregation. He will preach in Metropolitan Temple after September 1.—The Second Nationalist Club met at 909½ Market street last Sunday evening. The meeting was well attended. Songs by Mrs. Jameson, a recitation by Louis Hanson, a reading by Mrs. Moore, and an address by J. Harriman were features of the entertainment.—The debating society of the Young Men's Christian Association in this city, which recently decided a debate in favor of free trade, has, at its last meeting, resolved that "the United States should make paper money a legal tender to the exclusion of gold and silver."—Judge Cheney, of Los Angeles, has declared unconstitutional the city ordinance preventing the Salvation Army parading the streets with drums, horns, and tambourines. Some Salvationists arrested under the ordinance have been discharged.—It is again announced that Dr. McGlynn, the anti-poverty apostle, will visit California.—The most violent earthquake shock felt for many years visited the coast April 24.—Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, has proposed a constitutional amendment for the election of United States Senators by the people instead of the legislatures.

It required the services of a squad of policemen and the presence of the mayor to quell the fight between the rival factions of the Evangelical church at Naperville, Ill., last Sunday.—The Theosophists of the country held their fourth annual convention at Chicago April 27. A communication from Madam Blavatsky was received and a paper read by Dr. Jerome Anderson, of San Francisco.—Mayor Grant of New York appears to be tainted by the corruptions prevalent in metropolitan politics.—The Indians of the Tongue River agency in Montana are in a state of anxious expectancy over the predicted coming of Christ. No doubt Christ will come to the Indians as soon as to anybody. They get their notions of the matter from missionaries who have been among them.—President Harrison has signed the World's Fair bill locating the exposition at Chicago.

The government of Brazil will exercise a censorship over the press to prevent attacks upon public officials. There is a strong public sentiment against the decree.—Captain O'Shea, who made Parnell a co-respondent in his divorce suit, has withdrawn the charge and acknowledges that his accusation was false.—The Rev. Dr. Parker, the sensational London preacher who was once a candidate for the late Henry Ward Beecher's pulpit, has recently preached a bitter sermon against "special religious journalism," which he calls the hope of the devil. He is also using the columns of a religious weekly to attack Spurgeon, the Talmage of London.—Zola, the novelist, declares himself a Socialist and announces his belief that Socialism, beginning in Germany, will gradually spread over the whole world.

THE STAR RESUMES THE ARGUMENT.

Under the limited Single Tax, a small fraction, as compared with the present, of speculative holding of land might be possible; but so far as practiced, it would merely accelerate the enactment of said tax to the full ground-rental value—"all the traffic will bear" being turned on landlords instead of tenants, railroad monopolists instead of passengers and freighters. The owner of the seven-story building would then either have to put buildings, etc., on his vacant lots, or dispose of them to persons who would. In either case, rents would go down; and no sane person would dream of holding lots for a rise when the people as a whole take the rise as fast as it showed up. Under the Single Tax limited to present expenditures, similar results would follow in a less degree, so that speculation in land, claimed now to be the most profitable of investments, would become the least so. If, on the other hand, he could put up additional buildings on the thirty lots and rent them at a fair profit, why should he be taxed for supplying a needed accommodation, especially when the certain effect of the tax is, and must be, to discourage building and thereby increase rents?

As to the effect on the man with the one-story house, the seven-story building being next him shows that it is a business quarter, and that he could better himself in every way by taking up his residence where there would be no seven-story building to overshadow him, taking away his sunlight and air, in the manner of Crocker's high fence. And in so doing, he would not only subserve his own interest, but enable his business lot to be put to its best use for the public convenience. Moreover, the Single Tax would tend towards equalizing conditions to the extent of reducing the numbers of persons owning seven-story buildings, while enabling almost every industrious and thrifty person to own his own cottage.

The ultimate effect of the Single Tax would also be, especially in connection with other movements to which it would give body and vim, to encourage suburban and country residence, to prevent the concentration of business in a few overgrown centers, while making population artificially sparse elsewhere. Thus there would be less necessity for seven-story buildings and the hiving, the disease, the high rates of mortality, the premature aging which they usually imply. So far and so long, however, as large and lofty buildings are required, there should be no check to their production; but the condition of society which does require them is one of the many evils due to our ruinous land system, the workings of which are graphically exemplified in many of our streets below Montgomery street down to the city front. Where there should be solid, handsome, clean, convenient, three to five-story buildings, we see filthy, rotten, unsightly hovels that would be almost a disgrace to Dahomey, for each of which the landlords probably get more rent in a year than it would cost to put up a dozen such. The Single Tax would make these human hogs put up decent and suitable buildings, or root them out to give place to others who would; but our present tax system puts a premium on hoggishness by fining all land-owners who have means and enterprise to supply an urgent public need.—San Francisco Weekly Star.

SIGISMUND DANIELEWICZ'S "Beacon," which was extinguished by adversity in San Diego, has been relighted in San Francisco. It is a small sized 8-page paper, and issues from 319 Fifth street at $1 per year.

Bound volumes of FREETHOUGHT, 1889, $3.

CHRISTIAN CRUSADES.

III.

We have seen the great strides of progress in philosophy, science, and the mechanical arts during the last fifty years. No other fifty years in the history of man have been so productive of grand results. But it is to be followed by a perilous reaction.

The science of to-day has laid Christianity on the shelf and labeled it in common with Mohammedanism, Buddhism, and Brahminism. As an intellectual force it is as dead as a mummy; but as a social factor it is strong and is now preparing itself for a great conflict. If it were intellectually supreme it would not need the strong arm of the law to come to its support, for in that case it could put down all rationalists, Liberals, and skeptics through the power of its invincible truth; but as it is, these reformers prefer not to hold any discussions with the Infidel, because they are vanquished if they do. Strange, is it not, that the people who have God's truth on their side, and God himself too, should be so easily defeated by those who have no weapons or assistance except truth!

It would seem to one not born again that the Christian might depend a little more on God's help and less on the strong arm of the law. These people who want to have God's name put in the Constitution of the United States are all the time preaching about the power of God. Their preachers are constantly proclaiming the wondrous things that the Lord has done in the past to aid and support his own people. They indulge in marvelous descriptions of what, according to prophecy, he is going to do for them in the future; but when it comes right down to their own immediate needs and his own present glory they have then no confidence at all in their God, but must resort to the strong arm of the law.

The most of our common preaching consists in telling the people about the power of God. The Old Testament is made up of marvelous stories of what God did to protect, guide, and save his own peculiar people. The New Testament continues the same idea of the marvelous intervention of the Lord in human affairs. He is a kind providence that knows the number of hairs on your head. He is everywhere, and always ready to deliver his people from the hands of the wicked. But all this old-fashioned talk about a "God mighty to deliver" is changed, and now it comes to pass that instead of having a God who can deliver his people from the hands of his enemies, we have a people who are struggling to get a majority vote, so as to deliver their God from the hands of his enemies.

The men who framed the Constitution of the United States were the enemies of God: they shut him out of that document, and although he has showed no marked indications of revenge towards the people of this country, yet our Christian friends assure us that he is fearfully angry. How they come to know all about the mind and will of God is not obvious to those who are carnally minded. Still there are those of us common people who would like to have these modern Pharisees present their credentials. My prophetic soul responds, thus: "Wait until they get the majority vote of Congress, and then to your sorrow you will see the credentials."

Let any one take every text in the New Testament in which the first day of the week is mentioned, and he will see that in not one of them is the day referred to as a sacred day—a day of worship. In fact, Sunday is not once mentioned in the New Testament. There is no express or implied command to change the Sabbath as a day of religious observance to Sunday. Christ said nothing to that effect. The apostles gave no commands to that end. In fact, Christ saw that the Sabbath was an overdone institution; that it had produced formality, hypocrisy, and extortion.

He repudiated the Sabbath. "And the scribes and Pharisees watched him whether he would heal on the Sabbath day; that they might find an accusation against him." The Jews were indignant because Jesus violated the Sabbath. He told them plainly that "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath." But the Pharisees of that day would not have it so, and the Pharisees of to-day follow the example of those who put Jesus to death. Jesus says to modern Pharisees, "My kingdom is not of this world," but what do they care for that, since their kingdom is of this world? They want the strong arm of the law. Then look out. The old password will be revived, namely, "Believe or be damned." The Pharisee talks much about Jesus, but he does not think of obeying him. The Pharisee talks much about our public schools, but he never dreams of bettering the conditions of the race through general intelligence, human virtue, and liberty. Not a bit of it. Every muscle in his body aches to secure the strong arm of the law with which to put down infidelity and all sorts of ungodliness.

W. S. BELL.

EX ORIENTE LUX.

Under the caption "Give Us Light" FREETHOUGHT prints an extract from the Weekly Star explanatory of the difficulty some one has conceived as existing in the way the single tax would fall upon the owner of a seven-story building, erected upon land of the same value as that upon which an impecunious owner has put a one-story cottage. The idea is that the taxing of each of these owners to an equal amount would favor the rich man at the expense of the poor man, because the rich could easily pay the tax, while the poor would pay it with difficulty, if at all. The answer, as quoted, is that the tax would not be too high for any one to pay who uses the land, but that it would be too high to render speculative holdings of land profitable. Then you suppose that the poor cottager has $2000 of value in improvements (rather a high value for a one-story cottage) and the owner of the tenement house a value (judging by the rent you suppose) of $20,000 or so in labor products on ground worth the same amount ($3000) each. Then you presume that the fact that the wealthier of the two received a couple of thousand dollars rent for his building, would enable him to hold thirty other lots for a rise, and conclude that exempting improvements from taxation would merely give increased means for investment in land, on the ground that if the owner were taxed on the $20,000 of improvements at the same rate as he is taxed on the $3000 of land, he would have $400 less to enable him to hold land vacant, and that he would therefore be forced to drop six or seven lots in the latter case.

Your asking for light on this point is as understandable as the motive of Oliver when he asked the beadle for more; you need it. Of course this little conundrum has been answered in full, quite as many times as has the charge that Thomas Paine recanted when dying, and the fact that you have not seen its solution argues poorly for your examination into the matter contained in your exchanges, for I doubt not but that you could find it in a dozen of them (especially if the Standard is one of them). If it is not, and you would like to have it, I shall take great pleasure in forwarding it to you each week. There is seldom a month in which this question is not asked and answered in it. It recurs quite as frequently as did the question of what it was proposed to do in the case of a poor widow whose sole support was one nigger, in the time of the anti-slavery agitation.

However, let us answer this chestnut once again. The rent of the tenement would give its owner money with which to hold land for speculation, but he would not use it in that way, because the taking of economic rent by the state would remove all profit from speculation in land, for the economic rent would rise with the value of the land. No one who did not use land to the point of its highest productiveness could pay this tax. Don't you see that this freezes out the mere speculator? This is the mistake in your argument.

You do not say so, but I judge that you believe that there is a certain amount of injustice involved in charging these supposititious owners only a like amount. Why? Has the erector of the $20,000 building injured anybody by building it? If not, why should he be fined? Is not a tax on improvements virtually a fine for creating improvements? If not, why? How will it benefit our cottager to have the richer man taxed on his improvements? Does not the tax on improvements finally become a factor in increasing the rent tenants must pay, and would not this increase the disbursements which those who are still poorer than our cottager (since they have no house at all) must make for apartments? There is no injustice in not taxing improvements, but on the contrary there is absolute and unmitigated injustice and idiocy in the present plan, as you will find if you peruse carefully the documents I will send you, if you express a wish to search into the matter.

E. O. ROSCOE.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEATH OF A PROMISING BOY.

Little Darwin, the seven-year-old son of Thomas J. Truss, of Denver, died April 7 of heart failure, after a short illness. The funeral, held at the home of his stricken father and mother, was purely secular. Miss Susie Herbert, daughter of the late R. L. Herbert, a Unitarian minister, initiated the exercises, and Charles Waterman, Esq., a great friend of the boy, followed in a loving tribute. Following are Miss Herbert's words:

FRIENDS: We aim to make these services as simple and natural as possible. Had these sorrowing parents obeyed the promptings of their own feelings they would have chosen a quiet, private hour, without crowd or ceremony or words, to lay this precious form in its resting place; but they wished not to depart so far from common custom and to deny so many good friends and sympathizers this expected privilege of standing beside them in this hour of trial. The shadow of this new sorrow that strikes so deeply into these bereaved hearts to-day is felt with some degree by each of us who knew our dear little Darwin. We sincerely desire to breathe into their ears some word of consolation, but in our poor attempts we realize how appropriate the reply which Lowell places on the lips of the bereaved mother:

"Console if you will, I can bear it;
'Tis a well meant alms of breath,
But not all the preaching since Adam
Has made Death other than Death."

Little, indeed, can any one do for heart-aching and longing souls at such a time, only as the sorrowful themselves have beforehand been strengthened for it by habits of mind that are helpful. Their best consolation, which causes pain as well as relief, will be found in their memories of all the dear and lovely things in the life and character of him who is dearer and nearer than ever to-day (though he is gone) in a very important sense.

Though Death his sacred seal has set
On-bright and by-gone hours,
They we mourn are with us yet—
Are more than ever ours,
Ours in memories of love
That make our lives serene.

We know, dear, sorrowing friends, that
The blessing of his lovely life
Will fall on you like dew,
And good thoughts where his footsteps pressed.
Like blossoms grow to you.

How doth Death speak of our beloved
When it has laid them low,
When it has set its hallowing touch
On speechless lips and brow?
It clothes their every gift and grace
With radiance from the holiest place,
With light as from an angle's face:
Recalling with resistless force
And tracing to their hidden source
Deeds scarcely noticed in their course.

This little, loving, fond device,
That daily act of sacrifice,
Of which, too late, we learn the price.
Opening our weeping eyes we trace
Simple, unnoticed kindnesses,
Forgotten notes of tenderness.

Thus doth Death speak of our beloved
When it has laid them low;
Oh, let Love antedate Death's work,
And do this now.

Tho' nothing can bring back the hour
Of splendor in the grass, or glory in the flower,
We'll not be over sad, but find
Strength in what remains behind,
In the primal sympathy
Which, having been, must ever be
In the soothing thoughts that spring
Out of human suffering.

Ah, well we know the good of sorrow here,
What after freshness lurks in every storm.
What strength and beauty, pain, and struggle bring
In their forbidding form.

May we not hope that a new peace will develop out of the present pain? Not that the sorrow may be simply outlived. It would be a poor result of all our anguish and wrestling if we were nothing but our old selves at the end of it, if we could return to the same blind loves, the same self-confident blame, the same light thoughts of human suffering, the same frivolous gossip over blighted human lives, the same feeble sense of that unknown toward which we have sent forth the irrepressible cries in our loneliness. Let us rather be thankful that our sorrow lives in us as an indestructible force, only changing its form—as forces do—and passing from pain into sympathy—the one poor word which includes all our best insight and our best love.

Below is given a portion of the address by Mr. Waterman:

I knew this boy. To know him was to love him. To see that countenance was to see a gleam of the jewel of honor, sparkling in all its purity. To talk with him was to learn the integrity inherent in man. To love him was to learn the greatness of his heart; for to those who loved him he poured out the fullness of his confidence and opened up the floodgates of his affection. I knew this boy, alas, too short a time! 'Twas but yesterday I first met him; 'twas yesterday he took his flight from this environment and left us desolate. How often, upon my frequent visits to this once joyous home, has that dear boy, his countenance radiant with intelligence, his heart bubbling over with joy and happiness, climbed upon my knee and confided with all the sincerity of mature age his youthful exploits and adventures. How often with his arms about my neck has he unfolded to me the purposes of his early future, or asked assistance in the solution of problems which barred his way to early success, or to receive the sanction of approval. And yet the depths of his noble nature I could not fathom, so marked maturity of reason was there. I could not glean his meaning always, for his thought was couched in terms so well defined that it was difficult to believe he knew the language that he used; yet he always knew and understood, as well he might, for he was endowed with an intellect which grew and early developed into marked maturity.

No words of mine can lend honor to him who has gone; no expression of sympathy of ours can assuage the sorrow of his bereft family. No token of regard and affection, no matter how precious, can prove a magnet to draw the attention of this father and this mother from the loss they have sustained. If heart-beats could be coined into words; if sympathy were like a flower that bloomed upon the tongue; if friendship could be expressed by human speech, then the fullness of our sorrow might be poured out to those bereft ones; then our sympathy might commingle and its perfume permeate this heavy atmosphere of sorrow. But, alas! this load of anguish must be borne by each alone. The wine-press must be trod alone.

Our task is nearly ended, and, as we perform the last sad rites and consign this dear one to his final resting place, we linger and try to catch a parting word; but, alas! this silence remains unbroken, and we turn to plod Life's thorny path between the silence of the stars and the silence of the tomb. Darwin has slipped away—gone beyond the reach of human help or heart; beyond the realm where eye can catch the sunset's purple hue; beyond the horizon where life and death embrace; beyond the silence of our mortal sleep; beyond the hope of human call, and entered into the silence of that vast unknown which we call Death. Grand it is to live, but grander far to die with virtue, truth, and honor clothed.

At the cemetery Mr. Waterman closed the exercises by a few appropriate remarks.

The most pathetic words called out by this great misfortune are those of the bereaved father, written to Mr. S. P. Putnam. Mr. Truss is sightless, and the little boy had been his daily guide. He writes:

For the past three years he has been my constant companion. You will remember that he met you at the cars with me at the time of your last visit to our home, and his bright eye was the first to catch a glimpse of his much-loved friend. The coming of FREETHOUGHT to our fireside seemed always to remind him of Mr. Putnam, and he knew that he was one of the many who loved him. O Mr. Putnam, how I do miss him. With his little hand tightening on mine as we walked hand in hand together, the various degrees of pressure indicating to me the even and uneven surfaces over which we were to pass. With him as a companion, I was, to a large degree, unconscious of being sightless. In every walk of life he made the way easier for me, his keen observation and quick adaptation to varying conditions preventing me being the subject of embarrassments so often experienced by the sensitive sightless. So readily and nicely had we adjusted ourselves to each other that in a large sense we moved together instinctively as but one body. But my Darwin is dead. Gone from the kisses and caresses of his father and mother. We have laid his little marble form away, but beautiful memories of his young life crowd each hour and elevate our thoughts, though they bring heart-breaking grief.

DEATH OF EDWARD FAIR.

Edward Fair, the well-known Liberal, Spiritualist, and reformer, died April 30. His funeral takes place from the undertakers' parlors, 27 Fifth street, Sunday at 10 A.M. Friends are invited. The funeral address will be delivered by Moses Hull.

QUESTIONS FOR MR. PUTNAM.

The "Golden Gate" (Spiritualist) of last Saturday makes this contribution to the discussion of Spiritualism and science:

FREETHOUGHT of April 19 has an article entitled "Spiritualism not Science," in which the author leaves us in some doubt as to his real meaning. He says, for instance, that "to admit the facts of Spiritualism is not to admit Spiritualism itself. . . . Spiritualism as I define it includes two things, facts and inferences. . . . I don't deny any facts, but I do deny an inference."

It would seem from this statement that FREETHOUGHT accepts our facts. That is something of a concession, surely. In denying the inferences from these facts it behooves it to step cautiously, lest it trip itself and become entangled in the meshes of its own logic.

One of our facts that FREETHOUGHT will not presume to deny is that of independent writing. An intelligence, possessing knowledge independent of the medium, and often also of the investigator, purports to be that of a once mortal person. It gives names, dates, fac simile of hand writing, and incidents confirming its claims. What is the inference? What can it be other than what it claims to be, or something with a separate but visible individuality and personality—a real entity possessing all the dimensions of space that belong to the mortal, with perhaps other qualities unknown to the mortal?

If FREETHOUGHT should receive a letter by mail, purporting to come from some friend in a distant city, containing the same evidence of genuineness, would not the inference be conclusive that the letter came from his friend? So also of a telegraphic message: with less evidence of genuineness, would FREETHOUGHT not know positively that if not from his friend, it was from some intelligent being at the other end of the line?

Now here is a sample of our facts, and the irresistible inference. Can our Materialistic neighbor escape from it?

Let us take another well-attested "fact." Lurancy Vennum, a young girl of twelve years, is an invalid subject to fits, and thought to be insane. Suddenly her identity changes, and she claims to be Mary Roff, a young lady who passed to the other life twelve years before, or about the time of Lurancy's birth. She no longer knows her parents, the Vennums, but insists upon going to the home of the Roffs, where she was taken. She recognized Mary's old friends and acquaintances, all of whom were unknown to Lurancy. She is a dutiful daughter to the Roffs, and assists in the domestic duties of the household for a period of three months, until Lurancy's body was fully restored to health. Mary then informed her parents, the Roffs, that her time had come to take her departure, and to deliver the body over to the rightful owner. She bade the Roffs an affectionate farewell, and, as suddenly as at first, became Lurancy Vennum, fully cured of her infirmity. These are the condensed facts of a well-known and thoroughly-verified case, as contained in a little work known as "The Watska Wonder." Now what is the inference? Simply that Mary Roff's spirit had temporarily taken possession of Lurancy's body for the purpose of restoring her to health.

From ten thousand facts, similar in character, occurring all over the world, for a period of forty years, and indeed occurring more or less frequently all along the line of human history, what inference would a wise man naturally draw? What claim to wisdom can he possess who persists in denying the only logical inference that can be drawn from such facts?

In denying the inference, our neighbor, to be reasonably consistent, should deny the facts also.

THOUGHT-TRANSFERENCE.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., relates that on April 21 the most remarkable of mind-reading exploits, known as the wire test, was given by J. Randall Brown in the presence of a large party of congressmen and others.

An insulated copper wire was used. One end of it was held by Brown across his forehead. The other end was taken possession of by a gentleman selected from the party, and a stranger to Brown. At a signal this gentleman placed the end of the wire upon his forehead. He opened his watch and looked at the number engraved upon it. Brown, at the other end of the wire, and with his eyes blindfolded, wrote the number, figure by figure, upon a blackboard.

The test was performed under such conditions as to make fraud or trickery impossible. The gentleman who opened his watch frankly admitted that he did not know what the number was until then. The figures were small. He made a mistake in one of the figures, thinking a six was a five. The mental telegraph was true to the blunder. The figures which Brown traced upon the blackboard were exactly as the gentleman though he saw them in the watch. There was absolutely no possibility of communication between the two men except by the wire. It was a clear case of mind telegraphing to mind.

Brown had been experimenting on distances. Ex-Governor James Pollock, of Pennsylvania, who died April 20, held the wire at Wilmington, Del., not long ago, while Brown at the Philadelphia end, twenty-eight miles away, successfully wrote numbers upon which Pollock fixed his mind. This wire feat of Brown's is far in advance of anything which has hitherto been performed in the way of mind-reading.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER X.

SARAH COMES UP.

The Prophecy of the Lamb.—The Heavenly Brawlers.

1. And I was caught up into the seventh heaven, and saw many great and wondrous things, and was vastly edified.
2. And the great king, even the king Jah, sat upon his throne, and near him were countless hordes of seraphim and cherubim. And the Ghost was there, and the Lamb also. And the four beasts were there, each in his stall.
3. And the king said unto the Lamb, Verily, my son, 'tis no wonder that the people below should not understand that which my servant Daniel hath said of thee, for as my soul liveth I understand it not myself.
4. And the Lamb said, I will look; so he looked a great while, and pondered.
5. And the king said, What thinkest thou?
6. And the lamb answered, Verily, my head swimmeth wofully, but I perceive not his meaning.
7. And the king said, Who waiteth? and a cherubim clapped his wings. And the king said, Bring Daniel; and they brought him.
8. And the king said, What meant thou in saying the Lamb should appear in sixty and nine weeks.
9. And Daniel said, For every day was a year to be understood. In four hundred and four score and three years, from the issuing of this command to build the temple, was the Lamb to appear.
10. But said the Lamb, Thou saidest I should be cut off after sixty and two weeks. Meant thou that I should dwell below for the space of four hundred and thirty and four years?
11. Nay, said Daniel, musingly; I meant that thou shouldst be cut off four hundred and thirty and four years after the building of the temple.
12. But, said the lamb, is it not marvelous that I should be cut off forty and nine years before I appeared? And Daniel was dumb.
13. And the king said, Who waiteth? and one of the beatific beasts bellowed blatantly. And the king said, Bring Noah; and the beast said, He is here already.
14. And the king said, Speak, Noah; thou hast knowledge of such matters; thinkest thou not that Daniel had had too much wine?
15. And Noah said, Of a verity he had meddled with his grapes.
16. And Daniel said, Of a truth I had made trial of my grapes, but, nevertheless, I wrote that which the Ghost bid me.
17. And the ghost said, Thou liest, Daniel; I bid thee say no such matter.
18. And Daniel said, What, then, was it not thou that inspired all the writers of the Guide-book.
19. And the Ghost said, Yea, I inspired them, but thou, thou dolt, thou understood me not, or else thou wert drunken, and wrote foolishly.

20. And Daniel began to whimper, and said, Am I then alone? hath none other written foolishly?

21. And the Ghost answered, None but thou, thou dolt.

22. And Daniel made answer, saying, Then it was thou that madest that mighty dreamer, John, to say, that if all the doings of the Lamb down below were written, the whole world itself would not contain the books; yet methinks not a few goodly volumes might be stored in one little mountain. And the Ghost was dumb.

23. And the Lamb said, Verily, my Ghost, thou art well caught.

24. And the Ghost answered, saying, Dost thou glorify thyself? Saidest thou not that thou shouldst be three days and three nights in the bowels of the earth? And the Lamb said, Yea.

25. And the Ghost said, Tell me, then, I beseech thee, wert thou?

26. And the Lamb began to consider, and presently he plucked a feather from Gabriel's wing, and made a pen of it, and began to make many figures.

27. And the lamb was dumb.

28. And Abraham was hard by, and he said, Truly Daniel hath done my children great wrong, for they, seeing that the events verified not his sayings, believed not in the Lamb.

29. And Daniel answered, saying, Who are thy children? For thou tookest such abundant care of thy wife that I doubt if Isaac be akin to thee.

30. And Sarah heard, and made plowshares of her fingers, and plowed deep furrows in Daniel's face. And there was a mighty uproar, and a tumult.

31. And the king said, Where is Samson? and Samson said, Here am I.

32. And the king said, Rid me of these brawlers. And Samson took Sarah by her feet, and made a cudgel of her, and laid about him therewith, and the brawlers fled.

33. And the king said, Come in, Samson, and take a drink.

To be Continued.

The Junior Editor Impervious to the Subjective.

DEAR FREETHOUGHT: Have been much interested in your notable journal, with its clear as truly versatile methods and general management, though we sometimes laugh as well as scold at the really stubborn moods of its junior editor, and though Liberalism as standard ethics finds room in his large heart, the intellectual predominates, virtually closing the door to subjective spiritual science, that through supplemental range in lawful action involve as a natural adjunct, new types and collateral assets following as prime factors an intelligent foreground of attributes, distinguishing all unfolding principles from primary division to ultimate systematized conditions in language and thought, thence evincing a spiritual substratum eliminating as propelling atoms for denominate us. And as the Christian's God could not create a world from nothing, the Materialist per se finds no stable ground as delineator of human intelligence. The inherent law, the living, controlling principle in man, find origin in subjective preliminary contributory spiritual essences, while attributes as immutable particples have no beginning, nor can have an end; hence in the elucidation of all life-force through or by the science in primaries to make our logic harmonize, intelligence must rest as absolute factor, here giving denial to integral power in elementary propositions. And to secure scientific and philosophical measures, where both natural as spiritual deductions shall proclaim the eternal system of orbital intelligence in legal ratio with unfolding planetary formula, embracing as native tenets no possible proposition implying destruction of qualified substance, supported as maintained in the purely natural order, as defined spiritual attributes, scored as wisdom principles and immutable laws, ranging in the subjective as objective crystallized formation in universal states. Our hope inheres in the progress and indestructibility of individual conscious mind. Aside from this there is no fulfillment or analogy supporting integral principles or just and liberal laws. The main-sail of our boasted ship of state is without these, trailing 'mid the winds of doubt, and civilization the myth of lighting fading centuries in time.

But we must not forget that we may weary you, Please forgive extended remarks, as we wished to be brief. And with a good word for our dear friend Mrs. Krekel, who gave three grand lectures to good audiences April 5 and 6, and in true response as satisfaction of our Liberal people we rejoice in her behalf that so great mental and intellectual foreknowledge combines, aiding the world of mind to light, liberty, and universal fraternity; while all having the capacity of reason could see the delectable area she ably presented—free from morbid sensibilities in dwelling in church creeds; yea, free from all antagonism to superstitious worship. Could our world be favored with many such bearing her blossoming virtues, the cause of true reform might exceed in influence and numbers the emotional sister wardens devoted to the continuous appeals in support of Christian fables.

Yours ever for the elevation of mental freedom,
Lemoore, Cal., April 15, 1890.

SARAH G. FOX.

Sarcasm From San Jose.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It is from the fearless and out-spoken American Standard of April 19 that we have learned that Father O'Brien, of St. Peter's church, at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, be gobs, has joined hands with the heathen in a raid against the Methodist hymn book, "Climax," being used in the normal schools. He thought such hymns were out of place in a school attended by pupils of different creeds and no creeds. Yes, the old familiar hymns that have thrilled the hearts of the young and innocent Atheists, and swelled the gullets of old gudgeons for centuries must go, too, along with the holy Bible. Things are coming to a pretty pitch indeed. Between the rascally Infidels and Catholics we will not much longer be permitted in a public school-house to say "God" with our mouths open. We will have to comply with the law as commanded by our Lord and savior, and as written by his inspired scribe, Matthew: "When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. . . . But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy father which is in secret." Then who will ever know that we are Christians? Something must be done, or the time will soon come when we will cease to have the power to make other people worship God according to the dictates of our own consciences. Remove the Bible and hymn books from the public schools, and thousands will grow up in ignorance and never know whether there is a God or devil, or care whether there is or not. I expect the Infidels will all stand up while Father O'Brien pronounces the benediction. It will be just like the rascals.

L. R. TITUS.

San Jose, Cal.

Answered Both Ways.

The editor of FREETHOUGHT observes: "Mr. Pentecost says that an Anarchist is 'one who believes that money should be issued by anybody who can get his money accepted.' Of course, but what would those do for a circulating medium who could not get their money accepted? Don't the Anarchists believe in a co-operative currency, and if so, in what respect would it differ from that now in circulation?" The last question is unintelligible. Does the editor ask what the difference would be in principle, or does he mean the difference in the circulating medium? If the former, the answer is that we should have voluntary intelligent co-operation instead of forced and ignorant co-operation; if the latter, the answer is that the circulating medium would be safer and more abundant—that gold would not be the sole basis of currency, and that interest on capital, which is the result of this unnatural monopoly, would disappear.—Liberty.

S. P. Putnam's Lecture Appointments.

San Francisco debate with Moses Hull, at Metropolitan Temple, May 1 and 2; Livermore, May 6 and 7; Ft. Bragg, May 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15. Liberals of Ft. Bragg please take notice. No postponement of the dates now given.

Mrs. Krekel's Lecture Appointments.

Los Angeles, May 4; Livermore, May 6, 7; San Francisco and Oakland, May 11; Santa Cruz, May 13, 14, 15; San Jose May 18; Lodi, May 20-21; Stockton, May 25; Sacramento June 1.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

—BY—

LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Responsive Services.

The Rev. John E. Fray of the First Congregational church at Rockaway Beach, N. Y., preached his farewell sermon under great difficulties on Sunday last. His relations with many of his congregation have not been pleasant for some time, and on receiving another call he accepted it. At the conclusion of his sermon he spoke of his troubles in the church arising from the opposition of a woman to allowing his vacation, and said: "To tell the truth, the church society at that time was so far behind with me in the matter of salary that in order to keep myself and family from starving I had to go away and earn some money to buy the necessaries of life."

At this point of the speaker's remarks the shrill voice of an angry woman rang out through the sacred edifice, "You are a liar!" The startled congregation rose to its feet almost simultaneously, and necks were craned to see whence the words came. Then it was seen that Deacon John Jamison was endeavoring to suppress his wife, who stood up firmly braced against the front of their pew near the centre of the church.

Before the excitement of the first outburst fairly began to work, she again shouted, as she pointed her right hand toward the pastor: "You have preached nothing but lies since you have been here." She then went from the church, and the congregation applauded. Fray continued an account of his troubles and frequently met with outbursts in different parts of the church. Such epithets as "You lie," "It's false," and "You know it's not true" were hurled at him. He continued, however, to recite the many troubles which had beset him during his pastorate. A hymn was sung, the pastor gave the benediction, and the congregation was dismissed.

A Large Order.

The largest order for printing ever given in the world was a requisition made upon the Public Printer, at Washington, by the Census Bureau in February last for 20,000,000 enumeration blanks, and it has been filled. The paper required to print these blanks amounted to 11,458 reams of 480 sheets to the ream, and its total weight was over 229 tons.

The government printing-office, which is the largest institution of its kind in the world and the only one in which this order could have been filled, began work on the job on March 3, and has just delivered the last of the sheets to the census bureau.

While this was being done the public printer also delivered 5,000,000 other blanks of various sizes and forms to the Census Bureau, and 15,000,000 miscellaneous blanks for other departments of the government, besides 2,555,642 copies of reports, documents, bills, etc., for Congress, not including the Congressional Record and 172,881 volumes of reports for other departments of the government. The twine used in tying the census blanks in bundles weighed half a ton.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting-Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39½ Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoemaker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. H. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 503 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas. F. Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Portland, Oregon

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st. Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

WEBSTER'S HANDY DICTIONARY

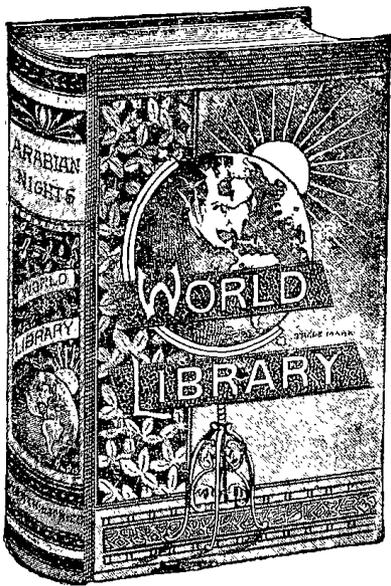

OF THE
ENGLISH LANGUAGE
GIVING

the Spelling, Pronunciation, and meaning of the words, Useful Tables, the Metric System, etc., and many engravings from the latest edition

of
The large Dictionary of

NOAH WEBSTER, LL.D.

Price, by mail, 30 cents. Address THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PREMIUMS!

Given with "Freethought" for 1890.

$2 Worth of Books and Freethought One Year, for Two Dollars.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are able to offer any TWO of the following DOLLAR BOOKS, sent postpaid, to each new yearly subscriber to "Freethought" for 1890.

The books are printed in large, clear type on good paper, illustrated, and handsomely bound. The subscription price of "FREETHOUGHT" is $2 per year.

CRAIG'S PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY.—A popular dictionary of the English language, with illustrations on every page. A very attractive volume.

HOYLE'S GAMES.—Now for many years the standard authority for cards and other games. Perfectly indispensable in its way.

ADAM BEDE.—These admirable pictures of society hold a rare and abiding place in English literature.

SHE.—A remarkable story of adventure and of the supernatural, full of the most thrilling incidents. The scene is laid in the dark continent, where our explorers discover a fierce but intelligent tribe ruled by a beautiful woman called "She who must be Obeyed."

KING SOLOMON'S MINES.—A story of wild adventure in the diamond fields of Africa. Holds the attention of the reader from beginning to end.

JESS.—Haggard. An intensely dramatic story of South Africa, mentioning the Zulu war, the uprising of the Boers in the Transvaal English settlements, war and rapine, and at last an heroic sacrifice of one sister for another.

WITCH'S HEAD.—Haggard. A novel of English life, combined with adventures in Zululand, written in the author's best vein; readable from cover to cover.

ALLAN QUATERMAIN.—Haggard. A story of marvelous adventures in the heart of Africa. Our heroes having heard of a white race of great beauty living in the unknown wilds of the center of this country, resolve to and finally succeed in discovering the country, Zu-Vendis, full of amazing wealth, and ruled by beautiful women.

TENNYSON.—A very pretty edition of the works of the greatest of living poets.

NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS.—Stevenson. Collection of short stories: The Suicide Club; The Rajah's Diamond; The Pavillion on the Links, &c. Stories now very much admired.

POE'S POEMS.—The flow of all Poe's verse is remarkable for ease and gracefulness, and have placed him in the front rank of the poets of the world.

LONGFELLOW'S POEMS.—The poetry of Mr. Longfellow is marked by a very vivid imagination, great susceptibility to the impressions of natural scenery, and a ready perception of the analogies between natural objects and the feelings of the human heart.

IVANHOE.—(By Sir. Walter Scott.) At first Ivanhoe proved hard reading. But when at last the portal was passed, and entrance was had into the enchanted palace of delight, which the Wizard of the North has created by his Aladdin's lamp of midnight oil, who could resist the magic of the wonder-worker?

BRYANT'S POEMS.—His poetry overflows with natural religion—with what Wordsworth called the religion of the woods. This reverential awe of the invisible pervades all his verses, and imparts to them a sweet solemnity which must affect all thinking hearts.

WHITTIER'S POEMS.—Whittier is the most thoroughly American of all our native poets. Few poets have written so entirely for the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

BARON MUNCHHAUSEN.—The original Munchhausen was a German officer in the Russian service, who served against the Turks. He told the most extravagant stories about the campaign till his fancy completely got the better of his memory, and he believed his own extravagant fictions. The wit and humor of these tales are simply delightful.

ARABIAN NIGHTS.—The oriental fairyland, over which Queen Shehrazad reigns, is now and always will remain a classic.

WAVERLY.—Scott is just one of the poets (we may call poets all the great creators in prose and verse) of whom one never wearies just as one can listen to Beethoven, or watch the sunrise or the sunset day by day with new delight.

ROB ROY.—(Scott.) Everybody's favorite. Scott speaks of Rob as "The Robin Hood of Scotland, the dread of the wealthy but the friend of the poor."

COOPER'S THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS.—In his productions every American must take an honest pride; for surely no one has succeeded like Cooper in the portraiture of American character, or has given such glowing and eminently truthful pictures of American scenery.—W. H. PRESCOTT.

B. N. FRANKLIN.—Never was the Arabian Nights read with greater zest than Franklin's Autobiography, and when I had finished it I began and read it all over again. It is this book that had the most influence upon my life.—J. L. GILDER.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.—How happy that this the most moral of romances is not only the most charming of books, but also the most instructive!—CHALMERS

ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND.—(By Lewis Carroll,) with 42 illustrations by Tenniel, 1 vol.

JANE EYRE.—An English classic. A masculine vigor and originality pervade the work. This individuality of character and description constitutes the attraction and the value of the novel. The scenes are drawn with piquancy and power.

EAST LYNNE; or THE EARL'S DAUGHTER.—Mrs. Wood's masterpiece, highly wrought, intensely interesting, a story of love, passion, and sacrifice, has been successfully dramatized.

TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA.—By Jules Verne. Perfectly enchanting story, full of the most exciting incidents, relates travels partly under the water, and around the globe, etc. The writer's wonderful imagination has, in many instances, anticipated the scientific discoveries.

TOUR OF THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS.—Entertaining story of an English gentleman, who made a wager to make a trip around the world within eighty days. It is as exciting a story as ever was written, as our hero experienced hair-breadth escapes and had to overcome serious obstacles.

FIVE WEEKS IN A BALOON.—Of all writers for the young, Verne occupies the first rank. He is always interesting on account of his wonderful flights of imagination, which just touch the borderland of truth.

GULLIVER.—The most original and extraordinary of all Swift's productions. While courtiers and politicians recognized in the adventures of Gulliver many satirical allusions to the court and politics of England, the great mass of readers saw and felt only the wonder and fascination of the narrative.

ÆSOP.—Æsop, born in the sixth century before Christ, while traveling through Greece, recited his home truths. He did not write his fables, but they were easily remembered, became universally popular, and were passed on from mouth to mouth, and from generation to generation.

POE'S TALES.—Are admired very much for their ingenuity and powerful though morbid and gloomy painting.

VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.—By Oliver Goldsmith. One of the most delicious morsels of fictitious compositions on which the human mind was ever employed.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

EMERSON'S ESSAYS.—A handsome edition of the essays of our greatest philosopher and poet. Printed from large type on good paper.

GENERAL ISRAEL PUTNAM.—By George Canning Hill. A romantic life of one of the patriots of the Revolution, "Old Put," full of deeds of boldness and bravery.

Friends desiring to act as agents will have one of these books sent as a sample for canvassing purposes for forty cents.

Address FREETHOUGHT, 838 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.

Address, The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO. PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

Unfit for Children.

The Rev. E. W. Jenkins of Norwich, Conn., pastor of the Universalist church, has caused a breeze by publishing an open letter to the Norwich Board of Education demanding that the teachers in the public schools refrain from reading aloud any passages from the Old Testament at the opening exercises.

"For some months," says the clergyman, "a certain teacher in one of our city schools has been reading repeatedly from the Old Testament, accounts of murders, human sacrifices, torturings, of fire falling from heaven, and of human beings stoned and tortured to death. These were read to her scholars as opening exercises.

"By repeated communications I have appealed to the superintendent and to the board to limit the scripture reading to the New Testament, or to introduce a manual of scriptural selections suitable to be read to children. I can get no reply or satisfaction, having done my best since November 18, 1889."

One local paper champions Mr. Jenkins's cause and insists that the custom of reading the Old or the New Testament in public schools ought to be abolished. As a rule the local Protestant clergymen and their flocks are opposed to Jenkins's project.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10c. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

The Truth Seeker Annual

AND

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.

1890—(E.M. 290).

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS: Calender for 1890. Freethought in the United States. 1889. Faded Flowers (poem) By J. E. Remsburg. The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue, by T. B. Wakeman. Mostly Fools W. Stewart Ross (Saladin). Record of the Spanish Inquisition. Dates of the Fabrication of some Roman Catholic Dogmas. The Boler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a moral. Helen H. Gardener. The Middle Ages, Illustrated.—The Priest, the Supernatural World, the Reformation, Future Terrors. The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated. Freethought Journals in the United States. In Search of a Spirit, E. M. Macdonald. Why I Left the Church, Hugh O. Pentecos. 115 pages, price 25 cents.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Automatic Sunday-Desecration.

A curious case of alleged violation of the Sunday law has come up in New Haven, Ind. A store-keeper kept a slot machine in front of his place which passed out a cigar when a nickel was dropped in it. He allowed the machine to remain out on Sunday, and the result is that he was arrested as responsible for the automatic working of the machine in defiance of the Puritan law. The whole matter is as absurd as any conceit of Gilbert or Offenbach, and its absurdity is not lessened by the fact that the man was convicted and fined.—Chronicle.

An Easy Time of It.

"It seems to me," observed Jo Cose, "that the recording angel must have a pretty easy time of it now-a-days?"

"Why so?" asked his wife.

"Simply because if a man does anything good or bad it gets into the newspapers."

"Well, what of that?"

"Why, all the angel has to do is to go over his exchanges with a pair of shears."

Wm. W. NOBLE, Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

BY JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo. 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard street, San Francisco.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

FREETHOUGHT,

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

W. S. BELL's "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
 The Moon.....2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
 OLIVER HINCKLEY SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
 Telephone 1950.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
 For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. FROM FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"Bible Contradictions," 15 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 ka at Gold, sma l size Badge Pin.....2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Sma l Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
 Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
 PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enamelled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50

FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address;

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

—BY—

W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.

The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO. 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills 414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 19.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal. as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 10, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Porterville is a Rip Van Winkle town. It slept for nearly twenty years and then awoke, and the whole town, one of the oldest in the state, became young, and is advancing rapidly. The sound of the hammer is constantly heard and fine buildings in process of erection occupy the place of the ancient land-marks. In the space of one year the town has trebled its population and it can show improvements not excelled by any city of the same age.

It was the railroad from Fresno to this point that opened up a splendid country of which Porterville is the business center. It is seventy miles from Fresno, along the foothills. It is half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles. It has an elevation of 500 feet. The climate is delightful during the fall and winter, the thermometer seldom dropping below 26 above zero. In summer it rises to about 110, but the cool mountains are only twenty-five miles away, and here one can enjoy the soda springs, fishing, hunting, and the shady forest, while the breeze blows from the snowy heights of the Sierras.

Around Porterville extends a magnificent fruit country. Formerly the lands were held by cattle and grain men in large tracts. The Pioneer Land Company purchased about 5000 acres of the choicest lands and placed them upon the market in twenty-acre lots, at $100 per acre, and these small farms are now being cultivated. The orange and all other California fruits are grown to the greatest perfection.

Porterville is thus most favorably situated. It has fine hotels, school-houses, stores, an electric light and water system, but it does not at present run much to churches. There are several sects, but they do not thrive. The attendance on Sunday is very small. I attended two services and was kept awake enough to count the number present. About twenty in the morning, and about ten in the afternoon constituted the audiences. This is the average in a population of one thousand. It is not very encouraging for the "servants of the Lord."

I arrived from Fresno on Saturday night. The train gets in at all sorts of hours, from half past eight, the schedule time, to half past two in the morning. It was ten minutes ahead this evening, and the Liberal friends who purposed to meet me were not at the station, nor the stages either. It was an unexpected event for the train to be on time. It took everyone by surprise. However, the first man I struck was Judge Witt, a Liberal, and we wended our way to the hotel afoot. Half way I was astonished to be overtaken by Emil Goepper, who I thought was in Santa Ana, but it seems he has pitched his tent in this country, and was on hand as usual to keep the colors flying. The belated bus soon crossed our path, and being seated therein, I was borne to the Central Hotel, whose genial proprietor is C. A. Rose. Another surprise was in store for me at the residence of Judge Redd. Mrs. Florence Porter, who was one of the staunch supporters of Freethought at Santa Ana, I now discovered, was Mrs. Emil Goepper. So the wedding bells have rung, and may the music and the flowers grace the blended pathway. By this time the Liberal friends who missed the train were at hand: Grey Oliver, R. W. Riggs, Dr. W. A. Witlock, R. A. Maddox, and others, and the cordial welcome assured me that at this frontier post, where the Secular Pilgrim ventured for the first time, Freethought had a generous support, and experience has justified my first impression. There is a splendid element of Liberalism in Porterville, which by process of evolution, as time rolls on, will be a great influence. There is much indifference, as in other places, and the philosophy and purpose of the movement are not thoroughly appreciated in the community. So far the churches have a slight hold, and the tendency is to a free and broad spirit as in the generality of California cities.

My subject Sunday evening was "Is Christianity a Failure?" In order to satisfy myself with latest proof of its desuetude I went to church in the morning and afternoon. These were the only religious services in the place, and less than twenty were present. This, at least, shows that as a living power Christianity is a failure. With the sensationalism of a Sam Jones, or with the new and attractive features which civilization affords, there might be crowds gathered to its services, but when the "gospel" has to depend upon what it is simply in itself, scarcely one out of a hundred of the people have interest enough to attend church. The sermons I heard were of the ordinary calibre. It was the old, old story, and I seemed to drift backward into the solemnologies of my childhood. The march of civilization was lost in vague declamations. I suppose the preachers knew that the Infidel was present, for they gave a few gentle "digs" at unbelief. On the whole, however, there was but little attempt at demolition. It was exhortation.

A very fine audience was at the lecture in the evening, although the churches, as usual, held an opposition meeting. Dr. Edward Thompson gave a discourse on the Sunday law. He was the same gentleman that was sought for at Santa Ana but could not be found. It was hoped that he might be "corraled" for a discussion this time, but he slipped off by the early train, and there was no opportunity to make him face the music. An endeavor has been made to get some valiant Christian to take the platform with me and help to give both sides a chance, but the champion has not put in an appearance. Absence, sickness, and various other excuses were rendered.

Sunday afternoon Dr. Whitlock takes me in his carriage about the neighborhood, where the roses do bloom most gorgeously. The far, bright mountains are shining in wintry splendor. The thickly timbered foothills stretch away, and the level country spreads in picturesque beauty, dotted with gigantic oak and groves of cottonwood.

There was a fair attendance at the lectures. There was not anything like a "revival," but, evidently, the waves of agitation have been set in motion. Freethought has found a hearing and will not stop. The beginning has been made.

I have not had a more cordial welcome at any point than here, where earnest men and women are not afraid to express an honest conviction, and work for it. Under the auspices of the State Liberal Union an organization has been formed, and the following names are on the roll: Nelson V. Mowbray, B. G. Parker, Gus Routh, R. W. Riggs, Mrs. Estella Riggs, J. L. Holman, L. W. Sterrett, O. N. Peters, C. R. Mortimer, Mrs. Ella Frost, John B. Diber, J. M. Frost, M. Smith, E. Newman, Mrs. Meda Wheeler, R. A. Maddox, and Dr. W. A. Whitlock.

B. G. Parker, who came across the plains in 1853 with his wife, who could drive and take care of an ox team as well as he, was present from Tulare, where he now lives. He was formerly in the church, but for over twenty years he has been reading the Investigator and defending its principles. At his invitation I spent a few hours at his home, on my way from Porterville to Tipton. I passed through Visalia, which still retains its handsome appearance. The "motor" bore me to Tulare, which place is beginning to feel the pulse of life after a dead year or so. With Mr. W. P. Ratliff I had a delightful drive through the fine orchards and vast vineyards which are beginning to adorn this fertile land, and Mrs. Ratliff, granddaughter of Mr. Parker, also aided the Secular Pilgrim in seeing the lovely prospects of the vicinity, and when next I come I am assured that Tulare will give a field for progressive work. Mr. Parker, his grandson, C. W. Harter, and Mr. Ratliff kindly accompanied me to Tipton, where I lectured to a full house. Tipton is not a large place, but it has a good comradeship for Freethought. The following are on the roll of membership of the Union: W. O. Rutherford, Geo. T. Hanscom, S. Knight, A. Treybal, G. J. Hawkins, W. J. Janes, Jas. C. Johnson, and A. S. Cooper. I was obliged to leave for San Francisco on the midnight train, but the few hours I spent here were filled with pleasure. Rutherford and Hanscom were present at Porterville, and came home and arranged for Tipton. They have an enthusiasm for the cause which gives the cheer of hope to the pioneer line.

Mrs. W. P. Ratliff contributed a beautiful bouquet for the occasion, which is now in the office of FREETHOUGHT.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Goepper, as usual, gave the inspiration of music to our labors.

S. Knight, of Selma, who never hauls down the flag, was by good fortune present at Tipton.

Mine landlord, A. Treybal, of Tipton, is well-known as one of the "old timers" always hospitable. I anticipate a return some day to these camping-grounds where such generous aid has been given. New friends have been added to the roll. The arena broadens, and there's "a good time coming."

—SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

FORTHCOMING.

While weather-bound this winter Mr. S. P. Putnam has written a book which he calls "MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE." It is now being put in type, and will make a thick pamphlet.

As Mr. Putnam has passed through many of the various phases of religious thought—such as the Atheism of youth, conversion to orthodoxy, reversion to Unitarianism, and thence to philosophical Materialism—his work covers quite a large field, and cannot fail to be of interest and value to all who indulge in the luxury of thinking for themselves. The publication of the work is undertaken with the hope that it will meet with a large sale. The price is 25 cents, and we shall be glad to take as many orders as we can get in advance.

THE DEBATE.

The Freethinkers around town, or the Materialistic portion of them, were in a state of more or less perturbation the first part of last week in view of the approaching debate on Spiritualism between Moses Hull and S. P. Putnam. Mr. Hull came here with a reputation as the most skillful debater in the ranks of the Spiritualistic host. The lectures which he delivered before large audiences bore out the estimate made of him as an orator and logician, and he was accorded double-leaded commendation in the Spiritualistic papers. When, therefore, it was learned that Mr. Putnam had consented to debate with him before a popular audience, there were friends of the Secular Pilgrim who believed that the meeting would prove a Waterloo for the Materialist, and that during the discussion they would witness his discomfiture, defeat, demise, and funeral. There was no enthusiasm among them. Some even maintained that there was not much good in controversy anyway. Moreover, it would arouse the enmity of Spiritualists, and alienate their sympathy from the Liberal movement. Especially would it be disastrous to this paper, since every Spiritualist subscriber must at once withdraw his or her support. A few purchased tickets to the debate, but, disavowing any interest in such discussion, kept engagements elsewhere. Only one opinion found favor, namely, that Putnam would be unable to hold his own against the thrusts and parries of the expert dialectician.

But what the Materialists lacked in enthusiasm was made up by the hilarious joy of the Spiritualists, who, with the most unbounded confidence in Mr. Hull, looked forward to the complete triumph of their champion. They not only took seats for themselves, but bought them to give away, so that when the pools closed they had provided themselves with three hundred tickets against forty taken by the opposition. On the night of the opening, they got there early and took front seats.

So the debate came off, with an audience of some six hundred, half of whom were ladies. Moses and Samuel came on the stage together, and the first prophet introduced the second. Mr. Putnam called for the choosing of a moderator, and while waiting the appearance of one, Miss Evangeline Ballou calmed the nerves of the audience by singing a ballad. Mr. W. S. Bell was agreed on as chairman, and announced that the debate for the evening would consist of three speeches of twenty minutes each, Mr. Hull taking the initiative. Mr. Hull then came forward with a book and copious notes. The debate, he prefaced his remarks by saying, was not a quarrel, but a comparison of views, the question being, "Do the phenomena of Spiritualism demonstrate a continued conscious existence for mankind after the change called death?" Mr. Hull offered three propositions to the effect that the phenomena called spiritual do occur, that they cannot be explained upon any mundane hypothesis, and that they are explainable only upon the theory that they are produced by the spirits of the so-called dead. In support of the first proposition he read extended extracts from the report of a committee chosen by the London Dialectical Society to investigate psychic phenomena. The report set forth that certain persons had gathered in divers attitudes about a table, and that the piece of furniture had moved thirteen times in various directions without visible contact with any person present. The committee therefore concluded that the power which actuated the table was of extra-mundane source. Mr. Hull added that the members of the committee, previous to the experiment, were skeptics, and at its close were convinced of the existence of spirit power.

The opening speaker had not given his opponent anything very tangible to the grasp, and Mr. Putnam, when he took the floor for reply, called attention to that fact. We had here the report of a London committee on psychic phenomena favorable to the spirit hypothesis, but the report of another committee, that of the Seybert commission, formed for the same purpose in Philadelphia, reported exactly the opposite. To the statement of fact he would not take exception. He would maintain, however, that the conclusion reached by the committee of the Dialectical Society was merely an opinion, and that opinion, while worthy of respect, did not constitute knowledge or afford proof to others. Before the phenomena could be attributed to spirits, the existence of spirits must be demonstrated by evidence outside of the phenomena. He admitted that the spiritual theory might explain the phenomena satisfactorily to those who believed in spirits, but since to others the existence of spirits was unproved, the explanation was worthless to them. Mr. Putnam took the position that no one could be certain he had seen a spirit. He might see something which he called a spirit, but spirit being admitted to be invisible he could see only the material substance with which the spirit, if there were one, was clothed. Two different persons may see an object. One may pronounce it a ghost. That is merely his judgment or opinion. The other may declare it to be of human or earthly production, and the former must prove that it is not something earthly before he is justified in affirming it to be a spirit. According to the canons of logic, we are under obligation not only to exhaust known causes, but to absolutely eliminate and disprove them, before referring to the unknown.

Upon this point the discussion of the evening hinged. Mr. Hull appeared desirous of avoiding it, and any one who closely watched his method in order to discover his object could see that he was waiting for his opponent to advance some theory for the explanation of the so-called spiritual phenomena. His game, if it might be so called, was to lead Mr. Putnam into some position where he would be obliged to defend himself. Mr. Putnam on one occasion mentioned mesmerism, mind-reading, "odid" force, and thought-transferrence as powers of the human mind whose possibilities were not as yet exhausted. Mr. Hull at once grasped the allusion, treated it as affirmation, declared that his opponent had advanced these occult forces as explanations of spirit phenomena, and then proceeded to accuse the Materialist of contradicting himself, since the forces were totally different and either of them excluded all the others. It may here be said that the applause which greeted this reply on the part of Mr. Hull was not a flattering testimony to the discriminating ability of his sympathizers.

Thus the evening passed, Putnam urging continually that the spiritual theory remained to be demonstrated until all the powers of humanity were exhausted; Hull admitting the general principle in his opponent's plea, but keeping away from the issue which it raised, and waiting patiently, reading again and again from his book, until some opening should be offered for a home thrust. The opening did not come, but ten o'clock did, and the audience was dismissed.

Opinions varied as to which had the better of the debate thus far, but all agreed that not much progress had been made. Some Spiritualists found fault with Moses for not taking a wider range. The phenomena, they held, were admitted in the proposition. It was for him to trace them to their true source, the spirit world. One well-known Spiritualist lecturer, who claims no distinction as a debater, was convinced that he could have done better himself. Another thought Mr. Hull had spent too much time on immaterial issues, and not enough on the main affirmation. Some of the Materialists declared that Putnam had done nothing, and censured him for admitting the phenomena at all. As in the case of Mr. Hull, there were but few who did not entertain an ill-concealed notion that if they had been conducting the case the opponent would have been confounded and argued to a standstill. One cynical individual professing to be neutral advanced the theory that neither had any reliable information to offer on the subject, but that Putnam excelled in candor inasmuch as he had admitted his unenlightened state.

On the second evening, which was Friday, May 2, there was an increased attendance, especially of the Materialistic forces, though the Spiritualists still had a majority of about four to one, got there earlier, and occupied the front seats. Mr. Bell was exceedingly happy in his introductory remarks; Miss Ballou sang better if possible than on the previous evening; Mr. Putnam came jovially and buoyantly forward, hopefulness so illuminating his countenance that no footlights could have augmented its glow. He stated that the previous evening's exercises had been merely prefatory, and that if his opponent could be induced to argue the proposition the debate would now come off. Thus far Mr. Hull had offered nothing but the report of a commission, and that commission's opinion about the phenomena they had witnessed. He (Mr. Putnam) was not there to affirm anything; it was his duty to examine Mr. Hull's proof of a future life and to see if it was sound. He would, however, affirm that three-fourths of what passed as spiritual phenomena was fraudulent, that much of the remaining fourth was attributable to illusion, self-deception, or insanity on the part of mediums, and that the residuum was referable wholly to the known powers of the human body and mind. He thus introduced known causes and would request his opponent to show that these causes were not efficient to produce the phenomena.

Mr. Hull also was prepared for business. He had with him some exhibits and a fund of anecdote and repartee. He expressed a hope that the audience were not as forgetful as his opponent about what had been said on the previous evening, but that they would remember how he had introduced the statements of Dr. Johnson, Addison, and Horace Greeley to show that all nations and all history testify to the reappearance of the dead. For the sake of the argument he would admit that three-fourths of the phenomena were fraudulent, but he called upon his opponent to explain the residuum of genuine. Until that was done the spiritual theory must stand as the only rational explanation. Mr. Hull also advanced the familiar proposition that counterfeit phenomena prove the genuine, as a counterfeit dollar proves that a genuine exists. The fact that the genuine and the counterfeit dollar are produced by the same process, he omitted to instance, as it might have weakened the comparison. The relation of miraculous events completed Mr. Hull's argument. One of the Davenport brothers was released from jail by spirits; spirits of twelve different nationalities had written in their native languages upon a slate through the mediumship of Mr. Fred Evans; a medium had informed Mr. Hull that some money was coming to him, and shortly thereafter he received a twenty-dollar rebate on his transcontinental railroad ticket, which the company sent him to avoid a lawsuit that threatened disaster to the corporation; he had procured writing between slates in the presence of Medium Slade when neither the medium nor himself touched the pencil, the said writing being done by the disembodied spirit of one Mr. Frost, who gave his residence while in the flesh and the date of his death, which Mr. Hull verified. Mr. Hull would give Putnam one hundred dollars for the benefit of FREETHOUGHT, if Mr. Putnam would do the slate-writing under the conditions described.

Mr. Putnam returned the above bluff by saying that he would offer any medium in the country one hundred dollars to write between slates as he would fasten them together. Mr. Hull did not recur to the subject.

The debate closed with a fine burst of eloquence on the part of Mr. Hull, who urged those still in the dark with regard to the angel world to take proper steps for letting in the light. Then he shook hands with his opponent, while the multitude applauded.

So far as information has reached this office, the confidence of those who feared that the cause of Materialism would suffer has been restored. It is not claimed that Mr. Hull was defeated, but there is a general impression that he failed to make out his case, and that, to the disappointment of the Spiritualists, he left untouched the strong point made by his opponent, namely, that all known causes of phenomena are to be eliminated before unknown causes can be adduced. But Mr. Hull demonstrated his great skill as a debater. He is a perfect master of what is called "stage business." He can tell a story better than most speakers. He is acquainted with those arts of verbal legerdemain that catch an audience, and can put an opponent in a ludicrous position by an ingenious perversion of his meaning. He handles his arguments as adroitly as a professional would manipulate a deck of cards. His dexterity in handling notes, data, and exhibits is equally striking. He never stops talking, but maintains a perpetual flow of language, like the razor-strop man simultaneously illustrating and setting forth the merits of his wares. He is never at a loss for a word, an idea, a reply, or an apt story; and an opponent easily "rattled" would be simply swept off his feet by the torrent of argument, eloquence, and wit. Altogether, he is about as dangerous an antagonist as anyone could cross swords with.

Putnam's style is totally different. He makes no personal allusions, and, as Mr. Hull acknowledged, did not say a mean thing during the whole debate. He lacks the reservoir of words at the other's command, and lets pass without notice anything that does not affect the argument. He is in no wise sensational, and not always systematic. It was not apparent that he went into the debate with any clearly outlined method of dealing with the subject, evidently relying upon his opponent to take the laboring oar. This Mr. Hull did not do, and the Materialist, having little to combat, spoke somewhat laboriously and did not appear to so great advantage as he otherwise might have done. Nevertheless his argument was strong, his language at times eloquent and impressive, and his logic practically without flaw.

I have thus endeavored to give an off-hand sketch of this debate. To my mind it was not conclusive one way or the other. Those who believe in spirits and their miraculous power cannot but maintain that Mr. Hull had the facts on his side, while to those unconvinced of continued life after death his relations of experience were no more convincing than the similar recitals found in the Bible. Perhaps the most satisfactory features of the event were the large and intelligent audiences, whose offerings at the door of the temple were divided between the contestants, fairly remunerating both. If some over-zealous believer had not hissed Mr. Putnam's reflections upon the reliability of Alfred Russell Wallace as an authority on spiritual phenomena, there would be no evidence that the discussion created any ill-feeling.

G. E. M.

A LECTURE IN OAKLAND.

On Sunday, May 11, at 4 P.M., Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel will speak in Dania Hall, corner of Eighth street and Broadway, Oakland.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, May 11, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel; subject, "The Religion and Church of the Future."

Two new reform papers have been started in San Francisco during the past month, both of which are in the Anarchistic line. The first is Sigismund Danielewicz's "Beacon," and the second is "Egoism," to be issued monthly by the Equity Publishing Company. Mr. Danielewicz is a believer in dynamite, and would settle the unemployed-labor question by providing every idle man with a bomb and putting him in possession of vacant land. The financial difficulty he would adjust by having the needy person issue his own money wherewith to buy what is deemed necessary. If dealers refuse to accept the money, the purchaser shall simply take what he wants, forcibly if necessary, and leave his notes in payment. Mr. Danielewicz conducts a barber shop in conjunction with the "Beacon." The second paper, "Egoism," is quite otherwise, and will resemble Benjamin R. Tucker's "Liberty" to the extent that Mr. Tucker may succeed in making his paper its equal in ability and mechanical excellence. The editor of "Egoism" opposes the doctrine of force, and holds that physical victory is of no permanent value until the man is safe under the conviction that his self-interest is promoted by the absence of invasive legislation and custom. The publishers express the hope that their paper may not so far retrograde as to become popular, and promise to defeat any arrangement looking toward a large circulation. "Egoism's" address is box 1678, San Francisco, where those who desire a sample copy should send four cents in stamps.

We are accustomed to regard Mexico as religiously free, but it is not. The power of the Catholic Church is still strong enough in our sister republic to keep Freethought under the ban. This is shown by a letter written last month by General Gonzales to Mrs. M. L. Farrington, author of the book lately noticed in FREETHOUGHT, "Facing the Sphinx." Mrs. Farrington forwarded to General Gonzales, at the City of Mexico, a copy of her book to be placed with the editor of "El Combate" for review. The following paragraph is from the general's reply under date of April 24:

"I loaned the copy which you had the kindness to present me with, to a brother in creed, who was educated in London, and consequently is a good English scholar. He offered at first to write up a criticism for my journal, but though he is fascinated with your book he deplores his inability to fulfill his promise. Undoubtedly there is a superabundance of quotations tending to prove the non-existence of Jesus Christ; it would, however, create a great scandal among the Catholics should he sign a criticism of your work. Being a physician by profession he would at once lose all his practice, because his patients would regard him as excommunicated. The doctor is a Freethinker. Your book pleases him, but he does not dare to do a thing towards helping to introduce it here for fear of being ostracized.

R. T. GONZALES."

Five years and a fine of three hundred dollars is the sentence inflicted upon Moses Harman under the conviction just found. There were four counts against Mr. Harman; this sentence is on the first of them, and there is still an indictment against him on which he has not been tried. It is no use now to censure the victim for the foolhardy course which has brought this calamity upon him. He has waved the red rag in the face of the governmental bull, and the bull has gored him; but the next thing to do is petition for his pardon. He is as innocent of crime, or of intent to commit a crime, as the day he was born. He is as much the victim of superstition as he would be if blasphemy had been the offense charged.

THE census bureau is making arrangements to enumerate almost everything, and it is to be hoped that particular attention will be paid to religious matters. For instance, we all want to know how much church property there is in the country, because it is untaxed, and the enormity of the exemption will be more apparent when its extent is made generally known. Again, the Catholic church is claiming some twelve millions of adherents in the country, and it is desirable to know whether the estimate is correct. About the number of Freethinkers there is also much uncertainty. They have heretofore been classed as Protestants, but the present census should give them a separate enumeration.

OUR friend and subscriber J. D. Garfield, of Marshfield, Or., is a candidate for representative to the legislature of his state, and the opposing party are working the "religious racket" against him. One minister, who differs from him in politics, has already carried the matter into the pulpit, declaring that the people must not be represented by the enemies of Christianity and that no Christian could consistently vote for Mr. Garfield. As, however, Mr. Garfield is one of the most popular men in Coos county, it is safe to predict that the religious test will not work.

LAST SUNDAY'S SOCIABLE.

The first sociable of the Freethought Society, held last Sunday evening, was in all respects a success. The musical and literary exercises were brief, consisting of remarks by President Putnam, a recitation by Miss Palanca, songs by Miss Evangeline Ballou, and zither and piano solos by the Misses Haelke of Oakland, but there were applause, encores, and bouquets enough for a much longer programme. When the dance came on, forty people participated, which gave the little hall an animated appearance. Mr. Schou easily proved himself the greatest Tepsichorean artist present, though closely followed by Messrs. Putnam and Lemme, and the writer of these lines. Mr. Thomas Curtis and Colonel Knight were not present, it being understood that they entertain religious scruples against dancing on the Lord's day. Mr. Healy looked in at the door, but saw nothing to object to, and so went away. Mr. McMillan, of Fresno Flats, and Mr. Beattie, of Colorado, took the floor somewhat hesitatingly, but left it with much reluctance at the end of the figure. Vice-President Eastman was stately, sedate, and accurate. The company altogether made a fine assemblage, and those who did not dance found plenty of intelligent and interesting persons with whom they could enter into profitable conversation. The ladies were engaging, refined, and complaisant; the musician was proficient and elicited only praise from the dancers. Joy was the officer on deck.

The dance ended at about eleven o'clock, and everybody went home happy, especially Brother Walker, who, as guardian of the outer door, gathered in two-bit pieces sufficient for all expenses and a slight balance. The first Sunday evening of June will be similarly celebrated.

A TRUE CROSS IN SAN JOSE.

To the Editors of Freethought:

For the inclosed stamps please send "A Woman's Journey Around the World," by Lilian Leland.

Now the Garden City comes to the front with a genuine miracle, one that will convince the most skeptical that our redeemer is not dead, but sleepeth. God in his all-power, as if to make the scoffer tremble in his boots, has this time made the apparition to appear beautifully green, like its adorer, instead of as formerly, stained red by the hands of the bloody Jews. Now you can blow your Freethought bugle. Here it lies on the sidewalk. It is plain to be seen. It's a better soul-saver than Putnam's Infidel scheme. Says the San Jose Mercury of April 28:

Arrangements have been made by Charles F. Crittenton, of New York, for a series of gospel meetings to be held in this city for an indefinite period, and for that purpose a tent has been erected on Third street. A notable feature of the tent is a cross, which is seen immediately upon entering it. The origin of the decoration is peculiar. At the time the stone sidewalks were laid along the street, a wide stone walk was laid leading from the sidewalk into the lot to where the front door of the residence would be when erected.

This was some time ago, and the place being unused, the grass grew up through the interstices between the blocks of the pavement, forming thereby a true cross of living green. The ladies who are assisting in the services, struck with this singular growth, spared the grass when cleaning off the walk, and adorning it with a few bright flowers, formed thereby a beautiful and most appropriate decoration.

The ingenuousness of us Christians up here is too much for you San Francisco blasphemers. L. R. TITUS.

COMMENTS ON THE DAWES AND CAMPBELL DEBATE

Geo. H. Dawes, a Liberal lecturer, delivered three lectures in Hillsboro, Or., recently. Previous to his lectures he had challenged the Rev. J. A. Campbell to meet him in a joint discussion, but Mr. Campbell would not come out. The last lecture delivered by Dawes was a review of Campbell's pamphlet, "Replies to a Skeptic." Campbell attended the lecture; Dawes invited Campbell to reply, and offered him time to do so. Dawes occupied one hour in review of the book, and Mr. Campbell took the platform, and for an hour he loudly attempted to reply, but utterly failed to disprove a single statement made by Dawes. He simply took up some points made by Dawes and depended upon assumptions, loud talking, and replying to what Dawes did not say, to kill time.

Campbell, knowing that Dawes would not have time to notice one-fourth of his statements, took advantage of the opportunity to make assumptions and challenges which I feel called upon to reply to, as a few people in the audience had an impression that Campbell stated facts, and that because Dawes did not, on account of lack of time, reply to them, Campbell was right; whereas, if it had been otherwise Dawes would have exposed his sophistry and fallacious arguments, if arguments they may be called. Mr. Campbell broadly challenged any Infidel to produce such and such evidence. As the challenge was a broad one and includes all Infidels, I accept his earnest request for information, for information the gentleman needs, as any one can see by this brief synopsis of the debate. The following statement is from Campbell's "Replies to a Skeptic:" "Asylums, hospitals, and a thousand other good things are the outgrowths of the teachings of Christ, and Infidelity is guilty of none of these great things."

Dawes, in review, showed that asylums and hospitals were in existence hundreds of years before the Christian era. He also showed that nowhere in the teachings of Christ did he teach anything in regard to institutions of any kind. Dawes also showed that Infidels had founded institutions of charity, education, etc. In reply, Campbell failed to disprove Dawes's statements, and even failed to notice them; but instead, loudly demanded of Infidels to show a heathen country to-day that had charitable institutions. If Campbell will read the testimony of Christian missionaries and travelers, he will obtain information to prove Dawes's statement. Let him read the histories of those countries. I would advise Mr. Campbell before attempting to debate on the platform with Infidels that he would read Buckle, Lecky, Moshiem, Hallam, and Gibbon, and then he would not make so many assertions that are wild and shallow. If Campbell is right, he overthrows the standard histories of the world. I think Buckle's statements cannot be set aside by any Oregon propagators of superstition. Again, I would advise him, before attempting to quote Ingersoll, to read Ingersoll's works, his authorized works. Campbell quoted an extract from Ingersoll's "Human Rights," page one.

Again, in "Replies to a Skeptic" is the following: "The religion of Christ never caused the death of a single being, but instead it was Christianity's bitter foes. The Bible does not contain any passages that would justify persecution." Dawes in reply quoted several passages to show that the Bible contained a spirit of intolerance and persecution. Dawes also showed by history that the most horrible massacres, wars, and persecutions were conducted and carried on by Christians; the Old Testament also contained teachings which led to the most bitter persecutions.

Campbell in reply said that it was not Christians that did this, but the Catholics. He failed to prove his assumption that the Catholics were not Christians. Campbell, behind a thin screen of assumption, endeavored to crawl out of a difficulty through a very small hole. He complained that Mr. Dawes was trying to saddle the Old Testament with its teachings upon his shoulders; that he objected to it; that his religion commenced where the New Testament began. Whenever the Old Testament will help Campbell in his ideas he proudly trots it out as evidence; but whenever it testifies against him he repudiates it and complains that Infidels are saddling it upon him. Well, I do not wonder he kicks against it. Any preacher who has it saddled upon him has a load that would break him down. Campbell's dodge was effective in killing time.

Again, Campbell denied a personal God; that the Bible did not say that God was not fashioned after man, but that man was fashioned after God. What a silly quibble. Either way it reads it distinctly implies that God is an anthropomorphic being, with human attributes. Although Dawes proved by the Bible that it teaches a personal God, Campbell failed to disprove it, and failed to produce an iota of evidence and prove the existence or shape of his God.

In "Replies to a Skeptic" Campbell claims that without the Bible we have no information in regard to the origin of life. In his review Dawes stated that of all accounts of the origin of life that of the Bible was the most silly and farthest from the truth; that the theory of evolution was the most reasonable and the best-proven account of the origin of life.

Campbell in reply brought out the old cry of defeated theologians—monkey, monkey; that evolution teaches that the human family descended from monkeys. He loudly demanded of Infidels to produce the missing link. "Why don't you show us evolution at work now? Where is your monkey that is half human and half monkey?" This demand was interspersed with challenges. Why is it that priests like Campbell will ridicule the demonstrated facts of evolution? Before crying monkey Campbell should learn just what Darwin and other evolutionists teach. Let me inform the gentleman that Darwin distinctly says that in immense periods of time, by slight modifications, all species have changed, and that man has developed from ape-like conditions, and not from any living species of monkeys.

Campbell is so ignorant of late discoveries in the science of evolution that he does not know that evidence sufficient to prove the evolution of man is gathered without Darwin's missing link. Does he not know that evolution is accepted by the greatest minds of the world and taught in the greatest colleges in the world, and its truths only denied by those who are not conversant with the subject, by those who have pored over the vagaries of Hall's "Problem of Life," and who have not read Darwin, Haeckel, Helmholtz, Mayer, and other scientists?

Campbell in his "Replies to a Skeptic" asks: "Why do not the Infidels fly from the countries where Christianity is taught to heathen countries? The reason is plain—their scalps would not be safe." Dawes in reply showed by travelers and Christian missionaries that strangers were treated kindly by the pagans; that a foreigner's life was safer among the pagans than in Christian countries; that they were honest; that the store or booth-keepers would go away from their stores and leave the prices upon their goods, and the natives would take of the goods what they wished to buy and leave the cash for what was taken. No one could do business in any Christian land or town on that plan; even a peanut stand would not run long upon that plan.

Campbell in reply did not dispute the statements, but went off on a tangent, and in an injured tone asked Mr. Dawes to please leave out Hillsboro from among that class of towns; he had never had anything stolen. That was the weakest tangent that Campbell got on during the debate.

I have been in business here for many years and I have suffered from petty thieving, and I do not believe there is a store in town but what has had the same experience. The fact that in Japan, for instance, they have no locks upon their doors, and in Christian countries every store and house has locks, is answer to Campbell's dodging.

Hillsboro, Or.

To be Concluded.

W. C. CLOW.

THE INDIFFERENT AND THE DREAMERS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I hereby return you the paper you sent me some time ago. The few subscribers I got you will think I ought to have procured in half an hour, but I tell you anything that is not strictly orthodox goes begging in Eureka. There are many people here who have sense enough to know that three times one are not one, and that bread and wine cannot turn into the flesh and blood of a god, but it is fashionable here to be a hypocrite, so people will support the church whether they believe the nonsense preached in it or not, but they dare not subscribe their names to a paper that is in favor of Freethought, honesty, and manly principle, lest some of the orthodox might see it and suspect them of heterodoxy.

When I received the paper I had just returned from collecting funds for "Fritankaren," the Swedish Freethought paper, which, but for outside assistance, would go down. My mission was unsuccessful—all I collected was $4. As I did not wish to deal in such trifles I contributed $10 and sent $14, but I made up my mind never again to ask any person for a contribution. Being thoroughly disgusted, your paper remained in my desk for quite a while before I got courage enough to ask for signatures, and when I did ask the result was about the same as when I tried to collect money for "Fritankaren."

I am glad our Swedish friends are making things hot for the orthodox in Sweden. I received a letter from Otto Thomson, editor of Fritankaren, a few days ago, and judging from it they are determined to break the chains which have bound the minds of those people for centuries. They deserve our assistance.

I see from FREETHOUGHT that Bellamy's "dream" has caused quite a stir in San Francisco. Freethought would thrive much better if it were not for those dreamers who are always striving for the unattainable. The very systems which European nations vomited up less than a century ago are now licked up by the Nationalists of America. Trusts of all kinds, whether sugar trusts, oil trusts, or labor trusts, in the shape of labor unions, are a curse to the country in which they exist. Since Germany abolished guilds the people have prospered, and why adopt them in America? The fact is, poor people are their own worst enemies; their clamors against the rich are caused by envy and not by principle, and the few gifted and well-meaning ones they have amongst them, like Mrs. Addie Ballou and others, lack the experience necessary for a reformer. I know something about labor, having been thrown on my own resources when thirteen and a half years old, and now I am near sixty. I received $3 for the first nine months' work, and worked from 4 o'clock in the morning till 8 o'clock at night. When I was twenty-five years old I happened to land in France, and becoming penniless I took work in a sugar-refinery for 45 cents per day, and as I had to pay 40 for board I had 5 cents left as my wages, working from 5 o'clock in the morning to 7 in the evening. Yet, although I had seen better times, I did not complain. I did the best I could under the circumstances, and that is what all men ought to do. I have no patience with idlers who complain about hard times. Society is a growth, and not something made to order, as Nationalists seem to think. There is but one way in which we can improve the conditions of the human race, and that is by educating the masses; all appeals to their prejudices and passions not only prove ineffectual as agents of reform, but they lead the laboring classes deeper into the mire by fostering the very parts which are the greatest hindrance to their progress. A capable, intelligent man, no matter what his occupation, can always find work at remunerative wages without joining a union. Only the idlers and incapables are clamoring for trades unions. Why then designate self-respecting, intelligent, industrious, and capable men as "rats" by way of stigma and heighten the conceit of the incapables?

We may turn the laws of nature to our account, but we cannot alter them; and since the fittest always survives, let us educate the masses and make them fit to survive instead of leading them into an inextricable morass by fostering their prejudices and passions. - Yours as ever,

ROBERT GUNTHER.

P.S.—You have printed some of my letters which were not intended for printing; neither is this written for print, but you may print it if you like. An army of so-called reformers would turn against me, I think, but that does not trouble me, as I have full confidence in my ability to back my opinions. R. G.

Eureka, Cal.

SACERDOTAL INFIDELITY AND RECKLESSNESS OF MORAL OBLIGATION.

Suppose that a lawyer were to be appointed a justice of the United States Supreme Court, and on receiving his commission and swearing to support the constitution he took his seat upon the bench; suppose that in process of time he gave an opinion in an important case in which he drove a coach and four through the constitution, nullifying its chapters and sections at his own sweet will; and suppose that when the whole outside world stood aghast at his conduct, and his brethren of the court called his attention to his utter disregard of the constitution and his oath of office, he should exclaim, "Lord! gentlemen, I never read a line of the constitution in all my life, and had no idea that, in my opinion, I was violating either it or my oath of office;" I say, What would the world think of the integer vite of such a judge?

Well, during the late theological discussion which preceded the vote of the New York Presbytery to strike out the essential doctrines of the Confession of Faith, which forms the constitution of the Presbyterian church, one of the venerable doctors of divinity in his zeal for expunging declared that he never read a line of the Confession in all his life! I do not mention the name of the clergyman, for I would not deepen the stigma which he put upon his own character by this unblushing and scandalous acknowledgment.

Now, to show what manner of men generally these revisers of the Confession are, and this one in particular, allow me to show the readers of FREETHOUGHT the oath of office which all these gentlemen took before they were ordained, by the laying on of hands, to be Presbyterian ministers. The Confession of Faith contains, as part of its constitutional law, the "Form of Government," which, in chapter 15, section 12, prescribes the rules for the ordination of ministers. I now quote the form, omitting only those sections which do not immediately bear upon the point I am discussing: "The day appointed for ordination having come, and the Presbytery convened, the presiding officer, addressing himself to the candidate, shall propose to him the following questions, viz.:

"1. Do you believe the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the word of God, and the only infallible rule of faith and practice? The candidate answers: I do.

"2. Do you sincerely receive and adopt the Confession of Faith of this [Presbyterian] church as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures? The candidate answers: I do.

"6. Do you promise to be zealous and faithful in maintaining the truths of the gospel [embodied in the Confession] and the purity and peace of the church, whatsoever persecution or opposition may arise unto you on that account? [By the 'purity' of the church is meant one and all of the doctrines of the Confession to be preached as a system, each in its proper time and place; and by the 'peace' of the church is meant the loving unity which consists in the homogeneousness of faith, and which is broken up when any departure from its doctrines takes place.] The candidate answers: I do."

Then, having voluntarily taken these solemn vows and obligations, which in political government is called the oath of office, he is ordained a Presbyterian minister, and set over a congregation as an official expounder of the doctrines of the Bible as they are embodied in the Confession of Faith.

In the case of the minister who declared that he had never read the Confession, which he solemnly swore he believed and would preach in the face of outward persecution and internal defection, it may be said that he probably came from some unorthodox church and entered the Presbyterian ministry for a higher sphere of usefulness, and that this accounts for his not having read the Confession. But the rule for keeping the church pure requires that all such new-comers from other sects shall be carefully and strictly examined by the Presbytery that receives them, to see that they leave behind them all their heresies, and conform in their belief to the doctrines of the Confession.

Now, remember that all of these five thousand ministers of the Presbyterian church spent several years, most of them as beneficiaries, at the church's expense, in the various theological seminaries scattered over the country for the express purpose of studying the Bible in its original tongues and finding out whether it does not teach the doctrines contained in the Confession of Faith. When, therefore, they came before their Presbyteries for ordination they were not supposed to be any longer mere babes and sucklings in bib and tucker that could digest nothing but milk, but strong men in Christ Jesus whose stomachs could enjoy and dispose of the highly spiced meat contained in the gospel and served up by bill of fare in the Confession. Take the doctrine of infant damnation, which these gentlemen swore they believed and promised to preach, but which they now affect so holily to shudder at, is it not as clearly taught in the Bible as human language could teach it? Reader, get your Bible and turn to Paul's epistle to the Romans, chapter ix, verses 11-13, where he says, speaking of Rebecca's twins: "For, the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works but of him that calleth; it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Then, being divinely inspired and anticipating the very objection of the Presbyterian revisers, Paul shuts their mouths and gives them a perpetual lockjaw by saying: "What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy. . . . Therefore, hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth." Then, again, foreseeing the objection that would be made to the sovereignty of God in his choosing some to be saved and the greater part of mankind to be damned, he bursts out into this language: "Thou wilt say then to me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay, but, O man, who art thou that replieth against God?"

Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump, to make one vessel unto honor and another to dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath and make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory."

Take the doctrine of reprobation; is it not clearly implied in the doctrine of election? For, if a state government, through its courts of law, has sentenced a hundred men to be hanged for their crimes on a given day, and the executive pardons ten of them, are not the remaining ninety treated as reprobates, for whom there is no pardon? And yet, after reading the above quotation from the inspired apostle, Paul, the revisers tell the world that their aim in wishing to expunge the doctrines of reprobation and infant damnation from the confession, is to make it more scriptural. Ignatius Loyola!

If these Presbyterian ministers have got the dyspepsia, so that they cannot any longer relish, digest, and assimilate such food as they once could, why do they not, like honest and honorable men, step down and out of their pulpits, and appear in their true colors before the world? If they have really gone one step back of the confession, and examined the question whether the Bible itself, which teaches the doctrines they wish to eliminate from their creed, is really the revelation of a just and merciful God, and have come to the conclusion that it neither is, nor claims to be such, why not say so, and take their stand with the Deists? Ah! these gentlemen cannot bear the thought of leaving the flesh-pots of Egypt! There are millions of money invested in colleges, theological seminaries, publication and missionary societies, and many other institutions, with easy duties, and fat salaries for life annexed. The saints, although so unworldly, like, after all, to suck a sugar teat as well as the political office hunters who hover like a cloud over the city of Washington after every presidential election. They will know that in case they leave the church, the law will not allow them to carry away any spoils which their fathers consecrated to the work of spreading the gospel through the world according to the Confession of Faith, and which are owned in trust by the corporate body known as the Presbyterian church; and they are therefore determined to stick to the organization which gives them their position in society, and their bread and butter. The day of May will soon be here, when the General Assembly will meet and act upon the proposition to commit hari-kari, and we will see how many of the five thousand ministers, sworn to teach and defend the doctrines of the Confession, will stand by their solemn oaths of office and how many will not.

In calling the attention of the readers of FREETHOUGHT to what is going on in the Presbyterian church, my object is to show, on a large scale and in a clear light, that the sentiment called religion is to-day, as it has always proved itself to be in past ages, the most unscrupulous and dangerous of all the sentiments which influence mankind. What other class of men on earth but religious men could have the brazen-faced audacity, under the hollow pretense of "revising" the creed of the church, to trample down its fundamental doctrines under their feet when they swore at their ordination, and in the presence of almighty God, that they sincerely believed and accepted them as the doctrines contained in the holy scriptures of the Old and New Testaments? It is common to say, when a Christian commits fraud, lying, forgery, and perjury, as is the fashion of the present times, that he is not acting religiously but irreligiously. But I maintain, and history—especially the history of the church itself—bears me out in my contention, that it is of the very essence of religions to make men irresponsible in their morals. Gladly do I admit that in all ages of the church there have been in its membership those who were just, honest, virtuous, and true. But these good attributes of character they inherited from nature, their mother, and did not derive them in any degree from religion. They were and are good in defiance of their connection with the church. When was there an age, since the sentiment of religion was evolved from the ignorance and fear of mankind, that it did not commit and sanction the commission of all manner of crimes? It is a fountain which never yet sent out a stream of pure water to refresh and bless the world; but like the sewer of a great city it has deluged society, through all the ages, with vices and crimes innumerable. To see the truth of this, look at the Catholic or the Latin nations of the old world and the new where religion has had full sway in impressing its character upon the masses of the people.

We cannot rejoice in iniquity and do evil that good may come, but if we could we might be glad to observe the pregnant conduct of the Presbyterian ministers in the painful exhibition they have been making of the natural workings of true religion. Our tired and self-denying Infidel lecturers can leave the field and go home to their families and take a rest and recruit their strength for future labors in the cause of enlightenment. The revisers, who are countenancing and encouraging the whole breed of defaulters and robbers of trust funds, by the total lack of a sense of moral obligation they exhibit to the world in the open violation of their oaths of office, are opening the eyes of thousands in the church, whom our lecturers and papers could not reach, and are silently convincing them that, as a class, the clergy, who are officially and pre-eminently religious, are now, as they always have been, the chiefest of sinners. After a while these people will begin to think inductively, as well as to observe, and then they will find out that it is religion, and not the lack of it, which has made the clergy so false and dangerous a class of men. A. B. B.

Enon Valley, Pa.

× TAMMANY AND THE ROMAN HIERARCHY.

Tammany Hall in this city is the political wing of the Roman Catholic church. Every magnate of the Hall is a devout Catholic, and he could not be a magnate if he were not. Croker, the head of the organization, is very pious—for a Catholic—and so is Grant, our mayor. From these two, down to the superannuated voters who sweep the streets, Tammany is owned neck and heels by the Roman hierarchy. That is the way the church gets its money and that is the way Tammany gets the votes.

At the last two elections, Tammany, or the church, carried everything. One of the offices won is that of sheriff of New York county and city. Mr. James A. Flack encumbers the office. One of the jails over which Mr. Flack has jurisdiction is the one which takes its name from Ludlow street. Mr. Keating, a local Tammany worker, filled, until within a few days, the office of warden in that jail. In days gone by, when D. M. Bennett was waiting in that institution for the pardon Hayes promised but never gave, Mr. Keating was the doorkeeper there, and the writer of this frequently encountered him. As specimens of Tammany officials Messrs. Flack and Keating are valuable, and so are their subordinates. The predecessor of Sheriff Flack was Grant, now mayor.

A few months ago some Republican politicians "put up a job"—as the phrase goes—on Tammany to punish it for bad faith in some political deals. An investigation committee from the state senate was appointed and sent down here. It began its work two weeks ago. The Herald was in the secret, evidently, and saw a chance to advertise itself. It procured the incarceration of one of its reporters in Ludlow street jail, furnished him with money to tempt the Tammany officials, and then published the facts the reporter obtained.

The result of the senate committee's and the Herald's efforts is—seven Tammany Hall officials indicted for swindling, extortion, bribery, etc. And at the same time, Sheriff Flack has been convicted of conspiring to divorce his wife fraudulently—making eight Tammany Hall magnates and workers in trouble. Mr. Croker, the "boss" of all, went to Europe some time ago, or, rumor has it, he would be in trouble too, and obliged to tell more about Tammany Hall methods than he would find pleasant for himself or profitable to the Hall.

The backbone of Tammany Hall is the seventy or eighty thousand Irish Roman Catholic voters in this city. The real head of the Hall is the Roman hierarchy, with Archbishop Corrigan as the mouthpiece. The treasury of the Hall and the church is the treasury of the city—by both direct and indirect methods. The sufferers are the people, who are robbed, cheated, abused, for the benefit of a lot of alien politicians who couldn't earn ten dollars a week in a legitimate business, and for the benefit of a church which is trying to break down our institutions and which never yet legislated for anything but its own ecclesiastical and financial welfare. Let us hope the exposure of the rascality in one branch of the city's government may teach the respectable voters of the city a lesson they will not forget before next fall, when they will be called upon to again do some voting.—The Truth Seeker.

ECCLESIASTICAL VIEWS AND PRACTICE AS TO THE OATH.

I.

The ecclesiastical courts of Christendom claimed exclusive jurisdiction of the morals of the people. The judges and the lawyers who practiced in them were for the most part ecclesiastics. A body of ecclesiastical law grew up, which was enforced and followed by the secular courts. Heresy being contrary to the creed of the church, was the worst of crimes. Heathen literature fell under the ban of the church, so that the early literatures of the European nations as well as that of the early Christian writers who were not orthodox, were swept away, and live to-day, if at all, only in fragments.

The history of Roman law is mainly that which the church has permitted to exist, or which has been resurrected and restored by conjecture from the fragments remaining, or from allusions in classical authors. The first laws of England that have been handed down are Ethelbert's code, framed in St. Augustine's day, about 601, in which the first care is taken of the rights of the church and of God's property.

Bede's Ecclesiastical History furnishes the outline of the early history of law and life in England, and if colored at all, it is in favor of the church. This is true in regard to the history of the oath.

In the early ages of the church there was a popular superstition that an oath taken in a Jewish synagogue was more binding than one taken elsewhere. But when it became the practice to swear the witness upon the cross or a relic, or the gospels, and at the altar, the adjuncts of the oath became the leading feature of its administration and the simple oath was not respected. Thus in 680, when Ebroin, mayor of the palace of Burgundy, had defeated Martin, Duke of Austrasia, and desired to entice him from his refuge in the fortress of Laon, two bishops were sent to him bearing the royal reliquaries, on which they swore that his life should be safe. Ebroin, however, had removed the relics from the cases, and having Martin in his power, deemed himself free from his oath and put his victim to death. The penitential of St. David, dating from the latter part of the sixth century, provides that perjury committed in a church shall be punished by a fine of four times the value of the matter about which the oath was taken, while no penalty is provided for false swearing elsewhere. The code of Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, of the seventh century, assumed that a false oath taken on a consecrated cross required for absolution three times the penance exacted when the oath was taken on an unconsecrated cross, while if administered by any one but a priest it was void and no penalty could be exacted.

The penitential of Gregory III. provided that three years' penance would absolve for perjury committed when sworn on a consecrated cross, or on the hand of a bishop or priest, while seven years' penance was exacted where the oath was taken on the gospels or on an altar with relics. King Robert the Pious provided two reliquaries on which to receive oaths—that for the magnates being richly ornamented but empty; that for the common people holding only a bird's egg—so that his people perjuring themselves could do so with impunity.

The value of the oath depended upon the sacredness of the place where it was taken, and the solemn ceremonies attending its administration as well as upon the sanctity of the relic. Some shrines had a reputation of a miraculous interposition for the detection of falsehood or the punishment of perjury. St. Augustine relates that at Milan a thief swore upon a holy relic with the intention of testifying falsely. He was irresistibly forced to confess himself guilty of the crime he intended to fasten upon another.

Augustine himself, when unable to decide between two of his ecclesiastics who accused each other of revolting crime, sent them both to the shrine of St. Felix, of Nola, in the full expectation that the judgment of God would bring to light the truth as between them.

Gregory the Great showed the same belief when he alluded to a simple purgatorial oath taken by a bishop on the relics of St. Peter, in terms which intimate that the accused, if guilty, had exposed himself to great danger, and that his escape from injury proved his innocence. Gregory also assumed in one of his homilies that perjury committed on the relics of a saint is punished by demoniacal possession.

Charlemagne, who reigned from 742 to 814, directed that oaths should be sworn in the church or upon relics, and they were usually sworn in a consecrated place.

As the church grew in power it prohibited the practice of the early fathers in regard to heathen oaths, and the Council of Constantinople excommunicated those Christians who swore by heathen oaths.

Heineccius, who died in 1741, states from the time the Saxon and Suevic laws prevailed in Germany, all the ancient forms of oaths became obsolete and the usual form was to lay the hand on relics, or the gospels, or an altar, or on a cross. Whoever swore in any other than the prescribed form was to be excommunicated and to receive thirty-nine lashes. The altar was always ready in the courts of justice, and the relics were subject to the order of the judge.

The Tuscan code required the oath to be given before a crucifix, and if the person to be sworn was not a Christian, he was to take the oath "according to the most respected and favored rule of his religion."

In one council it was enacted that any clerk convicted of perjury, should be debarred from the communion for two years. In another, that a suborner of perjury should be excommunicated for life, while the perjurer should be incompetent as a witness, and be branded with infamy according to the law. In one law it provided: "Whoever perjures himself by the hand of a bishop, or by a consecrated cross, shall do penance for three years, but on a cross not consecrated for one year." That is, the profanation of a sacred thing or person was punished rather than the giving of false evidence as under the heathen codes.

Heineccius held that reverence for the deity was essential to truthfulness, and that no faith could be placed in the word of a person who had no fear of divine vengeance. But he admits that "if all were possessed of that self-restraint and regard for what is just and honest which men ought to feel, surely we should never compel anyone to swear, but should place as much reliance on him when merely making a serious affirmation as though he laid his hand upon the altar and swore by all that is sacred. The case is as Eschylus* represents it: 'It is not the oath that invests the man with credit, but the man the oath.'"

The church followed the Roman law in allowing the oath of purgation to be taken. In practice under the Roman law, when the defendant was called on to swear to his innocence, in some cases his simple word was taken. The law as revised by the church required compurgators to be sworn with the defendant. Generally persons of the same rank and profession, even of the same sex, were required as compurgators. Thus in the laws of Hoel the Good, Prince of Wales, it is enacted that a female whose reputation is impeached shall clear herself by the oaths of seven women for the first time a stain is attempted to be put upon her character; of fourteen upon the second charge; of fifty on a third charge, based on any show of cause, before her fair fame could be redeemed. The bishop of Ely was required to support his oath by that of ninety-nine priests. In another case two hundred and ninety-nine compurgators were required.

In the thirteenth century the municipal laws of the Saxons made the purgatorial oath of the accused decisive, except in case of theft and where the stolen articles were found in his possession, or he had suffered a previous conviction. In Franconia a murderer was allowed to rebut with his oath all testimony as to his guilt unless he was caught in the act.

* Eschylus, the Greek tragedian, lived 525 to 556, B. C.

In one of the most primitive of the Anglo-Saxon codes, dating from the seventh century, the king and the bishop are permitted to rebut an accusation with their simple assumption; the thane and the mass-priest with a simple oath, while the clerks and laymen were compelled to clear themselves in the regular form of canonical compurgation. (Laws of Wihtraed cap. 16, 21.)

The Welsh laws exempted from taking the oath of expurgation bishops, lords, the deaf, the dumb, men of different language, and pregnant women.

The usual manner of taking the oath of compurgation was for the compurgators to lay their hands upon the pyx, or the case in which the consecrated wafer or the relics were kept, and the accused to place his hands upon theirs and to say, "So help me, God, or these relics, I am innocent." The expurgators swore they believed the oath of the accused that he was innocent.

In other cases the matter in issue was decided not by the number of compurgators, but by the number of oaths. In the sixth century when Gregory of Tours was accused of defaming Fredegonda a council of bishops decided that he should clear himself of the charge by oaths on three altars after celebrating mass on each, which he did. The Anglo-Saxons, in certain cases, allowed the plaintiff to sustain his charge by swearing in four churches, while the defendant could rebut it by taking an oath of denial in twelve churches. In the thirteenth century merchants proved the payment of a debt by swearing to it in nine churches.

W. S. PUGH.

INGERSOLL ON LABOR.

Robert G. Ingersoll has the following editorial over his own signature in the New York "Morning Journal:"

I hardly know enough of the subject to give an opinion as to the time when eight hours are to become a day's work, but I am perfectly satisfied that eight hours will become the labor day. Working people should be protected by law.

If they are not, capitalists will require just as many hours as human nature can bear. For a man to get up before daylight and work till after dark life is of no particular importance. He simply earns enough one day to prepare himself to work another. His whole life is spent in want and toil, and such a life is without value.

Of course, I cannot say that the present effort is going to succeed. All I can say is that I hope it will. I cannot see how any man who does nothing can insist that others should work ten or twelve hours a day. Neither can I see how any man who lives on the luxuries of life can find it in his heart, or in his stomach, to say that the poor ought to be satisfied with the crusts and crumbs they get.

I believe there is to be a revolution in the relations between labor and capital. The working people are reasoners. Their hands and heads are in partnership. They know a great deal more than capitalists. It takes a thousand times more brain to make a locomotive than it does to run a store or a bank, and there is a great deal more intelligence in the steamship and in all the thousand machines and devices that are now working for the world. These working people read; they meet together; they discuss; they are becoming more and more independent in thought. They do not believe all they hear.

The free school in this country has tended to put men on an equality, and the mechanic understands his side of the case and is able so express his views. Under the circumstances there must be a revolution. The laboring men, however, ought to remember that all who labor are their brothers and that all women who labor are their sisters, and when one class of working men or working women is oppressed all other laborers ought to stand by the oppressed class.

Any man who wishes to force his brother to work more than eight hours a day is not a civilized man. My hope for the workingman has its foundation in the fact that he is growing more and more intelligent. I have also some hope for the capitalist. When both become intelligent the matter will be settled. Neither labor nor capital should resort to force.

THE "Monitor" publishes the statement that there are twelve million Catholics in the United States.

REAL AND REALITY.

FREETHOUGHT published in No. 15 a criticism of an article of mine by "Agnostic," which I should entirely ignore for its obvious and unjust misrepresentations. Yet considering the fact that it calls attention to some passages which, although correct, might easily be misunderstood, I send you a few words in reply. My anonymous critic possesses my sincere commiseration not only for his ignorance of the elements of logic, but also for the rudeness with which he presents his case. I need not here repeat the words with which he has—but not, I suppose, with editorial approbation—disgraced the columns of this journal.

My anonymous critic quotes the following sentence: "Materialism went too far when it tried to explain everything from matter, when it identified matter with reality. Yet it stands on solid ground when it maintains that every reality is material."

Parenthetically it may be remarked that "Agnostic" quotes the italicized words wrongly. Instead of matter he says "itself," and instead of every reality is material he writes, "every reality is matter." Such gross misquotations must, of course, make the most lucid explanations unintelligible.

"Agnostic" declares that the sentence quoted is a contradiction. The sentence does not contain a contradiction, as will be learned from the following consideration:

Every reality has three elements. First, it consists of matter; secondly, its material particles have a special form; and thirdly, they are endowed with a certain motion. Matter, form, and motion are abstracts representing certain qualities that are real; we call them "real" because they are qualities of reality. Matter is real, form is real, motion is real. Yet matter is not all of reality, nor is form, nor is motion; for every reality, besides being material, possesses at the same time a special form, and is also endowed with some kind of motion.

It is apparent that adjectives have often a wider application than their nouns. The adjective "real" covers a larger field than the noun "reality." Thus every fool is foolish, but everything that is foolish need not exactly be a fool. I may say, without falling into a contradiction, this: Space is real; yet space is not a reality. This, in other words, means: Space is a certain quality of reality; the relations among things, the qualities of things, are objective properties and not mere subjective illusions; yet is space no thingish entity, no tangible object, as concrete bodies are, e.g., stones, plants, and animals. Space is non-material, and yet space is real.

If I have the following two premises:

Every reality is material.
Space is real.

I cannot conclude the syllogism with the statement:
Therefore space is material.

And there is no contradiction involved if I add the sentence:
And yet space is non-material.

My critic would perhaps find no fault with a logician who concludes from the premises:

All geese are two-legged.
Man is two-legged.
Therefore man is a goose.

I confine myself to this logical exposition without entering on the discussion as to how far materialism is correct and how far, as a philosophy, it is insufficient.

P. CARUS.

Chicago, April 28, 1890.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

For five long months has the almost ceaseless rain kept me close at office work in the city. But an old-time California sunshine bids me out among the green hills and vales of the Golden State, to again follow on the trail of the priesthood; out among the Contra Costa hills, after skirting the limpid along the shores of San Pablo bay, to Martinez, by rail. Then I go by rail to Pacheco—a burg that the merciless floods in the past winter nearly immersed, to never rise again. Thousands of acres of crops and pasture land were buried deep with mud from the adjacent hills, and like Pompeii of old it is but a relic of its past greatness. Leaving Pacheco in its muddy glory, I passed on to Concord, a more elevated locality. Here I found a beautifully shaded town with a park in the center so densely wooded that it seemed dark in the day time. All was lovely here; but being mostly a Spanish and Portuguese people and Roman Catholic, I concluded not to molest the priest in his lair; so, after a hearty dinner, I was on again to Clayton by stage. Clayton is right at the foot of Mt. Diablo on the west side, in a fine shaded grove, with one store, one joss-house, four saloons, and lots of happy people mostly from the faderland across the big pond. There are three large wineries here and plenty of cows, goats, etc., so wine and milk, beer and red-eye, flow on forever. I gave two lectures here in Rhine's Hall to fair audiences, but the long wet winter and the four saloons have left the people moneyless; and as there was a picnic on hand and a dance to cheer the folks up from the wine cup's folly and despair, I went on over the hills, not to the poor-house, but to the neat little town of Somerville. Here there was no hall, and the little church around the corner was too pure and holy for unsanctified feet. I therefore gave four lectures in the hotel dining-room. After the first lecture the seats were carried out and a dance was enjoyed by the young and old, even by your correspondent, who, though not so young as he was forty years ago, can still forward and backward, down the center, and up the outside, polka, and such, equal (in his own estimation at least) to the Contra Costa-ites.

The surrounding hills have all been honeycombed for the warmth-giving coal, and now they are sinking a shaft down six hundred feet to find another layer of "black diamonds." Four saloons, one store, and five hundred people is the census of the town; but the senses of the people center in the beer keg. At all times of the day, and I might say night, you see bright-eyed boys and girls carrying home tin-buckets of beer for dad and mam to enjoy. Verily the wine-drinking Frenchman, the beer-loving German, and the "whisky-by-God-sir" Irishman make things lively in all the mining camps of the Golden State; but hard masters, greedy landlords, and monopolies and small pay have nearly crushed these hardy sons from over the sea, and they seem to try to drown their hard lot in the flowing bowl and the foam-capped lager.

I visited Mr. Fuller's family at Antioch and was most heartily welcomed and kindly treated. Mr. Fuller is a son of Mrs. Waisbrooker, the noted and eminent author, editor, and lecturer. Her paper, with its ringing words for the downtrodden of earth, is still in death, but the printing-office is there waiting to be resurrected by the genius of its talented owner, who is now in the lecture field of Oregon. The Fuller home is a genial place where ultra-radical thought may be uttered without offense. Mrs. Fuller and all the family are true-blue radicals, and forward is their motto. But enough for this time. D. C. SEYMOUR.

An Appreciative Letter.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed please find $1 for FREETHOUGHT for the six months beginning March 1. I have taken your paper now for eight months past, and must say that it suits my ideas exactly. Though brought up under strict Presbyterian training I have been skeptical from my earliest youth, until now I am a thorough Infidel. My mind is so constituted that faith is impossible for me. My opinions must be founded on evidence, on reason, and must be capable of a clear demonstration by logical argument.

Your paper, FREETHOUGHT, is doing a grand work in exposing the conspiring designs of the Roman Catholic church, which is the most formidable and tyrannical foe of Freethought and free speech to be found in the world. It is also a good educator, and I believe I have not received a single number that was not worth the six months' subscription. I shall try to extend its circulation whenever I can. You may count on me as a constant subscriber. Success to FREETHOUGHT. Long may she wave.

Dayton, Wash. Yours truly, G. P. WRIGHT.

Spiro-Serial Convolutions.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Not being subject to impervious substantives, and versatile longitudinal equatorial meridian latitudes, where the linguistical emotional ideally unreasonable predominates over the reasonably intellectual, causing an abridgment of the physically spiritual matter necessary for an illogical intelligence to lawfully elucidate the unqua lifted adjective philosophy of Lemoore, we throw ourself upon the ideally mystifying elimination of the emotional, and energetically float along the dreamy surface of intellectual mystery. But, being mindful of the clear-cut logic of others, we must bring ours to a close.

Sanel, Cal.

B. V. JUPITER.

Good Results from a Gift Subscription.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Through the kindness of a friend I have received FREETHOUGHT for a year. I inclose an express money order for two dollars to renew the subscription.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

CHAS. E. BRIMBLECOM.

The Common Chord.

The Rappahannock's stately tide, aglow with sunset light,
 Came sweeping down between the hills that hemmed its gathering might.
 From one side rose the Stafford slopes, and on the other shore
 The Spottsylvania meadows lay, with oak groves scattered o'er.
 Hushed were the sounds of busy day; the brooding air was hushed,
 Save for the rapid-flowing stream that chanted as it rushed.
 O'er mead and gently sloping hills, on either side the stream,
 The white tents of the soldiers caught the sun's departing beam—
 On Spottsylvania's slopes the Blue, on Stafford's hills the Gray:
 Between them, like an unsheathed sword, the glittering river lay.
 Hark! Suddenly a Union band far down the stream sends forth
 The strains of "Hail, Columbia," the pæan of the North.
 The tents are parted; silent throngs of soldiers, worn and grim,
 Stand forth upon the dusky slopes to hear the martial hymn.
 So clear and quiet was the night that to the farthest bound
 Of either camp was borne the swell of sweet, triumphant sound.
 And when the last note died away, from distant post to post
 A shout, like thunder of the tide, rolled through the Federal host.
 Then straightway from the other shore there rose an answering strain,
 "Bonnie Blue Flag" came floating down the slope and o'er the plain.
 And then the Boys in Gray sent back our cheer across the tide—
 A mighty shout that rent the air and echoed far and wide.
 "Star-Spangled Banner," we replied; they answered, "Boys in Gray,"
 While cheer on cheer rolled through the dusk, and faintly died away.

Deeply the gloom had gathered round, and all the stars had com'
 When the Union band began to play the notes of "Home, Sweet Home."
 Slowly and softly breathed the chords, and utter silence fell
 Over the valley and the hills—on Blue and Gray as well.
 Now swelling and now sinking low, now tremulous, now strong,
 The leader's cornet played the air of the beautiful old song;
 And, rich and mellow, horn and bass joined in the flowing chords,
 So voice-like that they scarcely lacked the charm of spoken words.
 Then what a cheer from both the hosts, with faces to the stars!
 And tears were shed and kind words said upon the field of Mars.
 The Southern band caught up the strain; and we, who could sing, sang.
 Oh, what a glorious hymn of home across the river rang!
 We thought of loved ones far away, of scenes we'd left behind—
 The low-roofed farmhouse 'neath the elm that murmured in the wind;
 The children standing by the gate, the dear wife at the door;
 The dusty sunlight all aslant upon the old barn floor.
 Oh! loud and long the cheer we raised, when silence fell again,
 And died away among the hills the dear familiar strain.
 Then to our cots of straw we stole, and dreamed the livelong night
 Of far-off hamlets in the hills, peace-walled, and still, and white.
 —James Buckham in Harper's Weekly.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Benicia, Cal.	May 18	Fox	July 10, 21, 22
Ft. Jones.	May 20, 21	John Day.	July 24
Linkville, Or. . . .	May 23, 24, 25, 26	Prairie City.	July 25
Talent.	May 29, 30	Baker City.	July 27, 28, 29
Ashland.	June 1	Union.	July 30
Shedd.	June 3, 4	Summerville.	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Brownville and Coburg. . . .	June 5 to 8	Dayton.	Aug. 10, 11
Grey's River.	June 11 to 18	Rosalia.	Aug. 13
Portland.	June 23	Plaza.	Aug. 14
Cascades, Wash.	June 24, 25	Oakdale.	Aug. 15, 16
Fossil, Or.	June 29	Spokane Falls.	Aug. 17
Lost Valley.	July 1	Davenport.	Aug. 18, 19
Wagner.	July 2, 3, 4	Buckley.	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Prineville and vicinity. . . .	July 7 to 16	Tacoma.	Aug. 25
Monument.	July 18	Port Townsend.	Aug. 31
Hamilton.	July 19

FULL many a man, both young and old,
 Is sent to his sarcophagus,
 By pouring water icy cold
 Adown his warm æsophagus.

—E. B. Foote, Jr.

A SCHOOLMASTER, of Fresno county, named Steele, has been made crazy by religious studies and will be sent to an asylum.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

—BY—

LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Hurry, Worry.

Hurry, hurry—worry, worry, O victim of this little life!

Thy work is long, thy days are few,
There is little time, there's much to do.
Life is a fevered, brief affair,
With many a worrying duty and many an eating care.

O hurry, hurry—worry, worry—
Forward in life's fevered race!
Get thee gold, and get thee place,
Get thee state, and get thee fame—
Thou mayst live without a roof!
Thou mayst die without a name!

O hurry, hurry—worry, worry—
There is much to be lost; there is much to be won;

There is a mansion or a hovel to dwell in,
There is a robe or a rag to wear;
Your name may shine in the book of fame
For ages and ages to come,
Or be sunk in the depths of Oblivion's sea,
Forever forgotten by man.

O phantom-hunting mortal!
The clouds of glory shall all pass away
As the dream and the dew in the morning,
And the book of name shall be forever sealed,
And sunk in Oblivion's sea.
And the city of the great shall be no more,
For there's nobody, there's nobody there.
And low-man's-land shall be no-man's-land,
For there is nobody there, there is nobody there.
E'en man shall pass away from earth,
And every trace of his work disappear;
Ay! "e'en this earth shall all dissolve,"
Out of chaos come shall to chaos resolve,
Stop, mortal! think of these grander things,
And hurry no more, and worry no more.

O. L. CALLECOD.

A WOMAN of Clifton, Oregon, wanted some pin money the other day, but her husband, a fisherman on the Columbia river, refused to work, though the water was alive with fat fish. She got angry and took a boat and went fishing on her own account. In a few hours the plucky woman had fifty-four salmon that she sold to the first buyer for $38.90. She took the coin and spent it all in Astoria on an outfit. Her husband wanted to borrow a dollar for whisky, but she pointed to the river and said nay.

SAYS the Pomona Times: A Riverside orange-grower was informed by a neighbor a few days ago that the saw he was using would do better work if it were filed. He went to the house a few minutes after, put on his Sunday clothes, wrapped his saw up carefully, went to the depot, and took the train for the county seat. Arriving there, he went at once to the recorder's office to have his saw filed according to the code. We will not attempt to describe what followed when he made known his errand.

A YOUNG man led a blushing female into the presence of the Rev. Dr. Carpenter. "We want to be married," he said. "Are you the Rev. Mr. Carpenter?" "Yes," replied the genial minister, "Carpenter and joiner."

A—WHY did you run away from your wife? B—Because she poisoned my very existence. "Then how came you to take a second wife, if the first one poisoned your existence?" "I—I—I took her as an antidote."

BUSINESS' DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39½ Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Luge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment

cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Polson street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

WEBSTER'S

HANDY DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE

GIVING

The Spelling, Pronunciation, and meaning of the words, Useful Tables, the Metric System, etc., and many engravings from the latest edition

of

The large Dictionary of

NOAH WEBSTER, LL.D.

Price, by mail, 30 cents. Address THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PREMIUMS!

Given with "Freethought" for 1890.

$2 Worth of Books and Freethought One Year, for Two Dollars.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are able to offer any TWO of the following DOLLAR BOOKS, sent postpaid, to each new yearly subscriber to "Freethought" for 1890.

The books are printed in large, clear type on good paper, illustrated, and handsomely bound. The subscription price of "FREETHOUGHT" is $2 per year.

CR AIG'S PRONOUNCING DICTIONARY.

A popular dictionary of the English language, with illustrations on every page. A very attractive volume.

HOYLE'S GAMES.—Now for many years the standard authority for cards and other games. Perfectly indispensable in its way.

ADAM BEDE.—These admirable pictures of society hold a rare and abiding place in English literature.

SHE.—A remarkable story of adventure and of the supernatural, full of the most thrilling incidents. The scene is laid in the dark continent, where our explorers discover a fierce but intelligent tribe ruled by a beautiful woman called "She who must be Obeyed."

KING SOLOMON'S MINES.—A story of wild adventure in the diamond fields of Africa. Holds the attention of the reader from beginning to end.

JESS.—Haggard. An intensely dramatic story of South Africa, mentioning the Zulu war, the uprising of the Boers in the Transvaal English settlements, war and rapine, and at last a heroic sacrifice of one sister for another.

WITCH'S HEAD.—Haggard. A novel of English life, combined with adventures in Zululand, written in the author's best vein; readable from cover to cover.

ALLAN QUATERMAIN.—Haggard. A story of marvelous adventures in the heart of Africa. Our heroes having heard of a white race of great beauty living in the unknown wilds of the center of this country, resolve to and finally succeed in discovering the country, Zu-Vendis, full of amazing wealth, and ruled by beautiful women.

TENNYSON.—A very pretty edition of the works of the greatest of living poets.

NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS.—Stevenson. Collection of short stories; The Suicide Club; The Rajah's Diamond; The Pavilion on the Links, &c. Stories now very much admired.

POE'S POEMS.—The flow of all Poe's verse is remarkable for ease and gracefulness, and have placed him in the front rank of the poets of the world.

LONGFELLOW'S POEMS.—The poetry of Mr. Longfellow is marked by a very vivid imagination, great susceptibility to the impressions of natural scenery, and a ready perception of the analogies between natural objects and the feelings of the human heart.

IVANHOE.—(By Sir. Walter Scott.) At first Ivanhoe proved hard reading. But when at last the portal was passed, and entrance was had into the enchanted palace of delight, which the Wizard of the North has created by his Aladdin's lamp of midnight oil, who could resist the magic of the wonder-worker?

BRYANT'S POEMS.—His poetry overflows with natural religion—with what Wordsworth called the religion of the woods. This reverential awe of the Invisible pervades all his verses, and imparts to them a sweet solemnity which must affect all thinking hearts.

WHITTIER'S POEMS.—Whittier is the most thoroughly American of all our native poets. Few poets have written so entirely for the greatest happiness of the greatest number.

BARON MUNCHHAUSEN.—The original Munchhausen was a German officer in the Russian service, who served against the Turks. He told the most extravagant stories about the campaign till his fancy completely got the better of his memory, and he believed his own extravagant fictions. The wit and humor of these tales are simply delightful.

ARABIAN NIGHTS.—The oriental fairyland, over which Queen Shehrazad reigns, is now and always will remain a classic.

WAVERLY.—Scott is just one of the poets (we may call poets all the great creators in prose and verse) of whom one never wearies just as one can listen to Beethoven, or watch the sunrise or the sunset day by day with new delight.

ROB ROY.—(Scott.) Everybody's favorite. Scott speaks of Rob as "The Robin Hood of Scotland, the dread of the wealthy but the friend of the poor."

COOPER'S THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS.—In his productions every American must take an honest pride; for surely no one has succeeded like Cooper in the portraiture of American character, or has given such glowing and eminently truthful pictures of American scenery.—W. H. PRESCOTT.

BENJ. FRANKLIN.—Never was the Arabian Nights read with greater zest than Franklin's Autobiography, and when I had finished it I began and read it all over again. It is this book that had the most influence upon my life.—J. L. GILDER.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.—How happy that this the most moral of romances is not only the most charming of books, but also the most instructive!—CHALMERS

ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND.—(By Lewis Carroll,) with 42 illustrations by Tenniel, 1 vol.

JANE EYRE.—An English classic. A masculine vigor and originality pervade the work. This individuality of character and description constitutes the attraction and the value of the novel. The scenes are drawn with piquancy and power.

EAST LYNNE; or THE EARL'S DAUGHTER.—Mrs. Wood's masterpiece, highly wrought, intensely interesting, a story of love, passion, and sacrifice, has been successfully dramatized.

TWENTY THOUSAND LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA.—By Jules Verne. Perfectly enchanting story, full of the most exciting incidents, relates travels partly under the water, and around the globe, etc. The writer's wonderful imagination has, in many instances, anticipated actual scientific discoveries.

TOUR OF THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS.—Entertaining story of an English gentleman, who made a wager to make a trip around the world within eighty days. It is as exciting a story as ever was written, as our hero experienced hair-breadth escapes and had to overcome serious obstacles.

FIVE WEEKS IN A BALOON.—Of all writers for the young, Verne occupies the first rank. He is always interesting on account of his wonderful flights of imagination, which just touch the borderland of truth.

GULLIVER.—The most original and extraordinary of all Swift's productions. While courtiers and politicians recognized in the adventures of Gulliver many satirical allusions to the court and politics of England, the great mass of readers saw and felt only the wonder and fascination of the narrative.

ÆSOP.—Æsop, born in the sixth century before Christ, while traveling through Greece, recited his home truths. He did not write his fables, but they were easily remembered, became universally popular, and were passed on from mouth to mouth, and from generation to generation.

POE'S TALES.—Are admired very much for their ingenuity and powerful though morbid and gloomy painting.

VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.—By Oliver Goldsmith. One of the most delicious morsels of fictitious compositions on which the human mind was ever employed.—SIR WALTER SCOTT.

EMERSON'S ESSAYS.—A handsome edition of the essays of our greatest philosopher and poet. Printed from large type on good paper.

GENERAL ISRAEL PUTNAM.—By George Canning Hill. A romantic life of one of the patriots of the Revolution, "Old Put," full of deeds of boldness and bravery.

Friends desiring to act as agents will have one of these books sent as a sample for canvassing purposes for forty cents.

Address FREETHOUGHT, 838 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.

Address, The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

In After Days.

In after days when grasses high
O'er top the stone where I shall lie,
Though ill or well the world adjust
My slender claim to honored dust,
I shall not question or reply.

I shall not see the morning sky;
I shall not hear the night wind sigh;
I shall be mute, as all men must

In after days!

But yet, now living, fain were I
That some one then should testify,
Saying: "He held his pen in trust
To art, not serving shame or lust."
Will none then let my memory die

In after days!

"You will notice," said the manager of the company, as he stepped in front of the curtain, "that the programme says that seven years are supposed to elapse between the second and third acts. In this case there will be no supposition about it. The sheriff of this county has just taken possession of the stage, and I think that it will be about seven years before we can get the matter settled. The audience is now dismissed."

A TEXAS clergyman who at a former period of his life had gambled a little, was absorbed in thought just before divine service began. He was approached by the organist, who whispered, referring to the opening hymn: "What shall I play?" "What kind of a hand have you got?" responded the absent-minded clergyman.

PRINTING!

Having procured one of the best Presses manufactured and a large assortment of display type, and employing competent workmen, the Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; 7 ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. A 1 elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic, engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Hardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

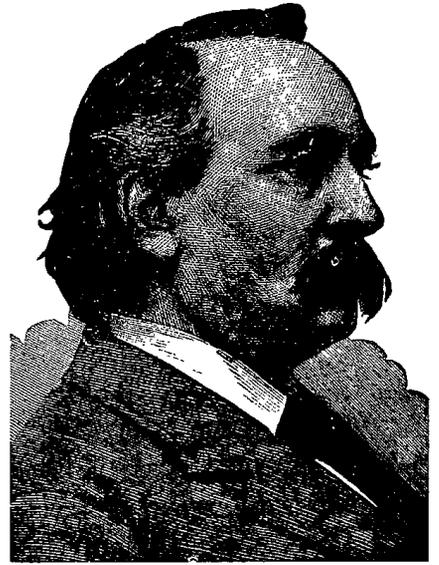

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks. Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50

FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY, 338 Howard St., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE - VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT.

"Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

—BY—

W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.

The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO. 838 Howard St., San Francisco.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay St., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science..... 1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization..... 2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols..... 4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species..... 2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses..... 1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals..... 2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty..... 1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities..... 1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours..... 1.75
 The Moon..... 2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles..... 2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc..... 2.00
 Universal Progress..... 2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic..... 2.00
 Education..... 1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science..... 1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease..... 1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life..... 1.75

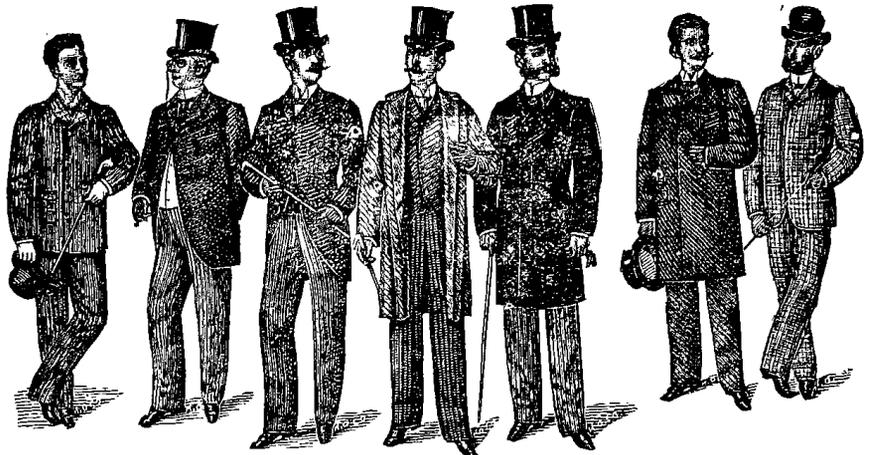

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Martel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederic Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,
 A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Mulla, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.

OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
 For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"Bible Contradictions," 15 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.

Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

The Truth Seeker Annual

AND

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC.

1890—(E.M. 290).

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS: Calander for 1890. Freethought in the United States, 1889. Faded Flowers (poem) By J. E. Remsburg. The Inauguration of the Bruno Statue, by T. B. Wakeman. Mostly Fools W. Stewart Ross (Saladin). Record of the Spanish Inquisition. Dates of the Fabrication of some Roman Catholic Dogmas. The Boiler House Mystery. Nearly a Tragedy, with a moral. Helen H. Gardner. The Middle Ages, Illustrated.—The Priest, the Supernatural World, the Reformation, Future Terrors. The Inventions of Science and the Inventions of Christianity. Illustrated. Freethought Journals in the United States. In Search of a Spirit, E. M. Macdonald. Why I Left the Church, Hugh O. Pentecost. 115 pages, price 25 cents.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Sienker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

All the Alphabet.

Recently a clipping from the Albany Argus appeared in the "Call" giving a sentence containing all the letters of the alphabet. H. W. Murray, of Calistoga, adds the three following to the list: "The quick brown fox jumps over a lazy dog," "John quickly extemporized five tow bags," and "J. Gray: Pack with my box five dozen quills."

A CONNECTICUT newspaper, in speaking of the death of an editor, says: "He was a high-winded gentleman, a pungent writer, and valued his principles more than he did his wife."

A WOUNDED Irishman wrote home from the hospital, and finished up saying, "I am for this country. I bled for it, and I shall soon be able to say I've died for it."

"WHY is Miss B— wearing black?" "She is in mourning for her husband." "Why, she never had a husband!" "No; that is why she mourns."

OLD Churchman—How do you stand on the infant damnation theory? Liberal Minister—With both feet, and jumping.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard street, San Francisco.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm, large profits, quick sale, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 242 Broadway, N. Y.

FREETHOUGHT,

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

W. S. BELL's "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 20.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal. as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 17, 1890.

EDWARD BELLAMY has written a letter denying that he wrote "Looking Backward" as a satire on Socialism. He thinks the book itself is a sufficient answer to the imputation.

GEO. H. DAWES organized a Secular Union at the Kruse school-house, near Wilsonville, Or., April 20. The Union starts out with twenty-four members, and with Albert Kruse as president.

THE Sunday-law movement is still active, and a convention of evangelical churches in the interest of "Sabbath" observance and to devise ways and means to secure a state Sunday law is called to meet in the First Presbyterian church at San Jose May 20.

THE Catholic "Monitor," in deprecating universities for higher education, asserts that "our divine Lord judges men regardless entirely of their educational acquirements." We should think so from the "educational acquirements" of the average Catholic.

MOSES HULL was mentioned in last Monday's Chronicle as "The Inspired Moses Dow." If the reporter had given more thought to the doctrines of the man whose surname he has bestowed upon Mr. Hull, he might not have committed this offense against accuracy.

POVERTY-STRICKEN and priest-ridden Ireland sent to the pope last year, in Peter's pence alone, twenty-six thousand dollars. Subscribers of funds for the "cause of Ireland" might simplify matters by forwarding their contributions direct to the Vatican. "He that giveth to the poor Irish lendeth to the pope."

PRESBYTERIANISM is on the decline in San Francisco. Not a church has been organized in the city during the past eight years, and although the population has increased rapidly, the total membership of that denomination has fallen off about one hundred. The Presbyterians should make haste to revise their creed while they have a quorum.

BILL NYE got off an unusually good thing in his last letter to the press. Speaking of a Wallula man whom he knew he says: "He was a good man, but he was thoroughly sincere. He was what you might call an outspoken man, and said what he thought at all times. He was an eccentric man also. An Englishman once asked him about our Constitution. 'I am told,' said he, 'that God is not in your Constitution.' 'No,' said this plain man, 'he is not in it.' It was slangy, but expressive."

BOSTON offers the latest example of queer attempts to regulate drinking. The police commissioners have prohibited the sale of liquor over bars, which makes it incumbent on the liquor dealer to furnish chairs and tables in his saloon at which his customers may be served. It will please that class of drinkers who enjoy spending their time in barrooms and looking long upon the wine when it is red and the beer when it is dead.

BENNETT, the bicycle prophet who rode through the streets of Oakland warning the inhabitants to flee from the earthquake to come, is still firm in the faith that his prophecy was all right. Before the day of doom he got as far away as Maryville, Mo., whence he now writes to a friend: "I am glad you did not go down on the 14th, as I feared you would. Make haste and get saved ere the day comes when we will stand before the judgment bar of God. The prophecy can never fail." Mr. Bennett is quite safe in claiming the prophecy will not fail—as he would be in saying that a man's head cannot be cut off after he has been decapitated.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, May 18, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Alfred Cridge; subject, "The Relativity of Reforms."

THE LECTURES AT LIVERMORE.

Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel and S. P. Putnam lectured at Livermore May 6 and 7. There was a good attendance, the Hon. James Beazell presiding.

On the first evening S. P. Putnam lectured on the nature of Freethought, Liberalism, Secularism, and Infidelity. Mrs. Krekel followed with an address on "The New and the Old."

Notwithstanding the stormy weather there was a much larger attendance on the second evening. Mrs. Krekel spoke on "Natural Morality Superior to Theological Restraint." S. P. Putnam followed with a speech upon organization and the Sunday question. So much interest was aroused that it was determined to have another lecture by Mrs. Krekel on Thursday evening.

These were the most successful Freethought meetings ever held in Livermore. Mrs. W. Jordan and Miss E. B. Pitney furnished delightful music for the occasion, which was received with enthusiastic applause. Mrs. Charles Ginger and other ladies decorated the hall with beautiful flowers.

Since last year John Bating has died, a soldier of the German war and a staunch Freethinker. Mrs. John Bating kindly entertained the Secular Pilgrim. The generous hospitality of Mrs. W. Jordan was extended to the lady lecturer. Thanks are due E. G. Brand, Theodore Gorner, George Bastian, M. S. Palmer, and others for kindly attentions. The country about Livermore is in splendid condition. There is promise of a fine harvest. The Liberals of this place believe in the future of Freethought and are ready for the work.

S. P. P.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

We wish to again call the attention of the Liberals of the coast to the claims of the Freethought Publishing Company upon their support. They need only to look over the local field of Liberalism to recognize that since the establishment of this paper a great advance has been made, and an impulse given to the movement which it has never felt before. Organizations have been formed, hundreds of lectures given, meetings held regularly in San Francisco, thousands of books distributed, and a quarter of a million copies of FREETHOUGHT sent over the country.

The organization of the Freethought Publishing Company is another step, to which nearly two hundred persons have contributed to a greater or less extent. The Company is incorporated and is selling shares at $5 each. There should be a great many more shareholders than there now are—five to one—for the more shareholders the more interest in the enterprise. The capital stock of the Company is $20,000. Until that amount shall have been disposed of it is hoped that assessments will be avoided, and then they will be unnecessary, since the paid-in capital would place the business on an assured basis.

The directors invite every Liberal to become a stockholder in this Company.

AN INFAMOUS SENTENCE.

A legal crime that calls loudly for reparation has recently been committed at Topeka, Kansas. For publishing a letter from a correspondent, the editor of "Lucifer" has been sentenced to five years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of three hundred dollars. The history of judicial tyranny hardly recites a greater outrage than this. Compared with the enormity of the sentence, the offense charged sinks wholly from sight, or appears almost as a virtue. Nothing that could be put upon paper, except the signature of the judge to the sentence, could merit such punishment.

If the Markland letter was unfit for publication, and if in printing it an offense was committed against the people of the United States and their dignity, "ten dollars or ten days" might have been imposed and the case dropped. Such a sentence would have discouraged the publication of more matter of the same kind. It would still have been an injustice, because the publication complained of was not obscene; but it would have spared the world the spectacle of a United States court degraded to the level of the Spanish Inquisition and disgraced by the perpetration of inhuman cruelty.

Judge Foster, who inflicted the sentence, is not fit to sit upon the bench and administer the law. He has no appreciation of human rights. He does not know the difference between crime and virtue. Placed in office to punish criminals, he passes an infamous sentence upon a man whose life is devoted to eradicating crime. Judge Foster cannot show, and none of the witnesses claimed, that Moses Harman ever injured any human being. There was no complainant, except that artificial creature, the government, represented by a creature of Anthony Comstock. An offense was charged—but an offense against who or what? It was not shown that Moses Harman's "crime" had any victim or any object. In the "opinion" of somebody or other such publication might tend to injure, in some undefined way, some person into whose hands it was likely to fall. On these supposititious grounds an indictment was found by that relic of the Star Chamber, a grand jury, a conviction reached by twelve men laboring under superstitious reverence for law just or unjust, and sentence passed by a Jack-the-Ripper in ermine.

We have, then, a man guilty of no crime, and of no fault except that of indiscretion, convicted, sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, and burdened with a fine which he is unable to pay. There can be no new trial, since the judge has overruled that motion. The case may be appealed, but meanwhile the victim is in jail and wearing a felon's garb. Liberty is crushed to earth, and the whole weight of the governmental incubus is employed to keep her from rising. It is a most shameful state of affairs to exist in a country called civilized.

RELIGION IN POLITICS.

The appended letter, published in the Bandon, Or., "Recorder," is self-explanatory, but it may be proper to say that Mr. J. D. Garfield, of Marshfield, candidate for representative to the Oregon legislature, is the man against whom the Rev. Mr. Deric's remarks were directed:

"REV. MR. DERIC, Dear Sir: I have learned, from a reliable source, that you, on Tuesday evening, the 18th inst., in the German Baptist church at Myrtle Point, in a sermon you then delivered, made the following assertion: 'There is a man now running for office in the county who said a few days ago that when he dies he does not want any praying preachers around his bedside. I shall not vote for that man, and I advise all Christians not to vote for him.'

"This implies that the candidate in question either has no right to publicly announce his desires of his own deathbed, or having expressed himself relative thereto, he is not entitled to the suffrages of Christians.

"I believe that you do not voice the sentiments of consistent Christians in this matter, and made the assertion without considering its injustice and its consequences. Religion is not a qualification for office, yet you are using the pulpit of other churches than your own, and making it a public issue. It may probably be with your own church. You are using your influence as a minister to prejudice those susceptible against certain candidates, and for no other reason than a difference in religious convictions. Self-preservation and devotion to principle forbid us to overlook this injustice, and unless you publicly announce to the contrary, and make some apology, we must under the circumstances consider this an issue, and regret that it has been forced upon us, although we do not fear the result.

J. HENRY SCHROEDER,

"President of the Coquille Secular Union. Arago, April 25, 1890."

THAT BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

Three weeks ago FREETHOUGHT published a communication from "A Stockholder" proposing a plan for increasing the circulation of the paper and extending the usefulness of its work. As there may be some who have not read this proposition, we here reproduce its most important portion:

"I move, then, Messrs. Editors and Shareholders in the Freethought Publishing Company—and this is the substance of my proposition—that, beginning with the month of May, every one of these two hundred good men and true women pledge himself or herself to forward to the office of FREETHOUGHT, on the first of every month, the name and address of a new six months' subscriber, accompanied with one dollar to pay for the subscription. No matter, friends, if the dollar does come out of your own pocket, though if you can collect it from the subscriber, so much the better; but send the name and the dollar anyway, and do it every thirty days. There is sure to be among your acquaintances one person for every month of the year who ought to read the paper. All your public officials—every member of Congress, all representatives, senators, mayors, and supervisors should receive it weekly; also your local clergymen and district school-teachers.

"In this way you will increase the circulation of our paper, which is your paper, two hundred per month; and almost before you know it FREETHOUGHT will have a larger circulation than any other weekly journal on the Coast. Its advertising columns will command a remunerative price; the sale of books will grow in proportion, and the opinions of our contributors will be regarded as worth quoting. In three or four years the property of the Freethought Publishing Company will be valued at ten thousand dollars, and your shares of stock, with a face value of five dollars, will be worth more than a government bond of the same denomination.

"Now, let the Secretary hear from every shareholder, including the Directors. Exempt none from the performance of this duty. Within one month two hundred new names should be on the list of FREETHOUGHT; and this should be repeated every month for five years."

Realizing that there may be some whose means will not admit of their making this investment, "A Stockholder" provides that others with more means may do twice as much.

This, as all must see, is a plain business proposition, that a paper having the circulation which FREETHOUGHT would acquire by the plan outlined must become valuable property worth every dollar invested, and yielding good returns. In another light, the enterprise would be equally successful; that is, it would do a missionary work among those now not sufficiently interested to subscribe.

We are glad to report that several stockholders have responded, indorsing the plan, and that none oppose it. What we need, however, is to hear from all who hold certificates of stock in the Company. A half dozen, or a score, or three score, cannot fulfill the conditions of the enterprise. Besides, if they could it would not be fair, as those who are to share the profit will want to be sharers of the investment that is to insure it. It is necessary that all bear a hand—that the scheme be voted upon by every stockholder; so that it may be either carried or abandoned. Why should not the verdict be rendered at once, and favorably?

"The recent occurrences in Wisconsin," says the New York "Journal of Commerce," "have given us some hope that a wise and thoughtful people everywhere will come to see that a state without a church cannot undertake the education of its children from the public funds." We see no reason for such a conclusion. State schools in America have been successfully conducted for a century without a recognized state church, and statistics show that our so-called "godless" schools produce a better class of citizens than the schools under religious control. If taxing all alike for the benefit of secular schools is found to be unjust, the tax might be abolished and the schools supported by voluntary contributions; but the matter would be made a hundred times worse by taxing the unbeliever to pay for the teaching of what he regards as superstition. The real reason why the church objects to public schools is because she is not in favor of popular education, which is the great enemy of credulity. Religion taught in the schools and attendance made compulsory would be exactly equivalent to enforced attendance upon religious service. If the "Journal of Commerce" is ready for that step it is ready for a religious despotism.

At the Episcopal convention in this city last week, says an evening paper, "a committee consisting of the Revs. Miel and Emery, Mr. Highton and Judge Stoney, was appointed to secure the amendment of the state laws so that they would not conflict with the church canons." The nature of the state laws that conflict with the church canons was not made public, but an ecclesiastical lobby at Sacramento cannot but be regarded as an undesirable institution.

THE Rev. Thomas Chalmers Easton, of the Calvary Presbyterian church, preached last Sunday on the subject of mediums. He thought the "civil law" should be employed to suppress Spiritualism. Just so, Mr. Easton; if any person disagrees with you, put him in jail. You will find it much easier than answering him, especially if that person be Mr. Moses Hull, who is just aching to debate with you on Bible Spiritualism.

In spite of Gladstone's faith in the "rock of Genesis," he does not believe in government support of religion. He has recently supported the motion of Mr. Cameron in the House of Commons to disestablish and disendow the church of England. The motion was rejected by a vote of 256 to 218.

THE school committee of Providence, R. I., has decided to banish the Bible and devotional exercises from the city schools. Whether the committee is controlled by Secular or Catholic principles is not stated, but either way it is a move in the right direction.

ATTENTION of subscribers in arrears is urgently directed to the date upon the wrapper of their paper; also to the notices which we have sent out. Renewals are always in order.

OUR patrons are reminded that job printing is done at this office. If you can't call, drop us a card and your orders will be filled.

OBSERVATIONS.

Vice-President Eastman shaped the course of events at the meeting of the Freethought Society last Sunday night, and, after a beautiful song by Miss Ballou, introduced the speaker of the evening, Mattie P. Krekel, with an elegant speech. Mrs. Krekel had spoken during the afternoon at Oakland to a small and select audience, but lacked none of her accustomed vigor on that account.

Mrs. Krekel's subject was "The Religion and the Church of the Future." Protestantism, she said, had lost all of those attributes which were supposed to lie at the foundation of a church, and was clothing the skeleton of ecclesiasticism with the habiliments of Rationalism. It admitted human reason into the arena of religion, and its days were numbered. The Catholic church, on the other hand, still maintained the carnality of reason and claimed supreme authority over the human mind; but as Thomas Paine said, the throne and altar derived support from each other, and when the divine right of kings began to be questioned, the authority of the pope was also brought into the discussion. People were beginning to see that priestcraft was as indefensible as kingcraft, and that religious liberty was as much an inalienable right as political liberty. What Rationalism was doing for the Protestant church rebellion against authority was doing for the Catholic church, and both churches must go, to be replaced by the religion and the church of the future, whose creed would have three articles: Health, happiness, and morality. Mrs. Krekel closed with a well-wrought peroration.

When the floor was opened for discussion, Mr. Thomas Curtis took occasion to say on behalf of the Freethought Society, that all present wished the eloquent advocate the most unbounded success in her Liberal work.

Mrs. Ballou, following, wished to echo the grand words spoken by the lecturer. It was woman mentally enslaved that kept the church alive, and woman emancipated was the hope and strength of Freethought.

Mr. Geo. Cummings observed that he had missed the presence of our distinguished friend, Patrick Healy. He would therefore endeavor to take Mr. Healy's place. In pursuance of this object, Mr. Cummings declared that Martin Luther did more harm than good, because in his day hell was not regarded as a terror, since the church was selling indulgences cheap whereby the penalties of sin could be evaded. Luther opposed indulgences and rehabilitated hades. Mr. Cummings went on to say that this country would not be free while the Chinese were subjected to a tyranny worse than the negro ever suffered, and that though we had no standing armies, we were paying in pensions money enough to maintain all the armies of Germany. Mr. Cummings also made other remarks.

Mrs. Krekel closed the discussion with a plea for the political equality of women, which she believed would lead to their mental independence.

Alfred Cridge is the speaker for next Sunday evening, his subject being "The Relativity of Reforms."

I am informed that Mr. H. Tintrop contemplates taking legal measures against the writer of "Observations" for exposing his plagiarism of a well-known German poem, which Mr. Tintrop translated and published as his own under the title of "Mankind." Without denying that "Mankind" is identical in thought and expression with "Verzweifelung," Mr. Tintrop affirms that it is not a plagiarism. He argues thus: There is nothing new under the sun. There are no original thinkers, and thought is common property. Therefore he had a right to use the German poet's ideas. The charge of employing another's language Mr. Tintrop dismisses still more lightly, for, he says, "Verzweifelung" is in German, while "Mankind" is in English, and how could the language of the one be the language of the other? Avaunt, avast, go to! says Mr. Tintrop; and I am left without a peg whereon to hang my hat. If the outraged author could make a jury see the case as I now see it, there is no doubt that I should be found guilty and condemned to write "Observations" during the term of my natural life.

If Mr. B. R. Tucker continues to develop the attribute of prudence after the promising fashion revealed by the last issue of "Liberty," his motto will need to be qualified somewhat as follows:

For always in thine eyes, O Liberty,
Shines that high light whereby the world is saved,
And though thou slay me will I trust in thee,
Except as hereinafter mentioned and set forth.

ARGUMENT.

It is questionable whether determined and cool-headed men who are pushing a plan of campaign which they think the only one likely to succeed are called upon to endanger that plan of campaign and therefore their cause by sallying forth to the aid of every rash comrade who precipitates an ill-timed and misplaced conflict.

Mr. Tucker is plainly right; but his motto is wrong. When Liberty slays those who trust in her, it shows that she is a fickle goddess and unworthy of confidence. But liberty is not in the slaying business; it is tyranny that does the killing. Better live to fight for liberty and against tyranny than die a premature death, however glorious.

Here is a gem from the Golden Gate. It is supposed to be a portion of the late argument between Messrs. Putnam and Hull:

HISTORY OR OPINION?—Samuel P. Putnam: Oh, that don't prove anything—that's only history, and what is history but man's opinion. Gibbon's "History of England" is only Gibbon's opinion of it. He did not know anything about it.

Moses Hull: Well, perhaps it isn't true, then, that we whipped England.

In endeavoring to make his hearers recognize the difference between scientific knowledge and the opinions of scientific men, Mr. Putnam instanced the fact that history is not science, which he illustrated by saying that Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" could be admitted only as Gibbon's opinion about the said decline and fall. At that time Mr. Putnam had not heard of Gibbon's "History of England," wherein it is related that "we whipped England;" so I feel bound in duty to correct the Golden Gate and to inform the fly young man who is conducting it in the absence of an editor, that he is mistaken. Mr. Gibbon omitted to write his "History of England" while in the flesh, and if he has atoned for that oversight since his death, Mr. Hull might have made a strong point by producing it when Mr. Putnam asked what the spirits had ever added of value to the literature of this world. The Golden Gate's "History of England," by Gibbon, should be in everybody's library, side by side with Mr. Wegg's "Decline and Fall Off."

I seldom make a pun, because it is hard to think of them, and then they do not always convey the exact truth. Otherwise I might say that at the close of the debate Samuel had left Moses Hulldown in the distance.

The "Evening Report" finds fault with these lines from Theodore O'Hara's "Bivouac of the Dead:"

On Fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

The writer in the "Report" declares that when soldiers have spread their tents they are not bivouacking, since to bivouac is to pass the night in the open air. This is what I call hyper-criticism. The poet's evident meaning when he uses the word bivouac is that the warriors are bivouacking through the night of death, awaiting the last reveille, which, in poetry, is an admissible fiction. The "Report" should have reserved its strictures for the first two lines of the eighth stanza:

Full many a norther's breath has swept O'er Angostura's plain—

Here the critic might have urged that since no norther or other person ever takes Angostura plain, but employs it for flavoring less concentrated fluids, the idea of the breath sweeping over it undiluted is a capital error. In this way the "Report" might at least have shown originality, the criticism which it makes being almost as old as the poem itself, and efficiently met in the May number of the "Century" by Robert Burns Wilson.

The case of the Rev. Dr. Stratton, who has resigned the presidency of Mills College under the charge of having committed a kiss upon the person of a female subordinate, is leading to extraordinary ramifications. Dr. Stratton, it is understood, admits the fact that a kiss took place, the only question being as to its character. The specific osculation which precipitated the trouble is alleged to have occurred after the recipient had retired for the night, and is not claimed to have differed essentially from the ordinary article; but the young lady stoutly avers that it was accompanied by embraces administered in such a way as to leave no doubt of some ulterior intention. The embrace and the intention are what Dr. Stratton denies. It seems that the complainant was practically a member of the clergyman's family, and on grounds of great familiarity with its members. On retiring she was in the habit of kissing Mrs. Stratton, and also Dr. Stratton, of course with his consent and the acquiescence of Mrs. S. The room occupied by complainant contained a telephone, which President Stratton had frequent occasion to consult. It was ostensibly for this purpose that he entered the room on the night in question. The apartment is said to have been insufficiently lighted, and this fact, added to the absent-mindedness which is known to accompany great genius and to result from habits of pious abstraction, may have caused the reverend gentleman to mistake the young lady's face for the telephone. Hence the contact; and the movement interpreted as undue familiarity might have resulted from a well-meant attempt on the clergyman's part to ring up the central office. If Dr. Stratton would advance this plea instead of seeking to prove an alibi or demanding an investigation, his vindication would be triumphant.

If money when raised is to be applied according to the dictation and the religious wishes of those who believe in the Bible and religious instruction, then justice demands that it shall be raised by taxation only upon those persons.—American Sentinel.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

This is the tenth week of the San Francisco ironmolders' strike, and there is no change in the situation.—Robert Willis, the evangelist who has been in the habit of preaching to the inmates of the county jail, is charged by his wife with extreme cruelty and conspiracy to have her committed to the insane asylum.—Numerous sites for the new San Francisco post-office are reported in the papers, but the reports are not verified by the commission. A possible location for the building is Howard and Second sts., two blocks from FREETHOUGHT office.—The Rev. Mr. Hyde, Protestant missionary at Honolulu, declares that the leprosy of Father Damien, the Catholic missionary, was due to his vices and personal uncleanness. Robert Louis Stevenson has written a letter contradicting the Rev. Mr. Hyde.—The Senate has agreed to the action of the House respecting the bill extending the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Sacramento to $300,000.—The ordinance recently introduced by Supervisor Bingham and finally passed by the board of supervisors providing that "it shall be unlawful for any Chinese to locate, reside, or carry on business within the limits of the city and county of San Francisco, except within the district bounded by Kentucky street, First avenue, I street, Seventh avenue, and Railroad avenue," will go into operation Saturday, May 17. Chief Crowley of the police says that the ordinance will certainly be enforced.

Superintendent Porter has sent an important order to all supervisors of the census, in which he says: "It has been brought to the attention of the superintendent of the census that city councils and boards of trade of certain Western cities have appropriated sums to aid their census supervisors in enumerating the population. While it may be urged by some that such proceeding is legitimate and merely to help the government to obtain a fair and full enumeration, I am compelled to look upon it as an almost irresistible temptation to fraud, and will consequently endanger an honest count of the people."—The municipal officers of Edgerton, Kan., all of whom are women, threaten to resign because the men refuse to carry out measures which they recommend.—George Francis Train, who left Tacoma recently on a trip around the world, has embarked from London for New York. If nothing unforeseen happens to him he will beat all previous records.—A tornado tore through the city of Akron, O., last week, demolishing seventy-five buildings and injuring many persons.—Vaccination at sea has been declared by a number of New York doctors as more dangerous than smallpox, and Cunard passengers who claim that they are suffering from blood poisoning in consequence of being vaccinated on ship-board have brought suits against the great steamship line.—The poorhouse at Utica, N. Y., burned last week and a score of inmates perished in the flames.—One hundred lunatics lost their lives in the burning of the insane asylum at Longue Pointe, Can.—Miss Mary Frances Cusick, the "Nun of Kenmare," who left the Catholic church some time ago, is now held up in the light of a fraud. She collected money at Pittsburg, Pa., for a book, and then disappeared.—Ex-Priest Martin, of Montreal, who became a Protestant in order to marry, has deserted his wife and children, leaving them destitute, and returned to the Catholic church.

ETERNAL LIFE.

My Christian friend, the visions of prophet and saint are but distorted shadows of the real—the wild morning-dream of a mind that is not awakened to the truth. They knew not what they said, and we are deceived by their language. God did not make the world in six days, and the mornings and the evenings of the first days were neither mornings nor evenings. He did not go before Israel in a pillar of fire, and the sun and the moon did not stand still on the day when the Lord fought for Israel. God is not the monster of Christian theology, and heaven is not a place of persons and things, but something grander than that. It is not probable that we will exist as personal beings after death, and after all it is not desirable. Surely no true soul could enjoy a heaven with his brother in the fires of hell. My friend, if we have pure hearts we will not wish to meet those we love in the palace of a tyrant who is ever clamoring for honor and praise, but we will rejoice in the thought that when death comes our personality dissolves and we unite in the great being, to mingle forever and forever as elements in the universal body.

Surely it is not reasonable to think we can live a personal life beyond the grave, for even in this life we are not absolute individuals. This collection of force and matter that makes up each of us is like a wave of water and the wind that drives it. The wave moves onward, not as the same mass of water, nor is it pressed onward by the same mass of air, the water changes for every wave length, and as the particles of air that move faster than the water disappear their work is taken up by others, and these are followed by others still; thus the wave goes on, being a manifestation of a life that is universal and not individual.

My individuality is but a wave, and my life but a wave motion. My body crumbles away every day, and is created anew every day; my soul grows, changes, and is "born anew." I have not the same body, I have not the same spirit I had when a child. I am not an absolute individual. My individuality is a storm-driven wave on the sea of life, and when the storm ceases to rage I pass away to unite more fully with the great whole from which I have come, in which we, indeed, "live and move and have our being," and to which all things belong, forever and ever.

O person-worshiping dogmatist, there is a grander life than an eternal existence of self—it is universal life. And in recognizing and fully grasping this truth we break the chains that hold us prisoners in superstition, and we are left free to run the race that leads to the good of all, for in truth is universal salvation.

My spiritual friend, your hopes may be grand, may have some beauty about them; your imagination may kindle hopes, and hope may grow into an abiding faith that will give you strength in the battle of life and cheer you on the pilgrimage from cradle to grave, but it will never make up for the evil consequences of a belief which is contrary to the evidence before you, nor can it save you from dissolution. Your little individual wave shall not go on forever—on yonder rocks of death it shall break and disappear; you shall throw off the individual and put on the infinite.

If I cannot feel any sentiment toward life beyond the personal, if I cannot see beyond my little self a great whole, and if I cannot in the consciousness of universal life find peace for my soul, it is because I have thought wrongly till my conceptions of life are unnatural, or because from my father I inherited abnormal tendencies, or my mind was perverted while I was yet in my mother's womb, or because in my cradle I was lulled to sleep with songs of superstition that made my soul giddy, "for it is but the weakness of mine eyes that shapes this monstrous apparition." O. L. C.

RELIGION IN THE SCHOOLS OF WASHINGTON.

Art. I., Sec. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Washington reads: "No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise or instruction, or the support of any religious establishment."

Many Liberals supposed that ended Bible-reading and prayers in our public schools. I have been grieved to find this is not so. My severe sickness has sadly hindered the work of our state organization, and now with our forces scattered, all unprepared, the battle is forced upon us.

Last February I visited Lynden, Whatcom county. The weather was intensely severe, yet I secured thirteen names to the Washington Secular Union; and they elected Mr. C. M. Tobiasen, a most highly respected citizen, as their vice-president of the state society. I also organized a local Union. Mr. Tobiasen writes me under date of April 28:

"The Lynden Secular Union is in a flourishing condition, and the members are determined to make a success of it. We have twenty-one members, and several others will join soon. We have had poor success in securing a hall; have been holding our meetings in a store building. But we intend to build a hall by next fall. Mr. Brown and Mr. Delander visited the public school some time ago, and reported to the society that the teachers read the Bible every morning, and then the school repeated the Lord's prayer, after which a gospel hymn was sung. The society decided that I should speak to the directors about it, which I did; they wanted time to consider what they would do about it, which was granted them. They informed me to-day that they would not have the religious exercises and instruction in the public school stopped, and that if I could stop it, to go ahead and do so. It has been decided by the Lynden Secular Union that I report the facts to you for action by the state society."

Thus the issue is forced upon us, and must be met by immediate energetic action, or all the time, means, and labor expended to secure the bill of rights in our state constitution is worse than lost, and we are delivered, bound hand and foot, into the power of the priesthood; our public schools, the bulwarks of our American independence, doomed. The one only hope to save them is to insist on obedience to the letter and spirit of the law, and thus defeat the bigots and fanatics.

Our public schools are for the benefit of all, and their perpetuity depends on keeping them free from all religious worship, exercise, or instruction.

Those who desire to instill Christianity, Mormonism, Buddhism, or any other religion, in the minds of their children have full privilege to do so in their homes, their places of public worship, and Sunday-schools. But our public schools are sacred to the one purpose of affording to all children who attend secular education, fitting them for the discharge of duties of this life as good citizens.

Deeds, not words, must now decide. We cannot go into court without funds to pay legal fees, prepare briefs, retain able counsel, etc. The superior court may decide against us. We must be prepared for all and every emergency, expect the most bitter and powerful opposition, and be fully prepared to appeal or follow the case to the supreme court.

Not alone every principle of right and justice, but the law is plain and unequivocally on our side; yet we have a subtle, wealthy, powerful foe, and shall have a severe struggle. We need at once to raise a fund of $1000. To take any action without being backed by moral and financial support ample and sufficient to insure success would only be to add humiliation to disaster—to court defeat.

The cause at Lynden is your cause, the cause of every Liberal in the entire state, for once the supreme court decision is obtained, all religious exercises or instruction in the public schools of this state end forever. Here is indeed especial emergency. Our hope is in the generous and immediate contributions of those devoted to right and justice. Give as you would if it was your children who were forced to take part in religious worship at school every day, and urge all friends who love liberty and hope for the future of our country to do likewise.

The funds contributed will be reserved as the Defense Fund, and not one dollar of it to be applied to or expended for any other purpose. A full account of all sums received, and an itemized account of all expenditures, will be published in FREETHOUGHT. The board of directors are anxiously awaiting your response.

C. B. REYNOLDS, Sec. Wash. Sec. Union,
2104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

COMMENTS ON THE DAWES AND CAMPBELL DEBATE.

II.

Campbell kept asking, Why don't Infidels go to pagan lands and educate their children? Well, we, in the first place, do not have to, and secondly, if we Infidels did leave the Christians to themselves, their civilizations would soon be a thing of the past. History would repeat itself. The result would be the same as when the Moors were expelled from Spain. Christian countries would undergo retrogression from civilization to Christian barbarism. Campbell challenged Infidels to show a single passage in the Bible that ever caused the death of a human being. If he will look through Numbers he will find this: "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." That sentence was authority for putting to death millions of innocent beings, and no one can deny that the Bible was used by judges at witch trials as authority. Will Campbell deny this? A divine book would rather have taught that a witch does not exist.

Another statement in Campbell's book is, "American Infidelity has but one representative, and he shuns the light of oral discussion." Dawes, in reply, stated that Infidelity has hundreds of representatives, and he was not aware of any of them being afraid of discussion, that he was a representative and he courted discussion. Dawes cast the mantle of charity over this statement by saying that he supposed that when Mr. Campbell wrote that he was not aware that he was mistaken. Campbell did not refer to that in his reply.

In Campbell's book he denies that there is any contradiction between Exodus xxxiii, 11: "The Lord spake unto Moses, face to face, as a man speaketh unto a friend;" and 1 Timothy vi, 16, "and who no man hath seen or can see." Dawes quoted other passages to prove that Moses not only spoke to God face to face, but that he had seen God face to face.

Campbell, in reply, asked, "Did you not, sir, speak to a friend face to face in the dark without seeing him?" Also, that it was God's similitude or representative angel that was seen on those occasions, but with all his artful dodging, the fact remains that the Bible distinctly states that God had been seen face to face, also his back parts.

The similitude statement is as thin as Talmage's statement that God made or created the world out of his omnipotence. Campbell should see to it that when the next revision of the Bible is made, to have the word dark inserted in Exodus xxxiii, 11. Dark would make the meaning light.

Again, in Campbell's book, he denies that God rested and was refreshed, as stated in Genesis ii, 2. It did not mean that God was weary and rested and was refreshed. It was a ridiculous idea that God had to be refreshed. Of course, Infidels agreed with that latter statement. The Bible distinctly states that God rested from his labor and was refreshed, and Campbell sophistically endeavored to compare God's resting to a lawyer when he rests a case. No one but a preacher can see an honest illustration in the comparison. The only comparison I can see is this: A lawyer rests his case, and the opposing lawyer takes it up; and when God rested his case, his opponent, the devil, took up the case, and, according to theology, the devil won the case. Campbell occupied fifteen minutes' time at one time, in replying to something that Dawes did not say, and he signally failed to answer that; he got off on a tangent on immortality. He said that Infidels claimed that immortality was believed in before the Christian era. Campbell did not controvert this, but claimed that it remained for Christ to prove immortality by his resurrection. Here Campbell resorts to his favorite method of meeting a difficulty by making unproven assumptions, making deductions from unsound premises.

The fact is, Christ is not a historical personage, and if Mr. Campbell ever has occasion to prove upon the platform that Christ ever existed, he would find himself involved in a difficulty, from which he could not extricate himself. Christ's existence was disputed at the very time that he is said to have lived. Paul and Barnabas had a bitter quarrel over the crucifixion. Barnabas claimed that Christ was not crucified. Irenæus, in the latter part of the second century, taught that the ministry of Christ lasted twenty years, and that he died at the age of fifty years. The Gnostics were a Christian sect that flourished for the first two hundred years of the Christian era. They denied the corporeal existence of Christ. They believed he existed only as a spirit. Other sects denied his crucifixion and resurrection. There is no evidence to prove that Christ existed or that he was resurrected. Therefore Campbell's deductions from his assumptions have no weight.

Campbell in a dogmatic manner asked the question, Where did the word "immortality" come from if not from the Bible, which teaches an immortal soul? When Campbell has read his Bible more thoroughly with his eyes open he will learn that in the Greek and Hebrew scriptures the words soul and spirit are mentioned sixteen hundred times, but I challenge him to produce the phrase "immortal soul" or "never-dying soul" in the Bible. In fact, the Bible does not teach immortality, and I can prove my position by the testimony of the ablest of divines. I will quote a few:

"The immortality of the soul is supposed or taken for granted rather than revealed in the Bible."—Bishop Tillotson.

"No such doctrine is revealed in the Bible."—Archbishop Whateley.

"The immortality of the soul is not found in the Bible; it is of human origin, but of ancient date—before the Old Testament was published."—Rev. T. Hall.

It is of pagan origin. Plato and other pagan philosophers taught the immortality of the soul, and there is not a dogma, rite, or ceremony in Christianity but what was taught and practiced by pagans hundreds of years before Christ.

The story of Christ was borrowed from paganism. There had been many crucified Christs or saviors hundreds of years before the Christian era who were born of virgin mothers, performed miracles, raised the dead, cured the blind, etc. They were crucified, buried, and resurrected on the third day. Will Mr. Campbell controvert this fact? He cannot do it. Evidence of this fact—pagan saviors—can be taken from the writings of the early Christian fathers, without seeking the undisputed testimony of pagan literature, and other testimony. Space forbids, or I would quote an overwhelming amount of testimony; but any one conversant with the writings of the fathers requires no further proof.

Mr. Dawes showed that the most Christian countries, Russia, Abyssinia, and Spain, produced no great men of science; while countries where Freethought was prevalent, Germany, England, France, and America, produced the Darwins, Huxleys, and other great scientific men. Campbell discreetly failed to notice this point.

Campbell loudly demanded why the Infidels attacked his book. He then proceeded to answer his own question by saying: "My book hit the Infidels hard; it touched them in a soft spot." No, my dear sir, you have answered even your own question wrong. The reason that the Infidel objected to your book was on account of its false statements—statements that you could not support and did not support before the Infidel Dawes, and statements you were requested and did not attempt to substantiate before Underwood, and statements you cannot substantiate in either a written or oral discussion; statements you know you cannot prove.

Again, Campbell complained that the Infidels were trying to suppress his book. That is not true. Whenever he publishes a book that attacks any sect or party he must expect to get hit back. Just as long as he misrepresents Infidels, just so long will he find Infidels who will defend themselves.

In conclusion I will say that personally I regard Mr. Campbell as a friend. He is an industrious, hard-working man, a good neighbor, and a good-hearted, affable gentleman. In this review of the discussion I do not think I have misstated any of his statements. If I have, then he will find an opportunity to correct me, as Freethought papers publish both sides—something that cannot be credited to religious papers, which only publish one side. Freethought lecturers speak upon a free platform and are always ready for and invite discussion—something ministers will not do in their churches.

W. C. CLOW.

Hillsboro, Or.

THE ANCIENT HEBREW LANGUAGE.

"In 1506, at the early dawn of the reformation, John Reuchlin compiled the first dictionary and grammar of any real value (of the Hebrew language), excepting such as had at an earlier period been composed by the Jewish grammarians."—Henry Craik, in Eccl. Mag., April, 1861.

"The vowel points are not very ancient."—Christian Spectator, 1821, vol. iii, p. 236.

"The most sacred copies of the scriptures, which the Jews deposit in their synagogues, are and ever have been without points."—Ibid, p. 237.

"The Old Testament is the only work which remains in the ancient Hebrew, nor have we anything like a lexicon or glossary, composed while it was yet a living language."—Bishop Marsh's Lectures, No. 14.

Godfrey Higgins says: "I am quite certain that I shall be able to show, to prove, that every letter of the Hebrew language has four and probably five meanings." Le Clerc affirms in his Sentium, p. 156, that "the learned merely guess at the sense of the Old Testament in an infinity of places, which produces a prodigious number of discordant interpretations."

St. Jerome says, in his commentary on the fortieth chapter of Ezekiel, that "when we translate Hebrew into Latin we are sometimes guided by conjecture."

"Noah's Ark.—Our version says it was made of gopher wood. Oukelhos translates it as being made of cedar. Castellus says it was juniper. The Arabic commentators declare that it was box-wood. The Persians say it was pine wood. The celebrated Borchart affirms that it was ebony; and Dr. Geddes affirms that it was wicker work, while Dawson says it was made out of bull-rushes daubed with slime."—Cooper's Infidel Text Book, p. 14.

"Vowel points were not invented before the second century. The present Hebrew letters are later than the Christian era."—Giles's Hebrew and Christian Records, p. 107.

"Freethinkers are often criticised for using the phrase, 'the Christian superstition,' when referring to what is commonly known as the Christian religion. But what is the difference, except, as has been said, that religion is superstition in fashion, and superstition is religion out of fashion? The Christian religion has gone out of fashion so far as Freethinkers are concerned, and it is therefore quite proper, under the definition, to refer to it as superstition. But can Christian scholars themselves distinguish between the two? To show that they cannot so distinguish, note the various translations of Acts xvii, 22. The common version has it:

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious."

"The Unitarian version gives this rendering:

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that ye are exceedingly addicted to the worship of demons."

"Archbishop Newcomb thought it should read thus;

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are somewhat too religious."

"And the eminent theologian, Dr. Lardner, translates the text as follows:

"Paul, therefore, standing up in the midst of the Areopagus, said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that ye are in all things very religious."

"If Paul's language was as indefinite as the translations of it, it is no wonder that the men of Athens did not understand him and told him they would see him later. As Robert Taylor observed, 'these various translators discovered more than they meant to, namely, that religion and superstition are convertible terms.'"—FREETHOUGHT.

W. S. BELL.

THE London Freethinker has this paragraph in its "Acid Drops: "We wish Mr. Chainey no harm. He is not a dangerous lunatic, and a Freethinker might say to him, as Uncle Toby said to the fly, 'Surely the world is wide enough for thee and me.' But we regret to hear that he is being recommended as a lecturer to the N. S. S. branches. Of course the branches will do as they please. There is no authority over their choice of lecturers. But a great many Freethinkers will object to our platform being turned into a refuge for cranks, and protest that we do not seek for truth so minutely as to search for it in asylums."

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Benicia, Cal.....	May 18	Fox.....	July 10, 21, 22
Ft. Jones.....	May 20, 21	John Day.....	July 24
Linkville, Or... May 23, 24, 25, 26		Prairie City.....	July 25
Talent.....	May 29, 30	Baker City.....	July 27, 28, 29
Ashland.....	June 1	Union.....	July 30
Shedd.....	June 3, 4	Summerville.....	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Brownville and Coburg..	June 5 to 8	Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11
Grey's River.....	June 11 to 18	Rosalia.....	Aug. 13
Portland.....	June 23	Plaza.....	Aug. 14
Cascades, Wash.....	June 24, 25	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Fossil, Or.....	June 29	Spokane Falls.....	Aug. 17
Lost Valley.....	July 1	Davenport.....	Aug. 18, 19
Wagner.....	July 2, 3, 4	Buckley.....	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Prineville and vicinity..	July 7 to 16	Tacoma.....	Aug. 25
Monument.....	July 18	Port Townsend.....	Aug. 31
Hamilton.....	July 19

ECCLESIASTICAL VIEWS AND PRACTICE AS TO THE OATH.

II.

Under the Roman code many crimes and injuries were punished by fines paid by the accused persons to the relatives of the person slain or injured. The same principle was embodied in the Christian Anglo-Saxon codes. When the person accused was allowed to deny the charge by his single oath, the relatives of the party slain or owner of the property stolen felt unwilling to be deprived of the legal price due them by the simple oath of the defendant, which might be false. Hence the system of purgation was adopted and the accused required to produce witnesses to swear that they believed his oath to be true—not to swear to facts. This system existed from Southern Italy to Scotland. The church sanctioned it, and demanded that Christians should be allowed to purge themselves by witnesses of the same class with the principal. This was conceded by Charlemagne, who tried Pope Leo III. on a grave charge, and no witness appearing to accuse the pope, he was allowed to clear himself by taking the oath of denial in company with twelve priests or compurgators. Three years afterwards the emperor decreed that in all doubtful cases priests should defend themselves with three, five, or seven compurgators, and this was done with the full consent of the church. In 823, Pope Pascal I., suspected of murder, purged himself by an oath taken with a number of bishops as compurgators.

In the tenth century the people refused to be satisfied with the single oath of a priest accused of crime, and compurgators were required. To save themselves from the ordeal compurgation was adopted as the mode of trial for church members, and was recognized as such in the ecclesiastical canons and writings of ecclesiastical jurists.

In all codes the number of compurgators varied, a large number being required in cases of murder. In 584, when Chilperic I. was assassinated, the legitimacy of his son Clotair was impeached, and Queen Fredegonda appeared at the altar with three bishops and three hundred nobles, who all swore with her as to the legitimacy of the prince, which settled all doubts upon the subject. In 899 Queen Ita in Germany purged herself of an accusation of infidelity by taking a purgatorial oath with eighty-two nobles. In 824 a dispute between the Bishop of Worcester and the Abbey of Berkely was settled by the oath of the bishop supported by fifty mass-priests, ten deacons, and one hundred and fifty other ecclesiastics. In Wales, privy to homicide was divided into three triads or nine grades of guilt. To establish a denial the first triad called for one hundred raitmen or compurgators; the second triad for two hundred; the third triad for three hundred; and for killing with savage violence or by poisoning, six hundred were necessary. The oaths of three hundred of their kindred were required to deny murder, blood, and wound, and there was no possibility of finding them except through the tribal relations which treated the tribe as one family.

The Danish laws of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries required the compurgators to be of his kindred, except when the accused person was allowed to produce twelve other men of good character.

The early Salic law specified that the number of compurgators should be twenty-five chosen equally by both parties. In 803, Charlemagne prescribed seven chosen compurgators, or twelve if taken at random. In an English record of the fifteenth century a defendant was called upon to produce as compurgators six of his neighbors or twelve strangers. In Scotland in the twelfth century the accused could defend himself against his lord with eleven compurgators of good character; but if the king accused him twenty-four of his peers were required. In civil cases twelve were sufficient.

In the Anglo-Saxon code the nature of the crime and the rank of the accused regulated the number and quality of the compurgators. The value of a thane's oath was equal to that of six yeomen. The system of wer-gild, or composition for crime and injuries, created a necessity for valuing the lives of different classes of men in society, and oaths were estimated by a similar scale. Thus a mass-priest's oath and a thane's oath were reckoned as of equal value, as by reason of the seven church degrees acquired by the mass-priest he was held worthy of the thane right. The villain or cearl's wer-gild was valued at 200 solidi, and the thane's at 1200; and the thane's oath was valued at that of six cearls, because if a man should avenge a thane he would be justly avenged on six cearls.

The original form of the purgatorial oath was swearing to the truth of the principal's oath. Under the influence of the church it was modified to be a simple assertion of belief in the truth of the principal's oath. Thus in 1101 two bishops, relieving another from a charge of simony, swore: "So help me, God, I believe that Norgaud, bishop of Autun, has sworn the truth."

Pope Innocent III., about Glanville's time, decreed that compurgators should swear only to their belief in the truth of their principal's oath.

In 1363 Casimir III. decreed that a man of good repute when accused of theft could clear himself by his own oath, but if his character was doubtful compurgation was prescribed; then if he fell short of the prescribed number by one, he should satisfy the accuser, though he should not be rendered infamous for the future. On account of the increase of crime, Casimir IV., a hundred years later, proclaimed that compurgation could be allowed but three times, after which a persistent offender was abandoned to the full severity of the law. An accused person summoned to purgation who appeared without his compurgators was ipso facto pronounced infamous. Twelve compurgators were required to outweigh the oath of the accuser.

According to Bracton, in the thirteenth century, in all actions arising from contracts, sales, donations, etc., where there was no legal proof the plaintiff came into court with his "secta," his friends, and followers—willing to take the oath with him, but not absolutely witnesses; and the defendant was required to produce twice the number of compurgators offered by the plaintiff. In 1363 Edward III. abrogated this rule.

The oath of purgation was maintained to the last by the Inquisition. "Our holy mother church," says Simoncas, bishop of Badajos, a writer of the sixteenth century, "can in no way endure the suspicion of heresy; but seeks by various remedies to cure the suspect. Sometimes she forces them to abjure or to purge themselves, sometimes she elicits the truth by torture, and very often she coerces them with extraordinary punishments." Any suspected person unwilling to clear himself of heresy at the command of the judge was held to be convicted. Canonical purgation, according to the rules of the Inquisition, was required whenever public report created a suspicion of a man and there was no tangible evidence against him. The judge fixed the number of compurgators, who were the peers of the accused, and though he might select them, yet the qualification that they were to be good men and orthodox practically left their nomination to the officials. When summoned, they were examined separately by the inquisitors, then they assembled together, and the accused was brought in. He then took an oath denying the charge. Each compurgator separately took an oath as to his belief in the truth or falsity of the oath of denial, and the sentence was rendered according to the oaths of the majority. W. S. BUSH.

ANOTHER VIEW.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I believe you will permit a difference of opinion, even if it should amount to a criticism, or an implied one, of your own position, so I venture to send you a few words in response to the article from C. Severance published in FREETHOUGHT of date April 26.

I do not know as Mrs. Haight will thank me for presuming to interpret her, but, as I understand her, she was pleased with the admission made by yourself that those who went to the extreme front really so engaged the enemy as to render the work of those who took less extreme positions more effective: and whether it was what she meant or not by "stabbing in the back," if one who thus defies the enemy happens to make an unwise move it seems to me that to call public attention to that move is, in effect, stabbing in the back.

Moses Harman is acknowledged by all to be a good, honest, true man, and it seems to me, and to many others, that those who claim to be interested in the principle for which he is contending can at least keep silence at a time when his personal liberty is imperiled, so far as they may question the wisdom of his methods. I mean silence so far as public censure is concerned.

Mr. Severance is not on trial for his liberty. I can, therefore, criticise him without violating my own standard. That Mr. Harman has dealt in vile and disgusting matter is true; so does every surgeon when he probes an ulcer, and if that surgeon truly believes such probing necessary, he is not only justified in bringing the virulent and disgusting matter to light, but he would be blamable if he did not; and as to violating "the laws of the land," Mr. Severance must first show that the language necessary to portray "disgusting" crimes with the avowed purpose of condemning and removing them is necessarily obscene before he can justly say that Mr. Harman has done so; and if our laws so hedge crime about as to make its exposure a crime, such laws had better be broken than kept.

If Mr. Severance can point to a single law against human rights which has been repealed till some one or more persons has dared to defy it, he can do what I cannot.

The key to the confessional is religious authority, and under its seal of secrecy the most terrible crimes are safe from exposure.

The key to the confessional, which makes the physician the recipient, is professional secrecy, loss of patronage; and thus untold wrong is perpetrated against humanity in the name of professional honor, and to save a fee. Young men may thus, with safety so far as exposure is concerned, poison the very fountains of life, and then marry and transmit to coming generations untold suffering.

Last, but not least, the "obscenity" key has been prepared on purpose to prevent the exposure of crimes committed in the marriage bed. Now shall we, as reformers, make a greater outcry against the exposures of such crimes than against the crimes themselves?

As to the wisdom of any particular move, it cannot always be decided in advance. John Brown's raid was looked upon as madness by many of his best friends even, but a quarter of a century after a prominent minister said, in reference to the tremendous moral power of that act: "When John Brown's body fell it shook the earth." If human progress is the object of our life work, and we choose to risk martyrdom, surely it is hardly the province of those who do not thus choose to risk so much to pass judgment upon those who do.

Whether Mrs. Haight had read the particular letter or not does not affect the principle involved, and we happen to know that she has since read it, and that her indignation was expressed against the terrible facts, and not against those who dared to tell them.

Fraternally, LOIS WAISBROOKER.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XI.

YE FOREST.

The Forest of Evidences.—The Giants of the Plains.—The Trees of the Forest.—Revelation and Prophecy.—The Guides Rejoicing.—Simon in Difficulties.

1. Now when Simon had escaped from the hole which swallowed up the house of relics and all that was therein, and had returned thanks to the king for his great and wondrous deliverance, the guide showed him a certain forest called the Forest of Evidences, through which the gutter called the Narrow Way passed,

2. Saying, If thou desirest to know for a certainty that thou art in the right way, and that there is a bridge over the river, and a city beyond, then do thou ascend some of yonder trees, and thou wilt be able to see for thyself.

3. So Simon girded up his loins, and went on his way pondering upon what he had seen in the House of Relics, and believing with all his might.

4. Now the forest had been of yore much greater than it now was, for many of the trees had been torn up and destroyed, and many had fallen down of their own accord.

5. For there was no depth of soil there, nor any natural nourishment, but only the dry dust, in which the trees could not take root.

6. And the name of the dust was Piousfraud, and all the trees were planted in it. And there was a very great abundance of dust, more than enough, and much to spare.

7. And the beast called Priestcraft had built here a certain wind machine, which blew the superabundant dust about, so that it got into the eyes of the pilgrims, that they might not see too clearly or too much.

8. And the name of the wind machine was Mystery.

9. And the forest was fenced all round with a fence called Sanctity.

10. And beyond the forest were great and beautiful plains called the Plains of Science, whereon dwelt a race of giants.

11. And the giants were enemies of the beast—Priestcraft—and his hideous crew.

12. And they made unceasing war against the beast and the guides, and were continually encroaching upon the forest, breaking down the fence, and tearing up the trees, and filling up the roadway.

13. For they perceived that great numbers of the people were deluded by the beast and his servants, and spent miserable lives in searching for that which was not to be found, and in seeking for birds in the bushes, and neglecting those they had in their hands.

14. And they were indignant that men should be so cheated of a paradise here, by having held out to them deceptive promises of one to come, for they saw clearly that if men would but cultivate the country that they had, as diligently as they sought for one which they could never reach, they might make a paradise of that which they had.

15. And knowing that there was no city such as the pilgrims sought, they uprooted and brake down the trees, so that they should not be longer deluded, by their magical and devilish glasses, into believing that they could see it.

16. Moreover the whole forest stood in the way of the Car of Freethought, of which they were the heralds and guards, and of which more will be said hereafter.

17. And for this reason also they made war with the beast and his servants, and ceaselessly brake down the fences of the forest, and tore up the trees, and brake the branches.

18. And the giants had certain battering rams, wherewith they battered the trees, by some called Caxtons, and by others presses.

19. And in the plains were many noble and beauteous trees, called Geologos, from which the giants made themselves very excellent cudgels, for the wood was exceedingly hard; others armed themselves with cudgels from trees called Astronomos, and others from trees called Cosmogonos, and others from trees called Chronologos, and others from trees called Ethnologos; and many other trees were there, furnishing good and potent weapons.

20. And among the giants was one whose crest was an image broken, and he had charge of one of the chief battering rams, and played havoc therewith.

21. And another had on his crest an holly and an oak, and did good service.

22. And another had on his crest a gravedigger, or a sexton, and he played hades.

23. And another had on his crest a vault and an hare, and he played Thomas.

24. And another had on his crest a well in the south, and out of that well had much truth been drawn.

25. And besides these were many others, who tended the trees in the plains and made weapons, though they cared not to use them against the beast.

26. And when Simon came up to the forest some of the guides met him, and took him to some of the trees; and Simon made an effort to ascend, and failed, so the guides helped him, and with much ado, gat him up, and he looked and saw nothing; but when he had put on his glasses he thought he saw something darkly.

27. And one of the trees, of which the guides vaunted loudly, was named Apriori; and they said that from the top of this tree those who ascended were able to see the king Jah himself; and many strove to climb, but few got up, for the branches were so interwoven and tied to one another, and so many branches were nailed on to uphold the others, and so many to uphold those that upheld the others, that it was well-nigh—nay, altogether impossible for any to ascend.

28. And when any of the pilgrims essayed to climb this tree, and failed, the guides condoled with them, saying it were pity they could not ascend, for that if they could they would assuredly see the king.

29. And by these means the pilgrims went away satisfied, saying, 'Tis enough if others have seen—thinking the guides had been up and seen.

30. But the guides were no more able to ascend than the pilgrims, though not a few were hardy enough to say they had been up.

31. But they lied, and had not been up. Nay, the guide who boasted he had planted the tree could not himself ascend it, except by means of a ladder called Choppedlogic, which ladder he carefully concealed.

32. And this guide had on his crest two things, whereof one was a pie, and the other I have not forgotten, though I remember it not.

33. And this guide had conceived great affection for the trees and digged and dinged about it unceasingly, and vaunted day and night.

34. But the giant whose crest was a broken image attacked the tree, and showed the nails that nailed on the branches, and the ladder, and laughed the guide to scorn; and the guide was exceedingly angry.

35. And the name of another tree was Aposteriori, and it had been oftentimes pulled up by the roots, by the giants, and was altogether dead, and withered and rotten; but the guides carefully concealed the rottenness, and filched good-looking boughs and green leaves from another tree called Pseudoanalogy, and cemented them on to the other with a certain sticky substance called Mockargument, so that the tree presented a fair appearance to such as had on their glasses, and looked not closely.

36. And the tree was only held in its place by means of the ropes called Sophistries.

37. And the name of another great tree was Revelation, and like the others, it was rotten, and had no root whatsoever, and was held in its place by two other trees, one on each side; and the name of one of these was Prophecy, and of the other Miracle, and they together held up the tree called Revelation, and had much to do, for they themselves were rotten and rootless, and without any strength.

38. And the three trees were all bound together by the ropes called Sophistries, and swayed to and fro under the frequent attacks of the giants, and notwithstanding the ropes wherewith the guides were continually binding them, they became more and more unstable day by day, and will, without doubt, and not long hence, come down to the ground, and great will be the fall thereof.

To be Continued.

GOD.

Grand the expanse of the heavens, but grander the thoughts they suggest;
Lovely the blush of the morning, the crimson and gold of the west;
Bright are the stars of the midnight, floating in measureless space,
But deeper and grander the secret we strive 'mid their brightness to trace.

Fair is this beautiful planet, its carpet of verdure, its seas,
Its mantle of life-giving air, its sunshine, its mists, and its breeze;
Deep the emotions that nature quickens to life in the soul,
But deeper and grander the glimpses we catch of the infinite whole.

Cunning the hand of the artist, a study his thought-chiseled face;
Bewitching the smile of the maiden, entrancing her beauty and grace;
Perfect the cup of the lily, sweet is the breath of the rose,
But deeper and grander the spirit that vainly they strive to disclose.

Wondrous the symbol of being spread out on every hand,
Wondrous the secret of nature, of sky, of the sea, of the land;
Vast is the outward creation, undiscovered by man, and untrod,
Yet ignorance in its presumption familiarly prates about God.

—Eliza Lamb Martyn, in Boston Globe.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL WANAMAKER has ordered the "Word," E. H. Heywood's paper, excluded from the mails. If anybody imagines that we have not in this country as much tyranny as exists elsewhere, it is about time he were undeceived.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MORALISTS.

REPORT OF THE PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE FOR THE MONTH OF APRIL.
SECRETARY'S REPORT.

HEADQUARTERS, Hannibal, Mo., April 30, 1890.

During the month sixty new members have been enrolled and a membership certificate mailed to each. This makes the total number enrolled 1007. The new members are from Ohio 1, Kansas 2, Michigan 8, Pennsylvania 7, Texas 22, Missouri 4, Colorado 4, Illinois 2, Louisiana 7, New Jersey 1, New Mexico 1, South Dakota 1.

The friends who have sent us Liberal papers and encouraging letters are too numerous to mention, but we thank them all, and bespeak a continuation of these favors. The letters do us good, and the papers aid us in our work, and are afterward distributed, we hope, to good advantage.

F. H. RAU, Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from last report	$10 25
L. R. Titus, Cal.	75
Mrs. J. A. Vote, Mich.	50
M. J. Wiley, Ill.	50
W. B. Young, Mich.	1 00
F. B. Moses, Col.	2 00

Total	15 00
Expended	4 25

Balance	10 75
---------	-------

Hannibal.

A. R. AYRES, Treasurer.

A Theologue Gone Right.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Several times during the past two years, I have taken up my pen with the intention of running it completely through some of my rambling thoughts to pin them down for others to dissect and criticise and find fault with; but I have been deterred from so doing by the fear that my intention might be a symptom of the "writer's itch"—a disease that all real thinkers detest with their whole hearts, and detest rightly, too, as that inclination to rush into print often condemns persons to an advocacy in after life of questions that they have proclaimed adherence to in their earlier years. Even now I would not write this letter were it not that I have seen how silence in my case might be a crime, especially the stolid silence I have sustained—silence that has allowed me to be classed among the non-thinkers or Christians. Therefore this letter.

I am a Freethinker, and, what is more, I am a free-speaker. Imagine, then, the depth of my disgust when some sky-pilot asks me to lead in prayer, or when some of the faithful call me the "reverend father" on account of my clerical appearance when I happen to be caught ala mode.

It would be difficult, indeed, for me to try to count the number of times I have been accosted with the question whether I were not a theologian of some denomination, or at least a theological student. All that tends to make me assume less often the garb of the professional gabblers, and more often the unmistakable dress of the working-man, which I am.

At one time—it was about six years ago—I was a student in the Wesleyan University, the hot-bed of Methodism, where I had gone with the intention of being made a saint; and if the sanctification were brought about and I had found no reason to object to God as my maker, destroyer, savior, and judge at once, it was my intention to become a regular preacher. When I had been in that institution about a month, I found that the atmosphere of the holy of holies corralled there was not congenial to my innate sense of right, and, as a consequence, they and myself differed on many questions. I committed the unpardonable crime of thinking. Aye, more! I even dared to say that I did not want to be moulded by such a lot of medicine-men, who distort the judgment more than the feet of the celestial women are distorted by their false customs. As a consequence, I went forth to battle with the word and the devil with "my loins ungirt and my shield undone."

"The half has never been told," nor will it ever be told. I could not, were I to spend hours, tell of the doubts that assailed me in the Lord's "stronghold," but suffice it to say that they were not long in rendering me a complete Infidel. But, even then, I did not know what was the matter with me. It did not seem possible that all the world could go wrong and I be right and alone in my Infidelity. Up to that time I had not been favored with the acquaintance of a single Freethinker, and I thought I stood almost alone with the devil. Colonel Ingersoll was then to me only as a dream of some bright mind in the realm of realism, but how I revered the man and paid voluntary homage to his intellectual and moral worth.

My relations with the world at this point became so irksome that I went to France to live, and stayed about a year in the land filled with Infidels and Atheists. There I discovered that I was not alone, that Colonel Ingersoll is not alone in his intellectual assaults upon superstition.

Since my return to America, my travels across the continent have been made much lighter by the constant presence of some of the many who dare to lift their eyes to heaven without beholding an angry God or a loving God or an all-merciful God, or anything that can possibly inspire fear. I tell you, we are growing and we may well hope that the wisdom of the twentieth century will over-balance its superstition and blind faith.

With respect to you and the body of readers who peruse your journal with hearts attuned to sympathy and wisdom, and the many to whom this is a Declaration of Independence, I have the honor of being,

Yours very truly, FRANK H. DRISCOLL.

San Francisco, May 7, 1890.

The Text-Book.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see my tab marks April 23 as the time to renew. Find inclosed money order for another year. I also wish to say a word for W. S. Bell's "Hand-Book of Freethought." Every Freethinker should have one as a ready reference in debate. The Bible quotations are so well selected and arranged and withal so full, that we have but to turn to the index or the many headings.

Yours truly, C. C. RODGERS.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

MY DEAR MR. BELL: I thank you most heartily for your "Hand-Book of Freethought." I have, as yet, had very little time to examine it; but it does not take long to discover that it is a good thing.

Now, that is saying a good deal for I have read books on theological topics that took more time and energy that I could command to find out what they were written for, where they were going, and what they were going there for, not to mention when they expected to get there. Now in this book of yours the object is quite clear, the aim good, and you don't appear to spend much time before you fire the shot. I like that. Directness and simplicity are worth more, when you honestly want to get at facts, than all the metaphysical circumlocution of the scholastic brotherhood. Did you ever see a London fog? Well, they are splendid representations of what are ordinarily put forth as theological argument. Nobody can see where anybody else is going, and everybody is compelled to travel like a snail for fear of running into something he did not know was there.

It is highly conducive to "reverential calm;" but it does not match the American character.

I think your book will please and help the American thinker as he thinks. Direct aim, short cut, and have done with it!

One place I chanced upon, however, struck me as subject to adverse criticism.

On page 69 you want to know what the folks were doing all the three days after the graves opened before they came out.

Now, I think that is unreasonable. You ought to expect people in a position like that to be a little slow. They had not been active in their habits for some time, and it does seem to me that you subject yourself to suspicion of unfairness when you demand it of them at a moment's notice. Nicht wahr?

Sincerely, HELEN H. GARDENER.

New York, April 7, 1890.

This is a book that the present time is ripe for. Freethought and Secularism do not make as great progress as they should, because the majority of the people who would like to investigate and study upon the subject cannot spare the necessary time to do so. This is because the books to be read are so numerous and of so many kinds, that the duties of every-day life prevent many from reading them. Professor Bell's new work supplies the long felt want, as he here condenses into a book of 381 pages, quotations from the ablest writers who have discussed the issues between Liberalism and Christianity, and who give overwhelming proofs against the claims of the church and the assumptions of the clergy.

In addition to this he produces the testimony of the most eminent Christian historians and divines, such as Davidson, Lardner, Baring-Gould, Dr. Adam Clarke, Moshier, etc. To these are added numerous quotations from the Bible itself. Among other authors quoted are Ingersoll, Bradlaugh, Underwood, Waite, Paine, Clifford, Lecky, Buckle, Hume, Draper, Haeckel, and Denton.

Among the headings of the chapters are "Creation," "Miracles," in which Hume's great essay is quoted, and also the arguments of the learned author of "Supernatural Religion." Chapter four takes up the character of Christ, his life, teachings, and resurrection. Chapter five is headed "Christianity without a Historical Basis." Under this head are considered the authenticity of the gospels, the forming and fluctuations of the canon, and the character and testimony of the early fathers; another chapter is upon the self-contradictions of the Bible; another is composed of "The Soul Farrago," and the succeeding one is upon "Immortality." The "design argument" is taken up, and B. F. Underwood's famous speech in his debate with the Rev. John Marples.

The Sunday question, the church in its relation to slavery, civilization, liberty, and woman, all receive the attention they deserve.

Perhaps one of the most important chapters is the last one, in which the teachings of Secularism, and their superiority over the corresponding teachings of Christianity are fully elucidated, together with refutation of prominent orthodox arguments against them.

Freethinkers everywhere should buy copies of the book. No Freethought library is complete without it. It is the first book of the kind published in this country. Armed with it, Liberals can refute any of the arguments of the opposition. Professor Bell has done an inestimable service to the cause of Freethought, and its adherents should repay him accordingly.

FRANKLIN STEINER,

President Des Moines, Iowa, Secular Union.

A Debate Wanted.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have a challenge from a Cambellite preacher to debate the infallibility of the Bible, or Christianity vs. Infidelity. He wants to put Clark Braden on the platform, but I told him I did not think that we had a man that would debate with a skunk. However, if there is any one that will except the challenge, let's hear from them through FREETHOUGHT.

He said he would try to induce some others to take the place of Braden, the debate to take place at Norwalk and last for an indefinite time or until the loser calls quits. If there are any who wish to accept the proposition, let them publish in FREETHOUGHT the questions for debate, time, terms, etc.

Respectfully, A. K. COWARD.

Norwalk, Cal.

A Card from Geo. H. Dawes.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I wish you would say for me to the Liberal friends in Eastern Oregon and Idaho that I am very sorry for having disappointed them this spring in not meeting my engagements for lectures. But I am not a Goliath in stature, nor a Hercules in physical strength, and I am in too delicate health to endure the hardships incident to the long stage rides. I shall not be able to make any appointments this summer. Fraternally yours,

No. Yamhill, Or.

GEO. H. DAWES.

Lilian's Book.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I want to say I have been around the world with Lilian (in imagination), though I was suffering so much with rheumatism I had to walk with a cane, and her book was better than medicine for me. I laughed long and often. Though I had tears for the pathetic parts too. Should she ever go such a trip again I mean to go along if I am compelled to walk with crutches, or if I have to be carried in a sling. Her book needs no recommendation—it recommends itself. She is a worthy daughter of "Tee Cee Lee." Very sincerely yours,

Frenchtown, Neb.

ON page 316 of this paper will be found a list of the Humboldt Library of Popular Science. These books are by the best authors, and the low price must secure for them a large sale.

The Freethinker's Means of Grace.

A walk this sunny Sabbath day,
Amid the woods, across the fields,
To hear what Nature has to say,
And count the gifts her bounty yields;
To note the forest's changing hues,
The leaves in green and crimson drest;
To watch the varying landscape's views—
This is the Church I love the best.

The silence stealing over all,
Unbroken, save by song and bird,
Or timid pheasant's plaintive call,
The only music to be heard.
A withered plant, a faded flower,
To tell of summers past and gone,—
This is the lesson of the hour,
The Text I love to dwell upon.

To know that life, like early spring,
Is full of promise to the young;
To know that later years will bring
A tear for many an early song;
To feel that true and noble thought,
Matured, its harvest sure shall see,
That life's a battle nobly fought—
This is the Sermon preached to me.

That I may love my neighbor well,
In time of need give helping hand;
That peace within my home may dwell,
Nor covet others' house and land.
And when my winter's sleep shall come,
And in my narrow bed I lie,
Oh, let me bring such harvest home—
This is the Prayer to say I try.

And so my temple, wide and vast,
Extends above, beneath, around;
Takes all mankind within its grasp
On Heathen or on Christian ground.
And ne'er a soul of rich or poor
Need wait for invitation given.
Wide as the earth the open door,
And free as air this road to heaven.

THOMAS CURTIS.

Lilian's Letter.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Lilian has consented to communicate to them some more through the columns of FREETHOUGHT. Admirers of originality cannot but be struck not only with her precocious ability as a codifier, but also with her orthographical independence. She writes:

DEAR AUNT GRACE: We have started a Dramatic Club, and we are going to play Alice in Wonderland. We have seven members and three officers.

The rules of which are:

- I. At the rehearsal or meetings strict attention must be paid.
- II. Strict attention must be paid to parliamentary laws.
- III. The dews of this club will be pabel every two weeks.

BY-LAWS.

No fitting.
No sace.
No galling names.
No talking about others.
No slang.
Maybe you would like to know are officers' names. Her they are.
Lilian Andrews, President.
Willie Ramsey, Sect.
Stephen Andrews, Stg. Manager.
This is all I can writ this time, but some other time I will writ more.
Your Niece, LILIAN ANDREWS.

No Time to Spare.

Minister (seeing pack of cards on table)—Do you play cards, Mrs. Goody?
Mrs. Goody—Yes, but you really must excuse me, I haven't time now.

The Humboldt Library—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forins of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
12. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
13. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words. Richard Chenevix Trench.
31. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R. A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
39. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
40. Current Discussions in Science. W. M. Williams.
41. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
42. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
43. The Dawn of History. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
44. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
45. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
46. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
47. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
48. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
49. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
50. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
51. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
52. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
53. Illusions. James Sully.
54. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
55. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
56. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
57. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
58. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
59. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, I.E.D.
60. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
61. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
62. Technical Education, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
63. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
64. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10 c.
65. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
66. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
67. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
68. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
69. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
70. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
71. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Laud in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
72. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
73. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
74. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
75. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
76. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
77. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
78. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
79. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
80. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
81. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
82. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
83. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
84. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
85. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. K. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. K. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Jaing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Wympser, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion, Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures,
embracingMEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

A Little Boy's Prayer.

A little boy of Portland, Me., had committed some misdemeanor, for which he was about to receive punishment at the hands of his mother. The boy begged first to be allowed to go to his room.

Permission was granted and the child went upstairs to his own room and closed the door behind him. The mother followed and listened outside, after telling him he must hurry and come down again to receive his punishment. The boy went to the side of the bed, knelt down, and this was his prayer:

"Dear Lord, if you love little boys and want to help one out, now is your time."

The prayer was answered.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N E, cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st. Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.

The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO. 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

Miraculous Speed.

A new explanation has been published of the "sun standing still" at the command of Joshua. Colonel Sedgwick has discovered that Joshua made a mistake: he had no watch, and would only measure time by the distance traveled in it. Now from Gideon to Makkedah was a two days' journey, but he and his army got over it before sunset, because God infused such vigor into them that they got on twice as fast as usual. In this way was altered "not the actual length of the day, but Joshua's standard of comparison on which his judgment in regard to the length of the day was based, so that, judging by the distance traversed, the day appeared twice as long as an ordinary day." So that, instead of the sun going more slowly, the men's feet went faster! Who, after this, shall dare to say of God with the psalmist, "neither respecteth he any man's legs?"—ANNIE BESANT, in the National Reformer.

A Boy's Essay on Breathing.

A Kentucky schoolboy, of twelve years, recently wrote the following essay on breathing: "We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our kidneys, and our livers. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life agoing through the nose when we are asleep. Boys who stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait until they get out in the fresh air. Boys in a room make bad air called carbonic acid. Carbonic acid is as poison as made dogs. A lot of soldiers were once in a black hole in Calcutta and carbonic acid got in there and killed them. Girls sometimes ruin the breath with corsets that squeeze the diaphragm. A big diaphragm is best for the right kind of breathing."

PETER'S Pence (a fund devoted to the personal benefit of the pope) in 1889 were collected as follows: From Austria, $80,000; Italy, $70,000; France, $70,000; South America, $62,000; North America, $57,500; Spain, $40,000; North Germany, $36,000; Portugal, $30,000; Ireland, $26,000; Belgium, $22,000; Asia, $20,000; Roumania, $20,000; Great Britain, $19,000; Africa, $18,000; Poland, $17,000; Australia, $17,000; Switzerland, $11,000, and Russia, $8,000.

A LADY in Bordenrow, who lived near a church, was sitting by a window listening to the crickets who were loudly chirping, the music from the choir being quite audible. A gentleman dropped in who had just passed the church. "How loudly they sing to-night?" said he. "Yes," said the lady—thinking of the crickets—"and they say that they do it with their hind legs."—Saturday Review.

In a Sunday-school class in the neighborhood of Meridian Heights the teacher last Sunday asked who was the first man. "Adam," replied the small boy. "And who was the first woman?" she asked a little girl. The child hesitated for a minute, then her face brightened. "Madam," she sang out, and the teacher hadn't the heart to correct her.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.

Address, The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

FREETHOUGHT, THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. E. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra five engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic, engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks. Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,
Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,
VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!
Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE,
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
 The Moon.....2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Beville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology. Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.

OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
 For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"Bible Contradictions," 15 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 64 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE, Merchant Tailor 1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Two Careers.

I.

So much one thought about the life beyond,
He did not drain the waters of the pond;

And when death laid his children 'neath the sod
He called it the "mysterious will of God."

He would not strive for worldly gain, not he—
His wealth, he said, was stored in God's To Be.

He kept his mortal body poorly dressed,
And talked about the garments of the blessed;

And when to his last sleep he laid him down,
His only mourner begged her widow's gown.

II.

One was not so sure there was a life to come,
So made a Heaven of his earthly home.

He strove for wealth, and with an open hand
He comforted the needy in his land.

He wore new garments often, and the old
Helped many a brother to keep out the cold.

He said this life was such a little span,
Man ought to make the most of it for man;

And when he died, the fortune that he left
Gave succor to the needy and bereft.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Leslie's Monthly.

Christian Science a Failure.

The lady of the house was cheerful, chatty, and good humored. A late personal experience which she told was enjoyed by her small audience. She had not been feeling well, had been depressed and nervous, and somebody advised her to try Christian science. She consulted a "healer," who informed her that she was not ill, depressed, or nervous; that such states of feeling had no real existence; that she must lift herself into an exalted atmosphere, keep herself in an elevated condition of mind, and thus free herself from these troubles, which were nothing more than the evidence of sin, etc. She was much impressed by this spiritual doctrine, and returned to her home feeling that she had indeed been lifted into the regions of the beautiful and the good.

At dinner, surrounded by her husband and children, she continued in this transcendental state—as evidenced by her conversation—and thinks she might be there still had she not been rudely lowered to the level of commonplace life by the remarks of various members of the family about the board.

"Mother, you seem absent-minded," said one of the boys.

"Mamma, you are hifaluten," chimed in one of the little ones.

Finally the august senator, who is accustomed to all sorts of attention from his wife, emphatically demanded: "What the — is the matter with you?"

"I came down at once," said the vivacious hostess. "I was like the old farmer who had got religion and who owned a ram. Going into the house one day, minus his hat and coat, he said to his family: 'There's no use in trying—I can't be a Christian while that ram is on the place.' I told the senator that I can never be a genuine Christian scientist while he and the boys are around."—Washington Post.

JOHNNY—"Pa, what do they ring church bells for, anyhow?" Pa—"To make people believe there's fire in the other world, my son."

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 21.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 24, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I awoke on Friday morning, on my way by steamer to Fort Bragg, and found that the brilliant sunshine was flooding all the sea and land. I expected to be on the sick list and do penance to Neptune after rolling and tumbling the night long, but I was happily disappointed; and since my stomach remained in its normal state, "hope reared its glittering crest." It was a lovely morning, and the view over the boundless ocean and the green and wooded shores was entrancing. It seemed as if I were having a glimpse into Arcadia as I looked at the well-cultivated expanse between the rocky strands and the unbroken forests. However, sudden changes take place on the blue Pacific. During the night it was blowing like a gale from the northeast; in the morning and until noon there was a comparative calm; in the afternoon the wind shifted to the south and the rain began to pour, and the billows rolled in thunder on the beach. It was nearly six o'clock when the vast smoke and steam from the Fort Bragg mills rose against the dark horizon and indicated the journey's end. The waves dashed in huge volumes against the encircling rocks, but the steamer went bravely in. It took nearly an hour to come alongside the landing-place. The tremendous swells of the sea, as if furious with anger, endeavored to hurl the ship upon the frothing breakers. The celerity of sailors, and the ropes attached with marvelous skill to buoys here and there in the raging waters, kept the boat poised in safety till the slow throbs of the engine swayed it to the wharf.

I found plenty of friends awaiting me, and arrangements were ready for one of the best campaigns I ever entered upon. So far the ministers have had it all their own way here. They have had revivals, and seventy or eighty have been plunged into the creek and remained a month or two in the bosom of the church. There are four meeting-houses on the four sides of the town. No matter which way you enter, a steeple is sure to confront. I suppose the Christians thought that the place was pretty well "corraled," and that the Infidel would have no chance whatsoever against these walls of faith. However, they were grandly mistaken.

On account of the uncertainty of the arrival of the boat, for it is not always on time, and came pretty near being late this trip, the pavilion in which the lectures were given was not more than half full on Friday evening. But the audience was most appreciative, and on the next night the speaker was greeted with a full house, while on Sunday afternoon and evening the pavilion simply overflowed, and half the audience were ladies. In fact, there had never been so large a gathering before in the place. About five hundred were present at the closing lecture, and this was a good count out of one thousand inhabitants. I could not find more enthusiastic listeners, and I shall have to put Fort Bragg away up on the roll of honor of Freethought. These were the first Freethought lectures ever given in the place and it was uncertain what the reception might be. The Liberals were not acquainted with each other and did not know their strength. It is now discovered that nearly two-thirds are that way of thinking, although not all are willing to stand up and be counted—but enough to keep our flag floating here for many a long day to come.

Fort Bragg is only about three years old, although an old encampment has been here since before the war. The famous General Bragg was then here, and hence the name of the place. The Fort Bragg Redwood Company have made the town what it is. The mills turn out about 90,000 feet of lumber a day. About four hundred men are employed by the company. When the immense forests are cleared away a rich soil will be left and this will become one of the finest farming sections in the state. Fort Bragg is now an incorporated city. It is finely situated. The view seaward is magnificent. The boundless ocean rolls away with changing radiance beneath the varied colors of the sky; the waves break upon the curving and precipitous shores; the gray rocks mingling with green expanses, while backward stretch the giant woods, where the music of civilization is continually heard. A school-house of elegant architecture has been built at an expense of ten thousand dollars. To offset the four churches is the pavilion, in the center of the town, one of the finest halls in Mendocino county, with a seating capacity of six hundred. It has all the conveniences of a first-class theater. Its acoustic qualities are excellent. Its use was generously donated by the Bucholtz Bros. for the lectures.

If I could always find a Bucholtz family in every place, the way of Freethought would cease to be a thorny path. They are brave and earnest Liberals, every one of them, and work with a noble enthusiasm. There are five stalwart brothers, who have had every variety of fortune from one end of the continent to the other. They came to Fort Bragg about three years ago, with plenty of experience, but very little of this world's goods. By unbounded pluck they have advanced to positions of honor and trust, and are recognized as among the foremost citizens of the community. They have added materially to the attractions of Fort Bragg. They have built the splendid pavilion at a cost of several thousand dollars, a fine residence, and in many ways pushed forward the interests of the town. Besides the brothers are the father and mother and sister, and a more delightful family I have never visited. They all live together, and make an ideal Freethought home. They belong to the "big church," to humanity and to the world, and to no sect. They have stood frankly by their own principles and have refused to haul down their colors for the sake of fashion or popularity. The Liberal ranks can be proud of these uncompromising adherents, who are in the front of every generous and progressive movement. Their efforts are nobly supported by a large number of Liberals. Harry Houston always keeps the FREETHOUGHT a-going and never fails to do his share of the work. To him is due the credit of opening the campaign. A. C. Kimball was chairman of the first meeting. Dr. S. J. Reid has been a Liberal from "away back." The Randolph brothers, A. Williamson, and the Johnson Hotel gave the traveler good welcome. The Gallagher brothers never fail to keep step to the music of the Union. Besides these there are S. W. McMullen, John Pilger, L. G. Reese, Dr. C. P. Higgins, C. J. Cavanagh of the Fort Bragg Advocate, Seymour Mark, N. McLaughlin, A. L. Harvey, who with others came ten miles to join the advance corps, Peter Peterson, Frank Fritzsche, M. M. Cope, John Jansen, O. F. Westover, Fred Kammeerer, R. M. Brown, C. Aulin, James Martin, of the Finland host who bring the spirit of freedom from across the seas—these with others make the Fort Bragg brigade of comrades good and true. It is a remarkable fortune that from all parts of the world such a jovial and Liberal company should strike hands. It gives a cosmopolitan look to this thriving town.

Mrs. C. P. Higgins presented the Liberals with a beautiful bouquet, which adorned the platform during the lectures. Professors Fessenden and Stewart furnished excellent music for the Sunday evening meeting.

I was pleased to make the acquaintance of the Rev. A. C. Manson and wife, who I think have too much of the sunshine of humanity and too pretty a baby to remain amidst the dark creeds of the Presbyterian church, where babies have such a hard time of it. After a pleasant confab concerning the origin of the universe we both came to the conclusion that neither of us knew anything about it. When it came to the "jumping-off place," he resorted to faith, while I stuck to the facts. We agreed not to burn each other at the stake on account of the difference of opinion.

Once in a while they have perfect days here on the coast, and such a day was Monday. It was simply delicious. The sea was calm and beautiful as a jewel on a lady's breast. Softly the vast waters broke upon the sparkling shore. The green fields and far surrounding forests glittered with sunny splendor. The thunder of the mill seemed like the dance of giants reveling in the glorious weather. The vast columns of smoke and steam roll serenely away into the azure deeps, and hang in bannered folds over the resplendent sea. I expected to leave on Monday afternoon, but the boat was delayed and I was obliged to wait until Tuesday; but I could not find a better place or better company in which to pass the glowing hours of this beautiful day. I was satisfied to let fate take me as it would amidst these charming landscapes and marine views.

Tuesday was equally beautiful, and in the afternoon on the good steamer Noyo, with Postmaster Huggins and other pleasant voyagers, we sailed over the glorious, shining sea to the Golden Gate. The steamer swept along almost like a cradle through the gently-heaving deep. The gorgeous lights of sunset flashed over the shores that could be seen for miles away, ornamented with pretty hamlets and stately ranches. Into the boundless bosom of the ocean sank like liquid gold the beaming sun. The stars appeared and faint lights along the shores, with the lustrous lighthouse flinging its signal fires. San Francisco was just waking up when we landed in the golden dawn. Fort Bragg has been one of the most brilliant points in the long line of Freethought advance, and I expect to visit it again next October.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE NATIONALIST SPLIT.

The San Francisco "Weekly Star" quotes this paragraph from a recent issue of FREETHOUGHT:

"It may be proper to remind the Nationalists that in working separately, holding rival meetings, and paying the rent of two halls when one would accommodate both the principal clubs, they are not following the system which they advocate. When Christians, professing to love their enemies, make war on those who have never injured them; and when Nationalists, working in the interests of co-operation, adopt the methods of competition, it looks as if there was a wide chasm between preaching and practice."

The "Star" then proceeds:

"This means, of course, that the effort to get Burnette G. Haskell and his gang of dynamiters out of the Nationalist movement on this coast, was a mistake, and that the right course would have been to remain in harmonious co-operation with the dynamiters. 'Adopting the methods of competition' is not the right way to put it. The thing to be done, was to get rid of an element in the movement which was (and rightfully) repelling the community from it. And it will not only be our sufficient answer to FREETHOUGHT, but will be in line with our previous utterances on the subject, if we now return to it, and reinforce our discussion both with statements of principle and statements of fact. Traitors and thieves are liable to worm into the very best enterprises. There was Judas Iscariot who got in with the twelve apostles on strict Haskell-Redstone-Browne principles. He 'carried the bag, and stole (this is the true translation of the Greek) what was put therein,' and when the time came he sold out his leader to one of 'the old parties.' He was expelled from the company and rightly. When a man finds that a skunk has got into his cellar, he must either move out himself or move the skunk out. These dynamiters, Haskell, Owens & Co., were the skunk in the Nationalist house. We had to get them out, even at the risk of making an unwholesome smell, or else honest men would have to get out."

If FREETHOUGHT has been laboring under a mistake as to the purposes of Nationalism, it stands corrected. But we supposed that Nationalism meant co-operation; that the object was to so harmonize conflicting elements that all should work together for a common purpose, that purpose being the improvement of the industrial and economic conditions of mankind. And surely if the end sought is co-operation, the means adopted should in some way illustrate and shadow forth the desirableness of it. A part of the community organized to reconstruct the whole should be a type of that reconstructed whole. Thus Prohibitionists should not be liquor dealers, Liberals should not be bigots, Single Taxers should not speculate in land, and Nationalists should not discriminate against individuals or compete with one another for control of their organization. "For if," in the language of the apostle, "they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?"

When Nationalism prevails there will still be bad men and women in the world, and the problem what to do with them will still confront the philanthropist. It will not be possible to either withdraw from these people or to expel them. They must be employed according to their capacity for usefulness. Why, then, should this not be realized by the Nationalists of San Francisco?

None of them can claim that in ability as an organizer and worker Mr. Haskell is surpassed or even approached by any other person in the movement.

If these gentlemen who now oppose Mr. Haskell have felt so much solicitude for the cause as they at present profess why did they not take the initiative in the movement a year ago? Their conversion to Nationalism at about the time the organization became large enough to be worth capturing gives the Haskell party opportunity to say that they cared more for the power of the club than for its principles.

The position of FREETHOUGHT with regard to the quarrel, as defined in the paragraph which the "Star" quotes, is that the seceders should have stayed with the original organization and applied their principles right at home.

Nationalism was hardly heard of in San Francisco until Mr. Haskell made it popular, and there is doubt that the movement here would long survive his withdrawal from it. The club over whose destinies Mr. Haskell presides is full of good material, and if it is likely to be ruined by the extremists, there is all the more reason why the cooler-headed members who seceded should have remained to preserve the balance.

"AROUND THE WORLD."

The reason why many who have ordered Lilian Leland's book have not received it is because the News Company is slower than the second coming of Christ in filling orders for it. As no one can procure the work until it has passed through the News Company's hands, we are obliged to wait the pleasure of said company.

THE LAND LOAN BUREAU.

In the Senate last Monday Senator Stanford of California introduced a bill of interest to farmers throughout the country. It provides for the establishment of a bureau to be known as the Land Loan Bureau. Circulating notes to the amount of $100,000,000 and in denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000 are to be issued, and these shall be receivable for the payment of private debts, taxes, excises, public land purchases, and all other dues to the United States, and shall be equal in value to gold and silver money of the like denominations.

Every citizen of the United States, or person who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen, owning unincumbered agricultural lands may file an application for a loan to run not to exceed twenty years, the payment of the same to be secured by a lien upon the land, and no loan to amount to more than half the assessed value of the land in question. In no case is it proposed that a loan shall be on property of less than $500 in value and the loan cannot be less than $250.

Whenever a landowner wishes to avail himself of the privileges of the proposed law he will be compelled to file his application with the recorder of deeds for the county in which he resides or with the official exercising the functions of a recorder, and deposit with the application a sum sufficient to defray the cost of an appraisal of the land and abstract of title thereto. Interest at the rate of 2 per cent is to be paid on these loans. Provision is made for a foreclosure of the lien in the event of a failure to pay the loan or fully comply with the law pertaining to the case.

There is a defect in this bill which will prevent it from aiding the class of farmers who most need relief; and that is its provision that money shall be loaned only on unincumbered land. The majority of farms are incumbered with a mortgage, the interest on which consumes all that the farmer can make. To lift these mortgages should be the first object of any bill for the benefit of the agriculturist, and Senator Stanford's bill should not pass without an amendment making this possible.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, May 18, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Thomas Curtis; subject, "The Public Schools and the Catholic Church."

A NEW YORK dispatch dated May 15 contains the following information: "A new organization has just been incorporated in this state under the name of 'The National League for the Protection of American Institutions.' It has opened offices here (New York city) and the best men of the city and state are behind and in it. The first and most important step to be taken by the league is the presentation to Congress of this proposed sixteenth amendment to the National Constitution:

"No state shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercises thereof, or permitting the use of its property, or credit, or any money raised by taxation, or authorize either for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by appropriation, payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church, religious denomination, or religious society, or any institution, society, or undertaking, which is wholly or in part under sectarian or ecclesiastical control."

The ground of this resolution is covered completely by the Demands of Secularism, and the members of the National League for the Protection of American Institutions should hasten to affiliate with the American Secular Union. It is necessary that state support should be withdrawn from religious institutions, and it is also necessary that all ecclesiastical property should bear its just share of taxation.

GERMANY'S new chancellor, Von Caprivi, is accredited with saying in a recent speech:

"Without killing the slave-dealers you can never abolish slavery. The bullet and the Bible must act together in the cause of civilization."

The first sentence of this quotation, slightly altered, would furnish Mr. Von Caprivi's subjects with good grounds for blowing his brains out, thus, "Without killing the tyrant you can never abolish tyranny." But in what manner will the Bible aid in the cause of civilization, i.e., the abolition of slavery? Will Von Caprivi have his missionaries read to the African slave-dealer this selection from the Levitical law? "Both thy bondmen and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids. Moreover, of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you; of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you which they beget in your land; and they shall be your possession. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen forever."

A DECISION of the United States Supreme Court, handed down last Monday, escheats to the government all property belonging to the Mormon church in Utah and dissolves the corporation. The ground upon which the decision is based is that the Mormon church inculcates unlawful practices, and that "society has a perfect right to prohibit offenses against enlightened sentiment." Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Field and Lamar dissent from the opinion. This decision is likely to lead to a great deal of discussion. It also brings to the front the question whether under a national Sunday law a corporation like the Second Adventist, which inculcates the practice of working upon the first day of the week, "against enlightened sentiment," could be dissolved and its property escheated to the state.

IF what the Rev. Dr. Roberts said last week at the Saratoga convention of Presbyterians is true, this coast is in a deplorable state as to vitals and godliness. He remarked:

"The Pacific coast is threatened with heathenism and infidelity, intellectual and practical. In everywhere striving to overthrow our Protestant Christianity it has the tongue of the orator and the ear of the populace. It is becoming every day more and more resolute, formidable, and boastful. What but Christ's gospel, the power of God unto salvation, can meet such threatening evils?"

It should be understood that in using the word "heathenism" Dr. Roberts meant Roman Catholicism, which on this coast as elsewhere throughout the country is making rapid gains, while Presbyterianism is losing ground, or at best only holding its own. As Dr. Roberts says, Catholicism has the tongue of the orator (i.e., the political orator) and the ear of the populace, especially the hoodlum with a vote to sell. If "Christ's gospel and the power of God unto salvation" can meet these evils, they should be forwarded from Saratoga by return mail, addressed to the mayor of San Francisco.

A PARAGRAPH in Mr. Putnam's "News and Notes" from Fresno Flats has called forth some remonstrance from the ladies who conduct the Fresno Flats Reading Room, and a retraction is asked for. The paragraph reads as follows:

"The religious ladies have established a free reading-room here, and the Liberals contributed a good part of the funds, and it was understood that they might contribute also some books and papers. But when Bell's 'French Revolution' was put in, it instantly disappeared, and so with all like literature. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, and FREETHOUGHT are carefully excluded. The money of Liberals is acceptable, but that evidently is all which is wanted from that source."

An exact statement of the facts by somebody able to give them would be welcome to the columns of FREETHOUGHT, and if they are otherwise than as related by Mr. Putnam the necessary correction will be promptly made.

JUST as we are recovering from the scare given us by Prophet Erickson, who predicted the fall of San Francisco on April 14, there comes the following from India, published in the "Hindoo Patriot." A plate of the finest gold, containing inscriptions in the Tamil and Telegu languages, fell from heaven and was found in the temple grounds at Benares by the person who saw it fall. The inscription is as follows: "From the month of June, 1890, God himself will rule as emperor of Hindostan, incarnating himself in human form. From that time forward there will be justice all over the world, and the munis (sages) will be worshiped by the people. All the diseases of men will be cured, dogs will walk and talk as men do, and man, whose life is now established at 78 years, will in future have it extended to 125 years."

THE spirit medium Walter E. Reid, of Grand Rapids, Mich., has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment after conviction of using the mails for fraudulent purposes. Reid advertised himself as a "spirit postmaster," and gave alleged letters from the dead to the living for one dollar each. He may have been a fraud or may have acted honestly. No one but himself knows: but if he was deserving of punishment, how about the Catholic priests who trade off prayers and masses for hard cash? If the one is a fraud, so is the other; and people credulous enough to be humbugged by either need a large accession of common sense.

IT is reported that the Freethinkers and Spiritualists of San Diego will erect a Liberal hall in that city. It is to be a first-class building, 100 x 150 feet, with stores below and hall above, having a seating capacity of 3000. H. L. Shaug and Ranford Worthing, two well-known and active Liberals, are among the directors. The lectures of Dr. York, who combines Spiritualism and Nationalism with anti-theology, are accredited with originating the present movement by harmonizing hitherto conflicting elements.

A SALOON man has been found in Washington who closes his place with prayer. His application for renewal of license having been rejected on the ground that his place bore a bad name, he appeared before the commissioner in his own behalf. In reply to the question, "Do you shut up promptly at midnight?" he answered: "When ten minutes to 12 comes, I kneel down, say my prayers and shut up." Drinking in such a place as this man keeps must be very much like partaking of the sacrament.

MORMONISM seems especially adapted to the South Sea Islands. The Rev. T. W. Smith, missionary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who recently landed in San Francisco from Tahiti, says that during the past six years he has baptized seven hundred and twenty converts and organized thirty-two churches on the twenty-eight different islands.

THE Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, of the National Sabbath Association, is again in California working in the interest of a Sunday law. He was at Los Angeles last week and addressed the Presbyterian Alliance. Mr. Crafts invites the support of those unfortunate persons who feel unable to properly observe the "Sabbath" without a law compelling them to do so.

E. H. HEYWOOD, editor of the Princeton, Mass., "Word," has been arrested and is now under bail, presumably for publishing the O'Neill letter first printed in "Lucifer," of Valley Falls, Kan. Mr. Heywood appears to have voluntarily placed his head in the lion's mouth, or rather, laid it at the ass's heels.

PUTNAM'S "Religious Experience," just put in type by the Freethought Publishing Company, is on the press and will be ready for mailing in a few days. It is printed in the best shape, from perfectly new type, and contains over one hundred pages, the price being placed at 25 cents.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, formerly editor of the "Index," has written a book on "The Way Out of Agnosticism." Should it show the way out of Agnosticism to the more positive ground of Atheism it will do much good, though we understand it was written with the opposite purpose.

A HUMBOLDT county correspondent writes that providence has so tempered the wind to the shorn lambs of the upper country that not more than half of the sheep left there last fall will ever need shearing again. There appears to be such a thing as tempering the wind too much.

THE late discussion on Spiritualism between Moses Hull and Samuel P. Putnam will be published in the June number of the "Carrier Dove," and later, we understand, in pamphlet form. If it prove as interesting in printed as in oral form, it will be well worth reading.

THERE are nearly two hundred stockholders in the Freethought Publishing Company. It seems as if any of them could secure one new subscriber for each month in the year. Some who are not stockholders do this and more.

AMONG our most interesting exchanges is the "Weekly Star," the "people's paper." The independence of the journal, especially on questions relating to city politics, places it above suspicion of being a "fixed" Star.

OBSERVATIONS.

I am sometimes led to doubt that all who wish FREETHOUGHT success are really sincere. A subscriber writes:

My subscription having expired, kindly discontinue. With the best wishes for your success, yours, etc., etc.

Kind words are always appreciated, but they don't take the place of financial support. Our printers gently but eloquently decline to accept them as payment for services rendered. It is true they sometimes move me to sign receipts for salary never paid, and to debit the gift account with a week's wages, but that will at length become monotonous. A few more of these best wishes would induce the undersigned to place his resignation in the hands of the directors.

I think it would be unfair to the readers of this journal to withhold from them the following communication just to hand:

ALAMEDA, May 17, 1890.

Editors of "Freethought," 838 Howard street.
Mess Geo E McDonald
" Samuel P. Putnam
Gentlemen.

I am instructed to call your immediate attention to the facts of your Paper sailing under false colors; for there can be no free thought when we deny a superior power than ordinary application: "The surface of the Globe is certainly not the whole Globe" nor the superficial experiences of the multitude all man can become aware of.

Some 2½ years ago when the so-called mind-reader Bishop started to oppose Mediumship, I was controlled to proclaim from the Platform in Oakland that the Spiritual Power would cause his destruction and since that time he dwindled down and eventually was extinguished altogether.

Now in the same way it becomes my duty to warn you from continuing in your foolish task of upholding such a paper that denies Spiritual Power.

If you cannot be convinced by this, take my advise and better give up altogether for otherwise you may suffer terrible consequences.

But suit yourself—obey—or not—as you please but remember "Whom the Gods wish to destroy, they strike with blindness first. MRS. FIX Medium.

The gods be jiggered. My eyesight is undimmed. Go to! Mrs. Fix. Whom the fates would commit to the asylum, they first endow with the gift of prophecy.

The daily press, which for some time after the inception of the Nationalist movement in San Francisco had columns to devote to reports of the meetings, has closed its mouth, and neither of the last two meetings, held Monday night, is alluded to in any of the three dailies that I read on Tuesday morning. Yet both gatherings, one at Union Square Hall and one at Metropolitan Temple, were well attended. On my way home from the office at 9 o'clock I dropped in at the Temple and heard the last hour's proceedings. Mrs. Addie Ballou presided over an audience that must have numbered nearly a thousand. It was announced on the programme that prominent opponents of Nationalism would be present to defend capital, but they were not there. The Hon. Irving M. Scott sent a letter of regret at his inability to attend; so did W. H. L. Barnes and Mayor E. B. Pond. Mr. A. Richards turned in his resignation, declaring that he had joined the club under a misapprehension of its objects, which mature thought had led him to believe were impracticable. So there was no opposition; but Mrs. Ballou, under stress of circumstances, took up the capitalistic side of the question and presented it as candidly as she could. The vein of satire that ran through her address made it none the less entertaining.

On the stage sat the blind organist, Professor Wilmot, and the Freethought lecturer, Mattie P. Krekel. Mrs. Krekel made an address full of fire and vim, denouncing as a superstition the curse placed upon labor, and declaring that the beads upon the brow of the toiler crowned him with a royalty above that of kings. It was a stirring speech and aroused the greatest enthusiasm, although, as I understand, Mrs. Krekel does not profess an entire acceptance of Nationalist principles.

Walter Leman, the old-time favorite with California theatre-goers, gave Byron's apostrophe to the ocean, and was twice recalled. Mr. Geo. H. Ames performed a fine flute solo, and Miss Evangeline Ballou sang the "New Georgia," the words being adapted to the occasion, and the audience joining in the chorus. Mr. Haskell did not appear, and the meeting adjourned about 10 o'clock, the visitors dropping contributions into a box placed at the door.

Unfortunately I could not attend the other meeting at Union Square Hall. I depended upon the daily papers to say something about that, but found nothing, though the same papers gave columns to a sparring contest between a black and a caucasian bruiser, telegraphed at large expense from Chicago. While brutal sports claim precedence over the discussion of economic problems, what hope is there that the world will grow better? The press panders to the beast in man, and by pandering to it augments its development, and thus, with the power to do good, does the greatest evil. It is a question whether all reformers are not Don Quixotes running futile and ridiculous tilts against the windmill of human cussedness, actuated by the breath of an unprincipled and conscienceless press.

Alfred Cridge spoke before the Freethought Society last Sunday evening on the "Relativity of Reforms." Mr. Cridge is an old campaigner in the ranks of progress, and has a son, Alfred Denton Cridge, who follows in his footsteps to some extent. The elder Cridge is employed in the capacity of reporter and otherwise on the "Weekly Star," and from a rear view looks very much like Editor Perkins of the same paper. Both being Single-Tax advocates, the resemblance suggests that there is a sort of phrenological similitude between the disciples of Henry George, as well as a relativity of reforms.

Mr. Cridge is a rapid and fluent speaker. He is also full of thought. In his discourse, which lasted one hour and twenty minutes, he said nothing that did not bear directly upon his subject, and wasted none of the ten thousand words which he spoke. To show that progress in one domain complements that of another, Mr. Cridge told how the sciences, astronomy for instance, were related to and dependent upon skilled labor, as, without the perfection attained by mechanical skill in astronomical instruments, the results reached by the students of astronomy could not have been achieved.

In humanitarian science, said the speaker, the same rule holds good. The fight for shorter hours, for economical improvement, is a fight for Freethought, because leisure conduces to intelligence and study, and these, fostering mental development, are the death of superstition. Men cannot think without leisure. Again, sanitation is necessary to healthy thought. So are good food and good habits.

The privileges accorded to the churches arise from the fact that the money power is orthodox. The monopolists recognize that the church is the great enslaver of the mind; they desire that the mind shall be enslaved in order that they may enslave the body, and therefore they support the churches. It is on account of exemption from taxation and other advantages thus gained that the churches are enabled to hold their own. If they were placed on an exact equality with Freethought before the law, they could not survive, but through their co-operation with capital in reducing the masses to subserviency they acquire the advantages which we know they possess. The plea that churches promote morality is a fiction. Vicarious atonement and gallows repentance put a premium upon crime. In thirty years of observation Mr. Cridge had heard of but one murderer who was a Free-thinker, but he had noticed that orthodoxy and crime are graded to a very close ratio. Every day some murderer jumps from the gallows to glory. Paupers are mostly orthodox, and so are the insane. Reports from public institutions are all favorable to Freethinkers and Spiritualists.

Among the reforms advocated by the speaker were abolition of property in land and the introduction of the Single Tax. This form of taxation, he held, would bear heavily upon churches, as they do not use land to its highest point of productiveness. Mr. Cridge also recommended government ownership of railroads, and the establishment of a postal telegraph, to be so conducted that messages, like letters, might be transmitted at cost.

Mr. Cridge was accorded the closest attention of the audience, and his points evoked frequent bursts of applause.

Next Sunday evening Mr. Thomas Curtis speaks upon "The Roman Catholic Church and the Public Schools."

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

George Francis Train will probably reach Tacoma this week after accomplishing a journey around the world in about 59 days. —The Gilroy Gazette says: "It is reported that the priest of the San Juan Mission has applied to the church authorities for permission to retire to a place less subject to earthquakes. The sisters of the convent are about to move to Hollister. On Sunday last the church services were held in the plaza. The priest believes that the continuous convulsions of the earth indicate that San Juan will shortly sink from view." —Three San Francisco boys who went fishing last Sunday were drowned in the bay. —A bank clerk named Bachstrom committed suicide on an Oakland ferryboat Sunday afternoon by shooting himself through the heart. Unrequited love caused the act. —A murderer named Van Wezer, who killed a Chinese in Colusa county five years ago, and who was serving a life sentence, escaped from San Quentin prison last Saturday. —Mayor Pond is preparing a circular to be addressed to the industrial and mercantile classes of this city urging concerted action in the matter of securing an exhibit from California at the World's Fair at Chicago in 1892, which will reflect credit upon the state. The circular will call a public meeting to be held in the near future, at which the question will be thoroughly discussed. —The Longshore Lumbermen's Protective Union of San Francisco has a capital of $20,000, and will donate $5000 to the striking ironmolders. —Alpheus Bull, capitalist and vice-president of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, fell off the breakwater at Fort Point, on the shore of the Golden Gate, May 16, and was drowned. —It turns out that many of the people who fled to the mountains for belief in Erickson's doomsday prophecy left their creditors behind to perish, and have not returned to pay their debts.

The prohibitionists of Kansas are excited over the open sale of liquor at Topeka. It seems that under a United States regulation foreign liquors can be sold in any state in the original package in which they were imported. The Kansas dealers are taking advantage of this regulation, and snap their fingers at state officials. —Charles J. Curran, of Bristol, Pa., attempted to crucify himself on a cross in St. Mark's Roman Catholic church, Philadelphia, last Saturday night. He placed his hand on one of the arms of a large wooden cross in the church, and tried to drive a nail through the palm with a stone. He was committed as a religious lunatic. —Postmaster-General Wanamaker is said to oppose the eight-hour day in the postal service. He says it will add $2,378,727 to the postal expenses. —There was a disgraceful row in the House of Representatives last Saturday, which ended in the speaker pronouncing the censure of the House upon Representative Bynum of Indiana for unparliamentary conduct. Bynum remarked that under the circumstances the censure was a "decoration of honor." —John G. Carlisle has been elected United States senator from Kentucky to succeed Beck, deceased. —The Methodist Church South Conference at St. Louis, Mo., refused to adopt resolutions condemning the use of whisky and tobacco. —At Scottsdale, Pa., May 16, a true bill was found by the grand jury in the case of Edward Callaghan against General Master Workman Powderly, John B. Byrne, and Peter Wise for alleged conspiracy and defeating Callaghan for the senatorial nomination in 1888 and ruining his business. Upon trial Mr.

Powderly was acquitted. —Church circles at Charleston, Ind., are troubled by the scandal in which the most prominent clergyman of the town is involved. The Rev. Henry Berger, pastor of the German Methodist church, has confessed to having sustained improper relations with a handsome and prominent woman of his parish. She, on the other hand, denies the charge and proposes to bring a libel suit. Berger held the highest social position, and was very popular. —The Nun of Kenmare, whom some people in Pittsburg, Pa., have charged with fraud in collecting money for her new book on "Why I Left the Church of Rome," has been heard from. The reports she attributes to the malice of Catholics.

Bismarck is criticising the young emperor of Germany, whom he likens to a puppy that barks at everything. —The Catholic majority in the Bavarian diet has become possessed with the idea that the development of art promotes irreligion. Yet Munich is one of the most famous centers of art in the world. —Madam Ann Odelia Dis Debar, the alleged medium who humbugged Lawyer Marsh of New York, has been arrested in Rome, Italy, for swindling. —The news comes from New Zealand that at a recent conference of Mormons in that colony 3000 were present, and it was declared that fully 500 converts had been made in the previous year.

REJOINDER BY THE "STAR."

In continuation of the discussion on Single Tax issues raised by FREETHOUGHT, the San Francisco Weekly Star of May 17 prints the appended editorial:

FREETHOUGHT on April 12, searching for light on the Single Tax doctrine, asked the Star to twinkle on this proposition, viz.: That in spite of the Single Tax (should it become a law), the owner of a seven-story building might "receive from the rent of it an income sufficient to enable him to pay taxes upon vacant lots while holding them for a raise."

The Star twinkled accordingly, showing that the "raise" could not put any money into the pocket of such owner and holder, as it would be only a "raise" in the amount to be paid to the government.

To this FREETHOUGHT (we apologize for having by accident omitted to answer sooner) rejoins as follows (April 26):

We are willing to accredit to this reply whatever force it has against anything somebody else may have said, but we fail to see its application to the question raised, unless the Single Tax involves the abolition of private ownership of land. Of course, no sane man would pay taxes, or rent rather, on land he does not occupy. It is proper, however, to remember that land is now owned by individuals; that these same land-holding individuals control legislation, and that to ask them to tax themselves out of their possessions is like requesting a man to lift himself by his bootstraps.

The Single Tax reform would abolish the present kind of private ownership of land. We venture to express our surprise that so intelligent a paper as FREETHOUGHT should have failed so entirely to get hold of the central principles of this reform. The reform does not, it is true, abolish an ownership of land by private individuals, but it would abolish the present kind of ownership and would substitute another. It would abolish the present absolute ownership of land, and would substitute another kind of ownership, a possessory or occupying ownership, more sure to the occupant, equally permanent in practice, and which is the very change expected to accomplish all the good to be done by the reform. Instead of owning an absolute right in land, the thing to be owned would be a right to occupy it and use it so long as the due taxes upon it are paid to government. This being the case, of course the present motive for "holding land for a raise" disappears; for if there should be a raise no citizen would get it, but the community would get it. A case might be imagined where a rich man might hold empty land and pay the taxes on it, out of spite or obstinacy, for instance, but such cases would be exceptional. The influence of the system of paying ground rent to the government would be an irresistible force (as a rule) to prevent such transactions. Any wealth whatever—whether from a building, or United States bonds, or from a manufacturing business, would enable a rich man thus to hold empty land. But very few, indeed, would do it; not enough to weaken the force of the system. FREETHOUGHT, indeed, sees that land would not be kept empty by a man who was not to gain by so keeping it, for it says in so many words, that "no sane man would pay taxes, or rent rather, on land that he does not occupy." As soon as it is seen that occupying (viz., beneficial using) is exactly what the Single Tax intends to force upon the holders of lands now kept injuriously vacant, the true bearing and operation of the reform become plain. The whole object of the Single Tax reform might be stated as the preventing of any man from keeping in a vacant condition, land which he does not occupy. It is this which FREETHOUGHT seems to have missed.

What FREETHOUGHT says about the necessity of convincing landholders of the merits of Single Tax reform is quite true, and we believe that this precise operation is, in fact, gradually succeeding. We grant that until small landholders of the United States—or of some state—become converts to the Single Tax doctrine, it will not become the law therein; neither should it. Single Tax men ask for no reform except on the American principle of convincing the people that it is right and good.

GOD AND OTTO WETTSTEIN.

THE SOUL OF REASON AND THE PERFECT MAN.

We are infinitely pleased to have met with Otto Wettstein. He is a little after our own heart, a creature of pure reason who will have all things demonstrated or ruled out of creation. Good! We profess to be right there ourselves, and hail brother Wettstein as a friend and ally.

He is quite right about the use of terms. In science we must be accurate. Every word must have a precise meaning to all parties, or they mean nothing. All the vagaries of theology are nursed by vague, flexible, and indefinite words; and science must be accurate. We do confess that when we called God "he," we did so in deference to fashion merely. We know no sex in the sublime mind of the universe. We stand corrected to that extent.

But we think our friend equally open to the same objection. When we speak of the personality of God, we place it on the mere fact of conscious existence, knowledge of self and surroundings. Otto says that personality means of body, a form, the form of a man. This is as the barbarous past has held. But all that must be thrown away. Science must make its own definitions. Because we use the word God, we are not held and firmly bound to the God of the Bible, or of wood, or stone, or of any other form.

The sole question is of the being or non-being of a divine intelligence. The manner, form, and conditions of its existence, is a farther matter to be settled hereafter. And if we could not fully settle them, that would not disprove the being, unless, in trying to find the mode of existence we discovered no possible mode. And the universe is so large, and we so small, and there are so many possibilities unknown to us, that it is difficult to say, "I cannot understand it, therefore it is not possible." Let us imagine the church mouse trying to find out the ultimate object of the Sunday gatherings. Yet the mouse is infinitely more to the cathedral than our friend Wettstein is to the universe.

He reasons as though God were a mere problem in geometry, to be solved by lines and angles till you reach a demonstration, conclusive and final. And God is not that, but a conviction, a sentiment, almost an intuition of the human mind. Taught in infancy, he will say, "True! But received, in some form or other, by all our race, from the wooden image to the sublime ideal. And, as in our own case, while miracle, prophecy, Bible, priesthood, and priestcraft have all faded away, this holds and will not down. Where there is one who says, "There is no God," there are a thousand who will not have it so, but cling to God with all their souls.

Three score and ten years have we lived in this erring world battling for truth or right, against all false religion, for science, moral science, and the greatest good of our race. We have been face to face with death a dozen times. In the dark waters, in the polar snow, in the lone forest, in the hands of fierce fanatics hungering for the blood of a heretic, in battle, wounded, and crawled behind a log to die alone, in every case alone.

No human witness to know our motives, the cause of death, or the last resting-place, or bestow an afterthought for us. But in all, above all, superior to all, and raising us above all, was the consciousness that God was looking, God knew all, God would remember, and perhaps reward. This was the inspiration. This made heroism easy and cowardice impossible. God was more than all mankind.

It is this sublime shadow our friend would take away. And we yield it not on any fine point of reason. We must have a demonstration that leaves no doubt.

And after all this is the simple question: Is there a divine intelligence anterior and superior to that of organized life? Are all the phenomena of this world a mere hotch-potch of matter stirred up and moved by laws that neither think nor plan nor know? Is man the outcome of such a chaos? Or was there mind, spirit, a soul to the great whole, which we may call God? Which is the more probable? Our friend rejects all miracles; but which would be the greatest—the world without intelligence to plan? or the supposition of an intelligence in some form, co-eternal with matter?

The old syllogism comes back to us:

Whatever exhibits marks of design must have had an intelligent author:

The earth exhibits marks of design:

Therefore the earth must have had an intelligent author.

This satisfied the theologians at one time. But it has been answered and exploded by the Freethinkers.

The first proposition is not true. Many things, works of man and mere accidents, bear marks of design, and prove to have been otherwise. It must be amended, made stronger, like this:

Whatever exhibits a manifest and demonstrable design must have had an intelligent author. Then it is sound. And the earth does exhibit such marks.

Do you deny it? Were our friend Wettstein transported to some other planet, and found a cottage, would he not be sure that some intelligence had been there? And when he looks at the earth and finds in five different regions, with a different flora and fauna, and at the top of each a man, in five varieties, but still one species in every essential of manhood, and readily intermarrying, is not this an equal demonstration of an intelligent plan?

It has been said that to scatter type on a floor might result in a nice poem in some part of the pile; and it is not denied. But in five piles, to find the same poem in each, and no plan and no design, would be deemed impossible.

Otto says he wonders that we believe in the miracle of God, and yet reject those of the churches. But this is why we do so. Our God has mind, justice, love, and is in harmony with nature; while all the traditions of the churches are out of harmony, and destitute of all these qualities.

God, the soul, the future, cling to us as the sublime remainder when all the trash of superstition has been washed away. God is the inspiration to all good, the deterrent of all bad. The martyr condemned by all mankind and burnt at the stake for heresy, had God and was content to die. How many times has the assassin's arms been paralyzed by the thought, God sees me!

If all intelligent mankind could vote yes or no on the question, Shall we have such a God? the answer would be, Let there be a God! Let there be a judge for all the earth, who will surely, in some way, reward virtue and see that vice hath its punishment. It would be best for all.

H. L. KNIGHT.

Medicated Paper, So to Speak.

It is apparently a startling thing that a paper will heal the sick, but we have the testimony of quite a number that the holding of this paper in the hands has had the effect of a mental treatment. But not only have we this testimony for this paper, but it is quite common among the metaphysical journals of the day. Yet why should we marvel when we know that psychic emanations are universal, and that everything we touch either mentally or physically absorbs from us an ethereal essence which forms a link between us and those who come in contact with it? This is especially so with the emanations of the good, which is all-pervading, and which awakens its counterpart in those who come into harmony with it.—Christian Science Thought.

ECCLESIASTICAL VIEWS AND PRACTICE AS TO THE OATH.

III.

The code of the Council of Constance provided that in case of simony, common report should be sufficient for conviction; yet it allowed the accused the benefit of canonical purgation.

The courts of Christian nations had not then adopted the doctrine, now claimed to be the common law, that all oaths have an equal weight, and that all unimpeached witnesses stand upon an equal footing, and the issue is to be settled by the respective number of witnesses on each side.

The Coutumier of Bordeaux provided that in civil cases, not exceeding four sols in amount, the claimant should be sworn on the gospels in the mayor's court; where the amount was from four to twenty sols he swore on the altar of St. Prajet or St. Ardaire; for amounts from twenty sols to fifteen livres the oath was to be taken in the cemetery of St. Seurin, and for greater amounts he was sworn on the "Fort," or altar of St. Seurin. A person notorious for want of veracity was sworn in all cases on the "Fort," and had to provide a conjurator to swear to belief in his oath.

These citations show that the oath had no uniform value, which it would have had if based on the belief of the witness that there was a supreme being who would execute vengeance upon all who took false oaths. The oath enhanced the importance of the priesthood, especially when it was administered on sacred altars and by themselves. It appealed to the superstition of the people. It increased the reverence for relics, shrines, and for the clergy. Perjury was an ecclesiastical crime, punished in the courts of the church. No doubt this fact, as well as the fact that the highest judges of the realm in England were for a long time ecclesiastics, who believed in the supremacy of the church over the king, led English judges to state that the efficacy of the oath depended upon the belief of the swearer in an avenging God, who had been called on to attest the truthfulness of the witness. The perjured witness had no fear of punishment in the civil courts for false swearing. He was taught that the curses of God would follow him here and hereafter; that the priesthood was divinely appointed to blast and wither all who profaned the ceremonies of the church by breaking their oath; that God interposed by miracles to execute direct vengeance upon perjurers. The legends of the church show this.

Prior to the time of William the Conqueror the priest and lord sat side by side in the courts of England, and the church exercised jurisdiction in all civil cases. He separated the secular and church courts, and gave the clergy complete independence in their own sphere, and supremacy. "Every one to answer when the bishop requires him to do so; and if he refuses, the bishop's authority is to be supported by the sheriff."*

The first clause of Magna Charta, extorted from King John by the bishops as well as the barons, recognized the full jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts over matters confided to them. The statute of Circumspecte Agates, passed in 1285, classed among ecclesiastical offenses "breaking an oath."

The ecclesiastical courts proceeded by inquisition, accusation, or denunciation, and, from the Norman Conquest to the reign of Charles I. of England, had an inquisition differing from the Spanish Inquisition only in the fact that torture was not used, and the majority of the cases tried were unimportant.

While nothing like an ecclesiastical code is extant, the courts punished at discretion anything they regarded as sinful. They punished religious offenses, or ordinary offenses, which were regarded as spiritual because they were sins. These were divided into two classes, those which arose out of the relation of the sexes and those which did not. The most important of the latter were perjury, defamation, witchcraft, breach of faith, and drunkenness. In Hale's "Criminal Precedents" the cases of perjury noticed are, perjury to arbitrators, perjury as a compurgator, perjury in the ecclesiastical court in denying incontinence upon the ex-officio oath, perjury in not keeping an oath, in relation to a will, and in not making a payment according to an oath. No instance is cited of perjury as a witness in a lay court. Breach of faith not involving perjury was an ecclesiastical offense, and the civil courts invented the action of assumpsit to maintain jurisdiction of cases based on breach of faith.

The ecclesiastical court took jurisdiction of every form of incontinence, and the parties charged were put upon their ex-officio oath to answer all questions put to them. In one case of assault with intent to ravish, the offender was the parish priest. He purged himself by the oath of himself and four fellow priests as compurgators.

The decrees of the ecclesiastical courts were enforced by the aid of the civil power, and by excommunication—the less and the greater. The less deprived a man of all the offices of the church. The greater cut him off from the society of all Christians. An excommunicated person could not sue, could not give evidence, nor receive a legacy. His blood was attainted. He was infamous. If he refused to submit to penance, the ecclesiastical court reported him for contumacy to the court of chancery—a court in its early days presided over by a high prelate—and a writ of de excommunicato capiendo was issued, and he was imprisoned until he submitted.*

The court of the Star Chamber also claimed jurisdiction over the beliefs and morals of the people, and followed the practice of putting the accused on oath to compel him to purge himself or confess the charge against him. This court under Charles I. declared perjury by a witness to be a misdemeanor, and from that time it was punished as a common-law offence. W. S. BUSH.

SAMSON AS A MEDIUM.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We clip the following from the Golden Gate:

"It is a healthy sign of the times when church congregations present mediums with silver cake baskets for telling them about Spiritualism in an inspirational address. This was done in Los Angeles, Cal., where the minister himself was present and opened services with a prayer. Mrs. Maud Lord was the fortunate medium in this instance."—Way.

I do not agree with the "Way" and the "Golden Gate" in regarding this as a healthy sign. It is the reverse of healthy, as every scientific or Liberal Spiritualist knows.

When ministers "open services" with prayer, honest people may expect to be humbugged. "When church congregations present mediums with silver cake baskets for telling them about Spiritualism in an inspirational address," it is a sign that those mediums are prostituting their inspiration to perpetuate error and falsehood. Unmixed truths are not what "church congregations" want. They will give a "silver cake basket" any day for a grain of truth mixed with a ton of superstitious rubbish which may help them to "hold on to business at the old stand" with some show of consistency.

Being a scientific Spiritualist of many years' experience, I boldly affirm that modern Spiritualism does not sustain Jewish mythology or the absurd creeds of Christianity. That Mrs. Maud Lord lends her inspiration—if she has any—to this hopeless task is apparent to all her hearers. I heard her, in San Diego last winter, speak on "Bible Spiritualism." On this occasion she gave a general rehash of Jewish mythology. For more than an hour we listened to these old stories, "tedious as a thrice told tale, vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man."

Samson was her favorite hero, showing the wonders that God performs through his chosen mediums. She did not indorse Samson's moral character, however. So much the better for her. "Samson was a wicked man," she said, over and over again, "yet the spirit of God gave him this power." She did not say how God came to take such a fancy to such a bad man. She detailed, without blushing, the hair story, and the fox story, immortalized by the genius of Heston in the Truth Seeker. "The spirit of God descended," she said, "on Samson, and enabled him to catch the three hundred foxes;" but we were left in the dark as to whether the spirit of God descended on the foxes to induce them to tamely submit to having their tails tethered in orthodox style for God's glory. This lady also informed us in this address that she had been invited in Los Angeles to assist at a revival meeting in the Methodist church. We were not surprised at it. Such inspirational addresses as hers go a long way in awakening sinners to the danger of falling into the hands of a God like Jehovah, and a fox-hunting medium like Samson. It is time to "flee from the wrath to come" when God's medium can corral foxes like that, and inspirational mediums tell it for the truth in this enlightened age.

* 2 Stephen's History of Criminal Law, 398.

* 2 Stephen's History of Criminal Law, 403, 412.

Honor and wealth and "silver cake baskets" are held out by the church to those mediums who sustain the absurdities and superstitions by means of which the church holds her prestige and her power; while slander, persecutions, fine, and imprisonment fall to the lot of those who cling only to the truths of scientific Spiritualism.

MARY A. WHITE.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XI.—CONTINUED.

YE FOREST.

The Forest of Evidences.—The Giants of the Plains.—The Trees of the Forest.—Revelation and Prophecy.—The Guides Rejoicing.—Simon in Difficulties.

39. And Simon came to the tree called Prophecy, and would have ascended, but while he was about it, there came up one of the giants, and began to address him with fair language, desiring him but to examine the tree for himself, and without his glasses, and thereby satisfy himself whether it were rotten or no.

40. But the guides immediately beset the giant on all sides, casting mud and all manner of filth at him, yet the more they cast, the more did they bespatter themselves, for though they had very much practice yet was their aim so wretched, that whatsoever they threw fell not upon the giant but upon some of their fellow-guides, or else upon the tree.

41. But the giant, smiling with derision upon them, went up to the tree, and pulled off sundry of the branches, and showed the rottenness of the tree, and the ropes which held it, whereat the guides began to howl, and to roar, and rant, and rage, and bark, and spit, and belch, and bellow, and rave, and gnash their teeth, and hurl about on every side divers scarecrow missiles, such as damnation, eternal blazes, and other matters equally potent, and that with no little zeal, and no great discretion.

42. But the dauntless giant laughed at them, and when he had stripped the tree, he passed on, administering to one a wholesome kick, bequeathing to another a noble tumble, and helping another to a bruised pate.

43. But when the giant was gone out of sight, then did all the guides like unto a flock of geese run a little way after him, hissing and threatening all manner of unutterable things if he dared to return; and when they had pursued him a very little way, they all ran together as it were with a flourish of trumpets, cackling, and rejoicing, and hugging themselves and each other, and saying to each other how well they had beaten him and discomfited him and driven him away.

44. Aha, said one who had possessed himself of a bloody nose by running against one of the trees in his haste to escape—Aha, did I not bethwack him?

45. Yea, verily, that didst thou, said another, who was earnestly chafing his northern extremities—and did not I also maul him?

46. Truly thou didst, said the other, after which they cackled again.

47. Oh, that they would let us alone, said a timorous one, for they cause us woeful mischief, the forest is scarce half its former size, and they beguile away many of our pilgrims. Oh, that our King would remember them.

48. Fear not, said another, our King will remember them for evil in the day of his reckoning.

49. But, said Simon, wonderingly, why doth he not cut them off now, and thereby make known his power and prevent his people being misled?

50. What, said one of the guides angrily, dardest thou question the doings of our King?

51. And Simon said, I did forget myself, and will take more heed to my speech.

52. And the guide said, Take heed thou dost; remember 'tis for thee to submit and to believe, and not to question; and Simon said, I will remember.

53. And one said, Let us sing a song of thanksgiving for our great victory over the accursed giant, and they all answered, Amen, and sang.

54. Thy praise we'll sing, our gracious King, for thousands thou hast slain. And through thy might, we've put to flight, this monster of the plain. But yet, oh King, we fain would bring, destruction on them all. For on our trees they daily seize, and with their weapons maul. But with thy aid, they shall be made to fly like rotten sheep. We'll make them shake, and fear and quake, and for—

55. Perdition, cried one of them suddenly, the giants are upon us, and they all fled hastily away, leaving their song of triumph unfinished.

56. And when the giants were gone away, the guides bestirred themselves, and fastened on the boughs and leaves of the tree again, and swore by their King that the tree was unhurt and perfect in all its belongings, and had more cackling and rejoicing, and bound up the tree with more ropes.

57. And Simon had on his glasses, and rejoiced with the guides, and believed the tree to be immovable as the heavens. And Simon desired to ascend the tree called Prophecy, so the guides took one of the ropes called Sophistry, and threw it over one of the topmost boughs, and made it fast to another rope which Simon had with him called Self-conceit, and by their means began to draw Simon up.

58. And Simon went up swiftly, and began to be jubilant, but there suddenly struck him one of the stones called arguments (which a giant had thrown) and he fell down headlong.

59. And Simon fell upon the fence which surrounded the forest, and which did divide the forest hereabouts from the land of Narrow-gulleys, which bordereth on the Plains of Science. And whosoever falleth into the land of Narrow-gulleys is straightway unable to swallow so much as he was wont, and is not able nor indeed willing to return to the narrow-way, but goeth onwards to the Plains and joineth himself to the giants.

60. And Simon fell upon the fence, and was as it were balanced thereon, his head hanging down on the side towards the land of Narrow-gulleys, and his feet hanging down on the other side, and for a little while he stayed so.

61. But his head being very light, and there being but little in it, he shortly fell back into the forest, and was gathered up by the guides.

62. And the guides took away the rope called Self-conceit, and in its place put another called Confusion and at last drew him up.

63. And Simon, over-persuaded by the guides, did his utmost to believe that he had seen the city he was in search of, and very nearly succeeded.

64. And the guides desired him to examine the tree to see that it was perfect, but bid him to take heed to do it reverently, and made him pass over certain portions. And Simon examined and was satisfied, and saw not the patchwork.

To be Continued.

THE DAWES-CAMPBELL DEBATE.

I wish to thank friend Clow, of Hillsboro, for his fair synopsis of the one-night debate between Rev. James Campbell and myself. I promised Mr. Clow that I would write out my review for Campbell's pamphlet, and publish it in the Truth Seeker; but I have not done so for two reasons. First: I have not had the time. Second: I wrote Mr. Campbell stating that I would send to the Truth Seeker my review of his pamphlet if he would submit his defense to the same journal for publication. I received no reply from Mr. Campbell, so I concluded that he either had no time, or preferred not to allow his defense to be placed before an intelligent public.

I reviewed ten propositions found in Mr. Campbell's book, while he made no attempt to defend more than three or four of his own statements. He wasted most of his time defending portions of his book that I did not criticise. Mr. Campbell showed a disposition to be courteous, but it seems to me that a man accustomed to public speaking should be more logical than Mr. Campbell proved himself to be that night. Why should he have defended propositions in his book that I did not review. He could not know that there would be any difference between us on those points. To show how illogical Mr. Campbell was, I shall give this illustration. Harvey and Clark are two grammarians, and there are differences between them. Harvey reviews Clark's grammar, and criticises statements made by Clark in his discussion of the properties of verbs. Clark, in defense, instead of defending the points made against him by Harvey, endeavors to prove that his discussion of the properties of nouns is conducted on sound principles. In such a case as this would not Mr. Harvey smile in pity upon Mr. Clark? Now this is about the way our debate was carried on for one night in Hillsboro. I reviewed as many propositions of Campbell's book as I could in one hour's time. Mr. Campbell, in defense, did not attempt to sustain the propositions reviewed, but talked about other portions of his book, which I could not notice in a ten minutes' rejoinder. Nor would I have noticed much of his argument had I had the time, for I was the one raising the objections; he the one to defend. Mr. Campbell, making no defense of the statements reviewed, was an admission on his part that his statements were indefensible.

North Yamhill, Or.

GEO. H. DAWES.

MR. ROSCOE'S FAIR ARGUMENT.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I, as a Single Tax man, am grateful to FREETHOUGHT for bringing that theme up for discussion, and I am entirely convinced that "nothing is so fatal to a good cause as the policy of silence," therefore I thank FREETHOUGHT for not treating the Single Tax after that policy. With this explanation over, I will try to meet, some at least, of your difficulties in regard to the Single Tax. Let us quote: Mr. R. says that under the Single Tax "no one who did not use land to the point of its highest productiveness could pay the economic rent levied by the government." To which you reply, "He does not define the highest productiveness, but in a crowded community that point, he will doubtless admit, would be determined by the height of the building erected upon a city lot." It would, of course, be determined by the kind of building which was put on the lot, and by the kind of lot upon which that building stood. Let me illustrate. The site of the Times building on the corner of Park Row and Nassau street, New York city, is a very valuable piece of land. With the building that now stands on it, it is employed to the highest point of productiveness, but the building which was there before the present one was erected, did not employ that particular site "to the highest point of productiveness," although it would have been entirely appropriate, in an economic sense, to a site half as valuable. So you see that not only the height of the building has to be considered, but all the other things which pertain to buildings as well. If now that building were intended for a lodging house, it would not have cost one half the money, although it might have risen higher, but it is evident that no one could live and pay the ground rent (to say nothing of the house rent) by keeping lodgers on such valuable land. This is what I mean by using land to the highest point of productiveness.

Let us take another case, that of a highly valuable farm near a populous center. It is plain that if the owner grows wheat or rye on it, when there would be a greater profit in "garden truck," he is not using his land to the highest point of productiveness, and since highly valuable farms near populous centers would bear a comparatively high economic rent, it is plain that owners could not live unless they produced at the greatest possible profit, and this highest profit would depend, as you say, on fertilizers, machinery, etc., to a certain extent, although no greater expense would be entailed for those things than would be necessary if the land were used to grow cereals. Labor, of course, would cost somewhat more, since it costs more to live near large towns than it does near small villages.

You say further:

"The man, therefore, with only sufficient capital to erect a one-story house could not live in the city, because he would not be able to pay the economic rent which the highest productive capacity of his lot would demand; for it must be remembered that it is claimed that land will be taxed, not for what it is actually worth to the owner, but for what it is worth to one who has capital to improve it to the point of its highest productiveness."

Whether the economic rent would be too onerous for the owner of a one-story house in the city, would depend upon what part of the city the house was situated in. If we suppose that the land occupied by the New York Times building is the site used by this one-story dwelling it is clear that the owner would have been frozen out long ago, and that too without the intervention of the Single Tax. For although the land in question is only about the size of an ordinary village garden, it is worth something like a million of dollars. Do you think that our impecunious cottager would (or should) be allowed to stay there for what he could afford to pay under the present system? and if not, why should he be treated more leniently by the Single Tax? Do you not think then that the ground should be taxed, not "at the figure it is worth to the owner," but "at the amount it would be worth to one who had sufficient capital to use it to the point of its highest productiveness?" There are less valuable lots where one-story buildings are appropriate. Let our protege sell his privilege to the valuable land (as he easily could) and retire to ground commensurate with his means. But how long do you suppose it would take our cottager to borrow money enough to build the Times building, if he had a clear title to the land?

You state your conclusion thus: "Therefore the system which freezes out the capitalistic speculator, freezes out the non-speculator without capital, just as effectually."

I think you will admit that it would freeze out the latter only in case he persisted in cluttering up a valuable site with his one-story house, which he would not under any circumstances do, for he would either sell his right to some one for a good round sum, or borrow money on the security of the lot and erect a suitable building thereon.

But let us suppose that this cottage is at present on ground that bears no higher economic rent than its owner can afford to (and should) pay, and that the pressure of increasing population (which is the only thing that could raise the economic rent, hidden minerals, or something like that aside) in a year, doubles his land value and therefore his tax; do you not believe that he could easily get enough to pay for his improvements from some would-be user—if he did not wish, or could not afford to use that land himself—to enable him to re-establish himself quite as comfortably, and without loss, at least, on cheaper ground?

Again you say; "It is the same among farmers. The man with capital to stock his ranch, may hold it, or if it be farming land he can, if he has capital, employ men and machinery so as to use it to the point of highest productiveness. At present, a laborer able to save something may buy a lot, and pay for it by installments, paying taxes only on the vacant lot until he gets a house, but the Single Tax demands that he shall pay taxes from the first on the amount his land would be worth with a seven-story building on it."

Here it seems to me that you are laboring under the impression that farmers would be taxed high because they own large areas. Such would not be the case, for the Single Tax levies the tax on the value and not on the area of land. Let us illustrate. The average farm is not worth, probably, over five thousand dollars, and this amount will include improvements, machinery, and cattle sufficient to run the farm. If we suppose such a farm to be struck by a cyclone which should uproot all cultivated fruit trees, remove all fences, wells, houses, or other improvements, together with the cattle and whatever of fertility had been added to the land by the labor of the farmer, what would be left would be the basis of the tax which our theory deals with. How much of the five thousand dollars do you suppose would remain? Very little, probably not more than one thousand dollars, which is about the value of a city lot, twenty by one hundred feet. Further, a large part of the value of land at present is water (otherwise speculative value). The fact that ground is made artificially scarce by being held out of use for high prices, raises the price of land, just as monopoly raises the price of anything else. If the land were taxed at its present selling price, the owners would be obliged to improve it or diminish their holdings, because the tax would be too high to pay unless they produced something on it. This forced improvement would increase work, and the necessity of getting rid of land which it would not pay the present owners to improve (though it might pay others), would force down land values by eliminating this speculative moisture, and all land values would depreciate in proportion, so that the amount for taxation would be greatly lessened. It is not hard to see that this fall in value will benefit the farmer in more ways than one. Now let us look at our laborer who has been treated so well by the present system that he can manage to save something to buy a lot (although his name is not legion I think), but who would be impoverished, and denuded of his hard-earned dollars by the Single Tax. Do you not believe that it would be easier for this man to get a lot if the speculators were forced to let go? Ought we not look to the welfare of the laborer who under the present system can only get a bare living, and whose name, unlike the other, is legion? If the erection of a seven-story building carried with it no penalty, would there not be more of them made? And since labor has more or less to do with buildings being made, does it not seem as if the freedom from taxation enjoyed by seven-story buildings would increase our laborer's wages, by making a greater demand for labor? The laborer is not assisted, has not been, and never can be assisted, to save enough to buy a lot, by the tax on the products of labor. What such a tax does do is to diminish employment, reduce wages, and hinder those whose only means of subsistence is their labor, from getting anything but a hand-to-mouth living, and frequently not that. Single Tax would make it unnecessary for the laborer to buy a lot, since if it were in force, it would only be necessary for him to pay the economic rent to the state, if his site was valuable (nothing if it were not), and erect his modest little tenement with the capital now gobbled by the landlord, who sells that to which he has no greater right—in equity—than has the buyer.

E. O. ROSCOE.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

TRY IT, BROTHER WASHBURN.

According to FREETHOUGHT, the San Francisco Freethought Society is allowed to enjoy itself about as it pleases on Sunday, as it will be seen by the following announcement which was made at the close of the meeting on April 28.

Next Sunday evening there will be a social and dance instead of a lecture. Tickets of admission are placed at 25 cents.

Think of the Ingersoll Secular Society holding a dance in Investigator Hall some Sunday evening! But, why not?—Boston Investigator.

ON THE TRAIL.

At last I am away up in the hills of Mendocino county, at Ukiah, the classic little city, where the irate Christians throw lighted lamps at Liberal lecturers. Mr. Putnam still lives and the good work still goes on. I find a number of Liberals and Spiritualists here, also an orthodox "distracted" meeting in full blast. Since the above gymnastic feat of throwing lighted lamps, the authorities will not give the use of the court house for lectures, so I engaged the Opera House, and gave two lectures to very fair audiences. Ukiah is the end of the Donahue and North Pacific railroad, on Russian river, and is built on a level plateau surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills and mountains that make a scenery grand in the extreme. A large portion of the town was burned up a year or two ago, and the long hard winter has nearly paralyzed all business here. For three weeks the cars did not reach here, and over five feet of water fell during the winter. From one-half to two-thirds of all the stock in the county perished, some ranches losing every hoof they had. In many parts of the county the snow was eight to ten feet deep, so that animals, especially sheep, could not get around to hunt feed, and thus died. All this, with poor crops last season, makes a cry of distress and hard times all through this fine region. The business men are doing very little and there seems to be no money in circulation.

I stayed in Ukiah nearly a week and made some splendid friends, and shall return here again some time in the future. I stopped with the Hogan brothers, who keep the Ukiah House, which is a very home-like place, and although full to overflowing, always has room for "one more." The brothers are very genial fellows, standing over six feet four, and every bit of the seventy-six inches of both is Liberal to the core. They care but little for the false gods of history, and believe in a good time now, or one world at a time. Stages run from here to Saratoga springs, Vichy springs, Blue lake, Clear lake, and in every direction north, east, and west. The valleys are very rich in soil, and the mountains rich in ores and timber. Verily, California is a great state and will go on forever in its greatness.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Thanks! Yet Life is Brief.

To the Editors of Freethought:

If it is allowable I would suggest that you read up a little on Single Tax; not to believe, nor to refute, but just to learn the truth of the matter.

Springfield, Ill.

Respectfully,

H. WALKER.

Mr. Hoover's Work Anticipated.

MR. GEO. E. MACDONALD, Dear Sir: A friend has sent me a copy of "A Handbook of Freethought," by W. S. Bell of Oakland, California. I find it a gem of the first water. It covers the ground and leaves nothing to be desired. I was collecting material for a similar book for my own use, but since the receipt of Mr. Bell's masterpiece I find my work anticipated. He has conferred a favor on every Freethinker in the country by its compilation, and I wish, through you, to publicly thank him.

Yours fraternally, HARRY HOOVER,
Pres. Pittsburg Secular Society.

Pittsburg, Pa.

Sam Jones Apotheosized.

To the Editors of Freethought:

During the months of February and March we had a continued revival meeting, lasting eight weeks, at the South Methodist church in Ukiah, when many of the prominent miracles were explained and a considerable amount of buffoonery, a la Sam Jones, exhibited. In the little episode of Jonah and the whale, that whale was gotten up expressly for that case. The Rev. Atkinson is the officiating pastor, but during the siege there were some four or five importations from other parts, the most of whom seemed to be pretty well imbued with Jonesism, and, consequently, anti-Ingersollism. Some twenty-seven to thirty acquisitions to the church were claimed, notwithstanding the continuous rains. So you see theology is flourishing in Ukiah.

The Rev. Atkinson is of himself a fortress of strength. During the siege he introduced Jacob's ladder, with the angels descending and ascending, and explained to our astonished vision the descent and ascent of Christ down from and up to his throne, by the way of the same ladder. In addition to the main ladder, numberless small ladders were attached to the main stalk, radiating to the most remote parts of the earth, and affording facilities for all points to communicate directly with the heavenly throng. As the quotations from Sam Jones were so frequently interspersed, and eulogies so plentifully showered upon him, I conjectured this ladder enterprise must certainly be a late revelation through the Rev. Samuel Jones. Therefore, it is fair to presume, the self same said Samuel is at least canonized, and not only a saint, but an adjunct to the holy trinity, from this time forward, henceforth and forever.

Let it be, "In the name of the father, of the son, of the holy ghost, and of Sam Jones." Selah. Yours truly, T. MCC.
Ukiah, Cal.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Benicia, Cal.....	May 18	Fox.....	July 10, 21, 22
Ft. Jones.....	May 20, 21	John Day.....	July 24
Linkville, Or... May 23, 24, 25, 26		Prairie City.....	July 25
Talent.....	May 30, 31	Baker City.....	July 27, 28, 29
Ashland.....	June 1	Union.....	July 30
Eagle Point.....	June 2, 3	Summerville.....	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Brownville and Coburg..	June 5 to 8	Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11
Grey's River.....	June 11 to 18	Rosalia.....	Aug. 13
Portland.....	June 23	Plaza.....	Aug. 14
Cascades, Wash.....	June 24, 25	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Fossil, Or.....	June 29	Spokane Falls.....	Aug. 17
Lost Valley.....	July 1	Davenport.....	Aug. 18, 19
Wagner.....	July 2, 3, 4	Buckley.....	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Prineville and vicinity..	July 7 to 18	Tacoma.....	Aug. 25
Monument.....	July 18	Port Townsend.....	Aug. 31
Hamilton.....	July 19

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39½ Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frédéric Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Frédéricburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment

cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Gliudeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By B. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.

Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools Price, 5 cents.

The Parson Was Human After All.

A revivalist by the name of Patterson had met with great success in a Western town. He was a college graduate, and was at one time a remarkable athlete, but like the bad baronet in "Rudlygore," he had given up all his wild proceedings and become a preacher, developing a wonderful influence over the lawless element. One afternoon a rather uncouth-looking man called on Parson Patterson at his room in the hotel.

"Parson, I've heard tell of you, and I've come to consult with you."

"Ah! another brand plucked from the burning. Shall we kneel and offer up a prayer?" exclaimed Patterson, fervently.

"No, parson, guess not. I don't come here on my own account. I'm all hunkey-dorey."

"Some dear friend who is still in the bond of sin and the gall of iniquity?"

"No, parson, you are plump off your base. I have heard how you can tackle the toughest customers and talk them inter being as perlite as pie."

"My efforts among the rude classes have not been destitute of good results," replied the parson, with pardonable pride.

"They tell me you can talk the cussedness out of the worst of 'em. I heard that one feller wanted to lick you, an' now he goes around an' wants ter lick any one who says you aint a daisy."

"My humble efforts, I fear, have been much exaggerated."

"Guess not. I got it pretty straight. Now, the case is just this way. I'm er hired man out here on a farm. Every once in a while the boss is so full of cussedness that he kicks and cuffs me around. I'm some on the box myself, but I get the worst of it every pop."

"Do you wish me 'to reason with your employer?"

"No, I don't care to put you to all that trouble. Just kinder give me some pints as ter how you take the cussedness out of a man by moral suasion and all that sort of thing, and I'll try it on him."

"It's very simple my friend. All I do is follow the directions of the inspired penman. Remember that a soft answer turneth away wrath."

"I've tried' givin' him taffy, but it's no go. Maybe I didn't giv' it to him' right. Now, suppose I am the boss an' you are the hired man. Now, I'll treat you just like the boss treats me, and you come the soft answer racket on me an' see if it has any effect on me."

The clergyman supposed that the visitor would merely use strong language. He was not prepared to have the hired man cast a reflection on his parentage, and simultaneously make his teeth rattle with a cuff alongside of his head. Instead of turning the other cheek, the revivalist's college instinct overcame him. His left shot out, and the hired man piled up in a corner in such a dazed condition that it was only after a pitcher of water was poured over him that he came around.

"I beg ten thousand pardons. I forgot myself entirely. Alas! why did I resort to the arm of flesh in a moment of weakness!" exclaimed the parson.

"Not much weakness 'bout that" moaned the hired man, holding on to his jaw.

"I will do what I can to make amends. I will go with you and pray with your brutal employer."

"No need of it, parson. I saw how you did it. You reached out with your left and gave me an upper cut that knocked me silly. The upper cut with the left. Good-bye, parson, I'll not forget your kindness."

"But can you not bring your cruel employer to the camp meeting that he may see the evil of his way?"

"Maybe so, parson, but I'll try that left hand upper cut first, and if I don't have any luck we'll swing the moral suasion on him afterwards. If I had a fist like you I wouldn't fool away any time preaching. I'd tackle John L. Sullivan. Good morning, parson. They told me you were an expounder, but I didn't believe it. Now I know you are a professional," and climbing into his wagon he drove home with one hand, while he soothed the lump on his jaw with the other. —Texas Siftings.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Pastor.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor

1222 STOCKTON ST.

bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. See A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

By EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Spring Styles Abroad.

He was a Kaffir bold,
She was a Zulu maid;
All his deep love he told
As o'er the sand they strayed.
Pleasant their lives must be;
Theirs was simplicity,
There was no guile.
Plain in their happiness,
Simple their style of dress,
Shown in no fashion book;
All he wore was a look
Brimful of tenderness—
She wore a smile.

The Wondrous Power of Song.

Congressman John Allen of Mississippi, in addition to being one of the wits of the House, is also something of a "plunger" in society. He was present at a musicale given at the Shoreham by Mrs. Jeanette Thurber a few evenings ago, and talked music with a fluency that astonished some of those who heard him. During the evening Mrs. Thurber engaged the Mississippi congressman in conversation for a few minutes, and incidentally inquired if he was familiar with the study of music.

"Oh, yes," replied Mr. Allen, promptly. "I am something of a musician myself. In fact, I am so fond of music that I introduce it into my everyday life with very beneficial effect. I control my wife and family and govern my entire household by the power of my music."

"I don't quite comprehend you," answered Mrs. Thurber, smiling.

"Well," said Mr. Allen, "it is just like this: When I request my wife or any member of my family to do anything, and they refuse, I threaten to sing. They immediately relent and do my bidding rather than hear me."

ANDREW D. WHITE will take "The Antiquity of Man and Egyptology" as the subject of a chapter in the "Warfare of Science" series, to appear in the June "Popular Science Monthly." His account of how Egyptian chronology was cramped and twisted to make it agree with the belief that the first man was created just 4004 years before Christ, shows an intellectual servility in the past that can hardly be realized at the present day.

If, as they say, the good die young,
This fact is plain enough,
There's some advantage, after all,
In being rather tough.

A SAILOR having died at sea, the carpenter made a coffin for the corpse, but found he had no lead to sink the coffin, so he put in coal instead. A sailor stood by, laughing while the funeral service was being conducted, and being asked by the captain the meaning of his unseemly conduct, replied: "I have seen many a man going to hell, but I never saw one take his own fuel with him."

THE boy who can say his verse best at the Sunday-school concert isn't always the boy who can step up in front of the other boys and take the prettiest girl in the school home after the concert is all over.

MRS. GOSSIPPE—Did you have any game at the dinner?

Mrs. Malapropos—Well, I heard somebody say something about chicken croquet, but I was not asked to precipitate.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT, THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER

should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequent, but Dr. Fellows stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!
Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science..... 1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization..... 2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols..... 4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species..... 2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science..... .25
 American Addresses..... 1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin..... .50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals..... 2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty..... 1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities..... 1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours..... 1.75
 The Moon..... 2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State..... .30
 First Principles..... 2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc..... 2.00
 Universal Progress..... 2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic..... 1.25
 Education..... .75
 Organic Evolution..... .75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science..... 1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease..... 1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life..... 1.75

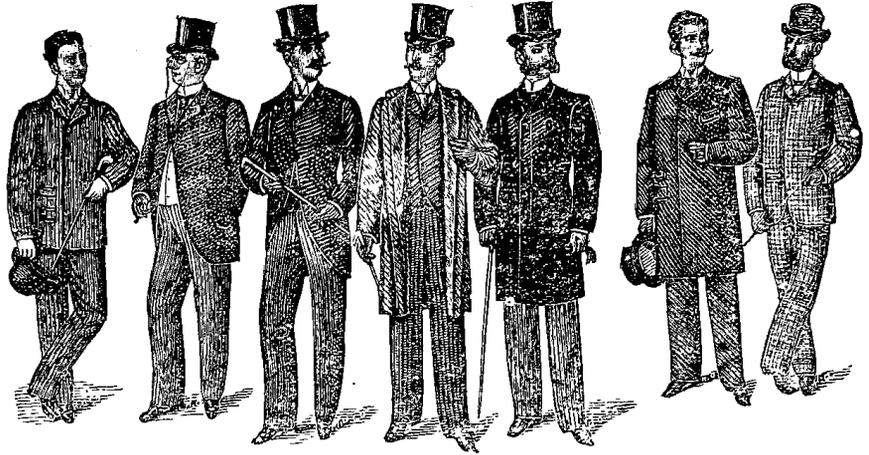

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism Stated by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote..... .30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories..... .30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting..... .30
 The Distracted Young Preacher..... .25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,
 A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Beville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
 OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.
 N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
 Telephone 1950.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
 For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"Bible Contradictions," 15 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 ka at Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size edge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, P. TNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months..... .75
 Three Months..... .50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
 12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Let the Ghosts Go.

Poor human hearts that yearn beyond the tomb,
Wherein you all must moulder into dust;
What has the blank immitigable gloom
Of light or fervor to reward your trust?

Live out your whole free life while yet on earth;
Seize the quick present, prize your one sure boon;

Though brief, each day a golden sun has birth;
Though dim, the night is gemmed with stars and moon.

Love out your cordial love, hate out your hate;
Be strong to grasp a foe, to clasp a friend:
Your wants true laws are; thirst and hunger safe:

Feel you have been yourselves when comes
the end.

Let the great gods, if they indeed exist,
Fight out their fight themselves; for they are strong:

How can we puny mortals e'er assist?
How judge the supra-mortal right or wrong?

But if we made these gods, with all their strife,
And not they us, what frenzy equals this?
To starve, maim, poison, strangle our poor life,
For empty shadows of death's dark abyss?

Not Qualified to Judge.

A case came up in the court over which Judge Brill presides in St. Paul, in which a colored woman was a witness. She testified that she had whipped her little boy very severely, and as she went on with the story of the exceedingly stiff beating she had administered, the Judge's clear brow grew a little darker, and he interrupted her to ask if it had been necessary to chastise the boy so severely. The colored lady looked astonished at the question. Gazing intently at the court, she inquired:

"Jedge, was you eber de father of a wuthless mulater boy?"

"No, no," said the judge, hastily.

"Then, Jedge, you don't know nuffin about the case."

A Diabolical Insinuation.

Johnny—Pa, does the devil ever go to church?
Pa—Why do you ask such a silly question?
"Because if he does he must have an awful cold in his head."

"How so?"

"I read the other day that the devil takes off his hat whenever he meets a hypocrite."

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

The Humboldt Library—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forns of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalle Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concern-
24. ing Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R. A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches.
39. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W. M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History.
45. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its
50. Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. Illusions.
57. James Sully.
58. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo.
63. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A.
64. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence
67. of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and
69. the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C.
72. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation
74. to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The
75. first three are single numbers, the last a double
75. number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
76. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in
76. England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
77. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M.
77. Williams.
80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of
81. Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
82. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six
83. essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
84. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
85. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
86. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
87. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
88. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
88. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
89. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
91. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the
92. action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special
93. number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas.
101. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-opera-
102. tion. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
105. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C.
108. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evo-
110. lution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy.
114. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth
114. Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of
115. Natural Selection, with some of its applica-
115. tions. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of
116. Natural Selection, with some of its applica-
116. tions. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Jaing.
117. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical
119. Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a
120. Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and
122. upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations.
122. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whympier,
122. Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes
123. and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administra-
125. tive Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—
causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures,
embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

A HAND-BOOK
OF
FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
The work consists of 381 pages and an index.
Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 22.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal. as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, [EDITORS.] SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 31, 1890.

THE Christians of this country should feel relieved to know that the Maori god recently contributed to the New York Museum of Natural History has been sent back to New Zealand whence it came. There is a high duty on gods, as home manufacture must be protected. It is lucky for Jehovah that he got in before the tariff was established.

To avert the dreadful hailstorms that have recently visited the town of Mahlen, in Germany, the people of the village met in their church May 22 to offer up prayer that fair weather might return. While upon their knees lightning struck the church, and four of the devotees were killed and twenty injured. Unbelievers who remained at home suffered no damage.

THERE is a special providence in the absence of the Rev. Dr. C. D. Barrows from the pulpit of the First Congregational church of San Francisco just at this time. If he were in the city he would be obliged to answer charges of scandalous conduct made by a newspaper, or vindicate himself by a libel suit. His vacation beginning just before the publication of the scandalous matter is a coincidence that has not failed to be remarked upon.

THE Rev. Dr. Stratton, ex-president of Mills College, has made the Methodist ministers of Oakland no end of trouble. They must meet in solemn conclave and discuss the momentous question whether or not the venerable defendant is guilty of kissing one of his teachers. But suppose that in the midst of these proceedings some clergyman with a quickened conscience should arise and say: "Brethren, how many are there of us here present who never committed the offense charged against Dr. Stratton? Let us pray that the miraculous power of God may cause the record of each to be written upon his forehead." Then what a scrambling there would be for hats!

CHRISTIAN Scientists have what they call a "Society of Silent Help." Every evening the members of the society are required to "sit in a quiet, retired place, if possible, at the hour of nine o'clock, and hold in silent thought, for not less than fifteen minutes, the words that shall be given each month by the editor of "Christian Science Thought," the organ of the believers. From

May 15 to June 15 this is what the members are required to repeat:

"There is no evil. There is no reality in matter. There is no sensation in matter. There is no life, substance, or intelligence in matter. There is no sin, sickness, or death."

The editor explains that "the difference in the solar time between widely separated places will not materially interfere with the result"—a statement which we are quite prepared to accept.

THE Rostrum, published at Jamestown, N. Y., by the Rev. Henry Frank, says:

"In San Francisco they seem to be approaching the goal of social reform more nearly than in any of our Eastern cities. Bellamy's so-called dream of Nationalism (i.e., the governmental control of telegraph wires, railroads, etc., and the municipal control of water works, street car lines, and public works generally) seems to be near the day of its inauguration in the bustling and aggressive Western metropolis. Perhaps San Francisco feels the influence of the Australian wave a little earlier than we of the East do and hence the greater their enthusiasm and the more practical their social agitation. Let the good work go on. The day of universal relief from the oppression of monopolies is not far away."

The Rev. Mr. Frank takes a more roseate view of the situation than some of the local Nationalists.

A SOCIABLE.

The Freethought Society will offer a musical and literary entertainment concluding with a dance, at the hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 1. Admission, 25 cents.

THE STANFORD SCHEME.

Now that the provisions of Senator Stanford's Land Loan Bureau bill have been placed before the country, it has to be admitted that the measure lacks nearly everything that could make it of any worth. In the first place the circulating notes to be issued, amounting to only one hundred millions, would be totally inadequate to the need. Even if loaned on incumbered land, that amount would not pay off the mortgages in any single state. But as the issue is to be loaned only upon unincumbered lands, the farmers whose lands are mortgaged, and who most need relief, will not be benefited at all. It is the old doctrine, "Whomsoever hath, to him shall be given." One hundred millions of money would scarcely be felt in a country of sixty-five millions of inhabitants, and the few farmers lucky enough to get a share of the circulating notes at two per cent. interest could readily loan it to their neighbors at thrice that rate of interest—a much more profitable method than applying it to the improvement of their lands.

If such a scheme as Senator Stanford's is to be adopted, it must be extensive enough to cover the whole ground. It will be totally impossible to have one class of money like these circulating notes, "equal in value to gold and silver money of the like denominations," drawing only two per cent interest while gold and silver are worth from six to twelve. The whole mass of money of which they are a part will reach the same level, and rates of interest will not be appreciably diminished. The original borrower, however, will get the benefit of the difference between two per cent. and the rate at which he may be able to loan the notes—a manifestly unfair proceeding.

Sincerely desiring to relieve farmers from the burden of interest-paying, Mr. Stanford should find out the total amount of mortgages in the country; and if they reach five hundred or five thousand millions, then nothing less than these sums can have the effect desired.

One hundred millions would not place a patch upon the ragged seat of agriculture.

Again, with the object of providing farmers with money at two per cent, there must be a sufficient amount of notes issued to reduce the general rate of interest to that figure. When they can get money for two per cent and loan it for six, the astute farmers will not keep it for their own use, but will let it out and thus in a few years pay their debt to the government with the profits of the transaction.

Having once started to provide a cheap circulating medium, there can be no stopping-place short of that point where money can be furnished for the cost of manufacture, and all interest, as such, abolished.

THE SUNDAY MOVEMENT.

A Sunday Observance Convention has just been held in San Jose, and largely attended. Here is the call that heralded the gathering:

"A convention in the interest of Sabbath observance will be held in San Jose on the 20th and 21st of May. All evangelical churches and the local unions of the W. C. T. U. are requested to send delegates; ministers of the gospel, and all friends of the Christian Sabbath desiring its sacred observance as well as a state law in recognition of it are invited. The great importance of the divine institution, the steady growth of opposition to it as a sacred day of rest, the alarming prevalence of Sabbath desecration, and the danger that a continental Sunday may displace our true American Sabbath, all call for combined wisdom and united effort to promote Sabbath sanctification and to secure a righteous civil law in our state that will tend to prevent the contemptuous disregard of our precious rest day."

The sessions of the convention were held in a Presbyterian church, and the speakers were all pious Christians. The committee reported nine resolutions, of which this is the first:

"We invite the co-operation of all good citizens in securing a Sabbath law in the state of California which shall protect all our citizens in their right to one rest day in seven."

This resolution is wholly superfluous, since all citizens are at present protected in their right to "one rest day" in seven, or a half dozen rest days if they can afford them. The resolution is also hypocritical, for what its framers desire is the enforcing of Sunday rest upon all citizens except ministers.

"Second—Believing that open saloons are among the greatest foes of the Sabbath as well as of temperance, therefore, resolved,

"Second—That we will labor incessantly for their total abolition, and recommend that in all incorporated towns and cities of our state and throughout the counties generally, through the boards of supervisors and the state legislature, the friends of the Sabbath will make special efforts to have ordinances passed that will close all saloons and drinking places on the Sabbath."

That is simply one-day prohibition. We have more respect for seven-days prohibitionists; and, indeed, the right to close a saloon on Sunday carries with it logically the right to close it the rest of the week. But the right is not conceded in either case.

"Third—That we hereby pledge ourselves to work for a law against all needless Sabbath work in our government's mail and military service, and in interstate commerce, and in the District of Columbia and the territories."

There is no call for a law against needless work on Sunday or any other day, because nobody does it. The tendency is in the opposite direction.

"Fourth—That it is the sense of this convention that the taking of mail from the post-office on the Sabbath, the reading or purchasing of Sunday newspapers on the Lord's day, or the publishing of church notices or other matters in such papers, are to be discouraged as violations of the fourth commandment."

Of course, but the fourth commandment is for Christians to observe. It has no place in our statute books.

"Fifth—That we consider Sabbath pleasure excursions, picnics, and the like to be desecrations of this day, demoralizing to the rising generation, and doing incalculable injury to those who participate in them, as well as to the towns and villages which are visited by them."

That depends upon the character of the persons attending the picnic, and not upon the day.

"Sixth—That we note with great satisfaction a movement among some of our secular papers and railroad authorities acknowledging the iniquity and abominations of Sunday excursions and picnics."

We would rather see indications of improvement in sobriety and deportment on the part of the excursionists. There is no satisfaction to good citizens to know that any excursion or picnic is iniquitous or abominable.

The other resolutions do not introduce anything new or good, but some of the remarks of the speakers are worth quoting to show on what grounds a Sunday law is demanded. Here is the argument of the Rev. T. B. Stewart, from San Francisco:

"When the news came through the North one Saturday night that Lee had surrendered, the people in their joy spent Sunday in great rejoicing and with the roar of cannon and the beating of drums violated the holy day of God. My mother, who had trained me up to the closest observance of the Christian Sabbath, said, when she read of this act, that the American people would be punished for this outrage upon the Lord's day. Before the next Sabbath came our people were bowed with sorrow for the death of Lincoln. This fact made a great impression on me at the time, and since then I have felt keenly the necessity of keeping the Lord's day holy."

Twaddle! Then came Mrs. Bateman, of Ohio, who said:

"We have in America tried the Puritan Sabbath, and we ought to know what its influence has been. Foreign nations have envied us this holy observance. All the nations of Europe are tending towards a more perfect keeping of the Lord's Day. There has been a Sabbath Observance Congress in France, and we may soon expect a Sabbath law in that state. This is very encouraging, for France is one of the three spots in the civilized world that has no Sunday law. The District of Columbia is the second, and, as you all know, California is the third. Steps are being taken to secure such a law at the national capital, and it behooves Californians to be active for their own state lest in the advance of Christian civilization this state be left lagging behind."

What nation is it, we would like to know, that envies us the Puritan Sabbath? None. On the other hand, the Puritan Sabbath, whose restrictions forbade a man to kiss his wife on Sunday, was an institution that set the whole world laughing at us. When Mrs. Bateman said that the District of Columbia has no Sunday law, she said what she ought to know is untrue. The District has a Sunday law as barbarous as that of any state in the Union. California has tried the Sunday law and abandoned it, but a Christian minister has testified that nowhere is Sunday more faithfully observed than in this state. And this, observation teaches us, is true. Those who desire to do so go to church, and no law could or ought to influence others to attend church against their will. The moment that coercion is used a principle is introduced which, logically carried out, would permit a Roman Catholic police officer to arrest any citizen found at home on Sunday, escort him in handcuffs to a pew, and lock him in until the close of the services.

A FINE SCHOOL OFFICIAL.

It is a sad thing that so many of the offices of large cities fall into the hands of low ward politicians, but it is still sadder that the public schools cannot be kept out of their clutches. A man named McPherson occupies the position of janitor or curator of a large educational establishment in San Francisco. His fitness for the place can be appreciated when it is known that he wrote the following letter to the editor of a city paper who had criticised his actions:

"I see by your paper that you still keep up your harpin about me, don't you think you had better Clean your mouth out a little Before you Publish any more. You only waste your paper and ink. This must stop right here patience ceases to be a Virtue sometimes and there are times in a Man's life when you may go too fur with your Vile slandrös tongue and Pen. Sometimes the pen is Mightre than the sword but other times it changes, and when it does it is like a whirlwind comes with a crash and takes everything before it let me warn you before it May be too late. You talk about Buckleys lambs I would sooner be a Buckley Lamb and have Chris Buckley for my friend than Have a Million men liké you for a friend. I have stood your attac long enough you have Published lies enough about me you have tried to break my Family and home up and drive me an outcast from home and friends let this be the last time you try to wronge me I write this letter myself without anybody help or dictation tis the last time I will warn you. My home shall be protected by me with my life you must take the Conquence if this Is not stoped dont think for a Moment that I am braggin I mean what I say and shall do what I think best for myself and Family read this Carefully I think I have spelled some Words Wronge but that makes know diferance you can read it if not bring it to me and I will read it in good stile for your benifit."

The efficiency of any public school system may well be questioned when it permits the employment of men like McPherson; and the citizen might be pardoned for reluctance to pay his taxes when he remembers where the money goes. But McPherson is not a bad sample of the men who control the minor affairs of our cities. He is doubtless a good Catholic. When he dies he will be buried with honors and a large funeral procession from the cathedral; and perhaps the sooner that event comes off the better.

THE San Jose "Herald" of May 17 says:

"The Stockton newspapers for several days have been full of the reports of a scandal which had for its central figure the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city. The gist of the charge was that he has been seen late at night on the street with a colored prostitute. The matter was brought before the directors of the association, and the secretary boldly and strenuously denied the charge, asserting that it was part of a cowardly plot to smirch his character as a godly young man, and to injure the association of which he was an officer, with a lot more gush of that sort. But after a few days' visit to San Francisco, the secretary confessed that the charge was true, and that he had deliberately lied when he denied it, and so had his witnesses, also active members of the Y. M. C. A. This is terrible. Where are we to look for examples of truth and chastity when ministers of the gospel, and officials of associations for the inculcation of personal purity, confess that they are leading lascivious lives after having perjured themselves and vilified their accusers?"

It would be hard to inform the editor of the San Jose "Herald" exactly where to look for examples of truth and chastity with a certainty of finding them every time. Doubtless he would discover some still left in the church if he search long and closely enough. There are many we know of among Freethinkers and among Spiritualists. The editorial profession, even, is not wholly destitute of them. Truth and chastity are virtues common to the race. By long professions of morality on the part of Christians a few people have been beguiled into believing that the church has a monopoly of the virtues, when in fact it is doubtful if she has her equal share. If any man desires to have always before him an example of truth and chastity, let him strive to be such himself, but he will look in vain for the object of his search among the loud-mouthed professors of piety.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL WANAMAKER has ordered the "Word," E. H. Heywood's paper, from the mails. If anybody imagines that we have not in this country as much tyranny as exists elsewhere, it is about time he were undeceived.—FREETHOUGHT.

We wonder if our neighbor has ever seen the "Word," and is aware of the amount of nastiness it contains. Such a paper should not only be excluded from the mails, but the public should be protected against such publications.—"Golden Gate."

We have heard sentiments similar to these before. About two weeks ago the Rev. Dr. Eastman of San Francisco called on the civil law to suppress such matter as appears in the "Golden Gate." Nevertheless we have read both the "Golden Gate" and the "Word" without feeling any desire for legal protection from the contents of either.

THIS ISSUE of FREETHOUGHT contains two poems adapted to Decoration Day, both written by men who have lived their three score years. "Age cannot wither nor custom stale the infinite variety" of these veterans in the cause.

It is hoped that the notices of expiration of subscription which we have sent to several hundred subscribers will not be a total waste of postage and stationery.

DECORATION DAY.

1890.

The Blue and the Gray lie sleeping, mingled their common dust,
With a new world's sentinels keeping guard o'er a solemn trust.
Ambition and Hate have faded, no more the battle array,
We cover the dead with roses, we cover the Blue and the Gray.

"Thank God" the battle is over, bitter revenge is gone,
The young girl keeps her lover, the mother her only son;
Life is nobler and better, the Nation born in a day
May cover its dead with roses, together the Blue and the Gray.

Heroes have struggled and perished, fathers and sons have died,
Hopes that young life cherished drowning in war's black tide,
The good and the bad together, mixed in a common clay,
Under the scattered heather, quiet the Blue and the Gray.

We tell to the young the story, how brave ones fought and fell,
We sing of the victors' glory, and life in the prison cell;
Of wounded, and shattered, and dying, all in the terrible fray,
"Thank God!" we scatter the roses now, over the Blue and Gray.

O loved ones! silent and solemn, what is the lesson you give
To dear ones forming the column, to nations beginning to live?
Is it war to the knife, with sorrow, to settle each hard dispute,
Or peace for the coming morrow? Speak, for ye are not mute!

The Blue and the Gray are crying, "Peace, good will to man,
The living are always dying, war is a costly plan.
Come let us reason together!" this is the work of to-day,
"Thank God!" you can scatter the roses over the Blue and the Gray.
San Francisco.

—THOMAS CURTIS,

OBSERVATIONS.

As I stood in front of Union Square Hall last Sunday evening watching the drift of things on the street, a man came along and inquired if I could direct him to Plymouth church. I replied that I could not; that I had been looking for Plymouth church ever since I came to San Francisco, but had never been able to find it. He then said that he had lived in the city twenty-seven years, and he would be dashed if he knew the name of any church. Then he walked up the street a little way and turned back to remark, "Here's your blessed institution. Here's your relic of our Pilgrim ancestors, and the recording angel can make note of it that this worm of the dust is about to attend divine service. If you hear anything drop in this neighborhood, you will know the roof has fell on a repentant sinner." He removed his hat to wipe a fevered brow, and plunged into the sacred edifice.

Thomas Curtis lectured before the Freethought Society on "The Public Schools and the Catholic Church." The Constitution of the United States, he said, guaranteed religious liberty to all people, yet it had failed to protect the children of Catholic parents against the religious slavery imposed upon them. The United States had disfranchised Mormons because they profess prior allegiance to the Mormon church. The Catholics occupy a similar attitude toward the government. The strength of a chain, said the speaker, is measured by its weakest links; so the stability of a state depends upon the quality of the mass of citizens. Its strength is not determined by the intelligence of the wisest men, but of the whole population. Intelligence is the one quality that can give permanence to our institutions. It therefore becomes the duty of the state to see that its citizens are intelligent, because the state bears the consequences arising from a lack of right education. Parents have no right to control the brains of children; therefore they have no right to send their children to religious schools. The state bears the expense of educating our youth, and hence the state has the right to say what they shall be taught. In order to learn what results from Catholic teaching we must look at Catholic countries—at Spain, at old Italy, and at our southern republics, where the majority are illiterate. The church organizes parochial schools, not to educate, but to manufacture Catholic voters, and in every large city, as in San Francisco, where parochial schools abound, the church has the government by the throat. The remedy is compulsory education by the state. Every boy from the age of eleven to fourteen should be sent to a state school and instructed in the principles of our government. The question must be settled, who owns the child—the parent, the church, or the state. Emphatically the state, said Mr. Curtis. A parent's natural and selfish love for his offspring causes him to support his children; the desire to use them for its own aggrandizement actuates the church to interest itself in the young, but the state cares for them in order that they may grow up good and intelligent citizens.

Mr. Healy was first on the floor after the speaker of the evening had closed, and launched into a howling panegyric of the Roman Catholic church. The church should control education. Man's first duty was to God as his will was revealed through the church. Catholics were the most loyal citizens. Neither Benedict Arnold nor Jefferson Davis was a Catholic. Catholics wanted the earth and would acquire it. Mr. Healy illustrated the Catholic desire for the earth by asking for an extension of his time, and when that was granted, he wanted more, which he did not get.

Mr. Curtis, in reply, alluded to the historical fact that the pope was the only foreign potentate who recognized the Southern Confederacy. As to Catholics being loyal subjects, he would ask if the pope, in claiming temporal sovereignty over Rome, was not in open rebellion against the Italian government. If he were King Humbert he would try his holiness for high treason, and then have him taken out and shot.

The meeting thus passed off pleasantly, though the exercises were disturbed somewhat by the noisy services carried on in an adjoining hall by the Rev. Alexander Dowie, the Australian faith healer.

Next Sunday night another sociable and dance is on the programme, with accompanying hilarity.

The Rev. Dr. Stratton, ex-president of Mills College, is in the lecture field. At San Jose he spoke on topics general enough to embrace the remark that "there is a certain chivalry in California which I believe out-balances that met with in the East. Yet we are still lacking. There is not a sufficient regard for woman. In the old country people are surrounded by arms," etc.

If the young lady teachers in Mills College are worthy of confidence, Dr. Stratton has been endeavoring to supply the lack of regard for woman. Such, it is said, is the character of his esteem for those differing from him in point of sex that it is not confined to members of his own household. And perhaps his allusion to the people of the old country being surrounded by arms was suggested by the position in which one of the above-mentioned young lady teachers found herself on the evening that the reverend gentleman entered her room, the surrounding arms being those of Dr. Stratton. The lady testifies that the doctor's meaning could not be misunderstood. If it was, this lecture explains it. He desired merely to introduce an old-country custom which but for the efforts of the clergy of our land might not be so well known on this side of the Atlantic.

No "News and Notes" this week from the Secular Pilgrim. This, I firmly believe, is not for the reason that Mr. Putnam has found nothing to write about; because, were he in a dungeon and saw a ray of sunshine streaking through his grated window, he could find a poetic thought in every mote that danced in the beam. The absence of a contribution from him this week, as I size it up, is due to his lack of foresight. He took no postage stamps with him. I got a card from him a day or two ago. He was in Oregon and wrote as follows:

DEAR GEORGE: I have struck it rich. Lectured three times, and am only 50 cents behind expenses. Yours' forever, SAMUEL.

He adds in a general way that the future gleams with promise, and that the earth trembles beneath the tread of the advancing hosts that fling to the glistening sun the radiant banners of progress. Morn spills its goblet of effulgence over the mountain tops; the chariot of day mounts the heavens to high noon; the declining orb in splendor sinks below the western clouds that lie in banks of red and gold above the far horizon's rim; the pale moon like a silver scimeter cuts through the sky's serene and vast abyss; the stars peep brightly from the void of space; night stretches forth her leaden sceptre o'er a slumbering world, and the Pilgrim dreams of a postage stamp large as a quarter section of government land.

If the issue were to be made, I think I should take exception to the doctrine of Mr. Thomas Curtis that the state owns the children. The person who has the first mortgage on the human infant, in my judgment, is its mother. Her claim is founded primarily upon the fact that she has suffered whatever inconvenience there may be in the production of the subject of these remarks, a burden which the state, whether republican, monarchical, or communistic, could not by any possibility assume. Then she feeds the little future president in a manner for which the best regulated governments make no provision. Likewise the state, especially a masculine state, would have but indifferent success at providing baby clothes and adjusting the same, even though the wisest of laws were made with that end in view. It is absurd, too, to imagine that the state could furnish a forefinger for the youngster to chew while essaying to get its latent teeth in sight, nor would the administration of a great country like this take half the pleasure the mother does in announcing the first success of the infant in that direction. If human happiness is the object of life, the state should at such a time withdraw its supervision and give the mother an opportunity to get what the newspapers call a scoop on the rest of the world. And when the incipient citizen makes his first attempt at articulate speech, what state, past, present, or to come, could officially translate dindin as a demand on the legislature for something to eat, or by-bys as an application for a free pass on the municipal line of baby-carriages?

There are other reasons why the state would make a poor fist at owning children; but if government ownership is to be introduced I see no way for our public officials to escape these duties now devolving upon the mother. Then the province of the father comes in somewhere, though I have not paid that subject so much attention; but I understand that he settles the bills, corrects his offspring when necessary, and gazes upon his hopeful son with fond paternal pride whenever the boy shows the first indication of possessing intelligence.

These offices, as I look at it, give the parents a certain lien upon their children, at least as long, I might say, as the children lean upon them; and therefore, in the absence of any one having a prior claim, they should be accorded the legal right to rear them, educate them, and instruct them in such principles of ethics, religion, or irreligion as they see fit.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Robert Hardie, a Los Angeles lawyer, was shot and killed by Apaches near Tombstone, Ariz., May 24. A committee appointed by the coroner's jury has appealed to the government for protection.—Edith O'Gorman, the "escaped nun," has been lecturing in San Francisco to rather small audiences.—Jesse Grigsby, one of Napa county's pioneers, died at Napa May 21, aged 71.—The ship Oneida, which left this port March 20 for Thin Point, Alaska, is reported wrecked near Sanak island. The officers and crew escaped, but 75 Chinese were drowned.—Dr. Edward McGlynn, the Single-Tax apostle, is in San Francisco.—George Francis Train's trip around the world occupied 67 days. He beat all previous records.—The school census shows a large falling off in the number of children of school age in San Francisco.—The Seventh Day Adventists are building a missionary boat, in which they will seek converts in the South Seas.—If half the contradictory reports about the location of San Francisco's new public building are true, we shall have million-dollar post-offices scattered all over the city.—Three murderers have been acquitted by our local courts within the past few days—two of them under the so-called higher law which permits a man to kill the seducer or traducer of his wife.

A school teacher at Lowell, Mass., scrubbed the mouth of a twelve-year-old boy with soft soap as a punishment for swearing, and the boy took sick and died. The parents will enter suit against the teacher.—The commander of the Salvation Army in the United States reports 1105 officers and 360 stations throughout the country. He estimates the weekly attendance upon salvation meetings at over 250,000.—The Chicago police report an attempt to blow up with dynamite the Haymarket monument erected to the policemen killed May 4, 1886.—S. M. Barrett, priest of St. Stephen's Roman Catholic church, Chicago, was fatally shot on the threshold of his residence by a stranger May 23.—A messiah has appeared among the Cheyenne Indians in Montana. His name is Porcupine, and he speaks in a trance under the control of the Great Spirit.

MARTYRS AND MARTYRDOM.

To the Editors of Freethought:

While having great respect for Mrs. Waisbrooker and her opinions on reform subjects, I cannot always agree with her; but on the question of Mr. Harman's goodness of heart, honesty, sincerity, and integrity, we can fully agree.

But that is not the point on which a controversy could be based; and right here I wish to remark that though Mr. Harman was rashly indiscreet, if not extremely foolish, to tempt fate as he did by "twisting the lion's tail and kicking his sides," I think no greater, more monstrous injustice has been done in our civil courts since the foundation of our government than was seen in his vindictive sentence; and it stands a deep and lasting disgrace to a country that boasts of being in the van of civilization. That Mr. Harman would be convicted and receive a moderate sentence, I have believed surely certain ever since he continued to "instruct the court" with open letters and to publish articles that further jeopardized his liberty. Had he been less rash and more discreet, which he might have been without sacrificing principle or manifesting cowardice, his conviction would never have taken place on the indictments which have now deprived him of his freedom. I am no believer in martyrs or martyrdom, and don't think any person is morally bound to offer himself up as a sacrifice to any cause. It is rank nonsense to harbor such an idea and to follow it out; and if public opinion is not ripe for a desired change in social customs or civil laws, a martyr produces no more effect in hastening such a change than would a windy prayer to the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Mrs. Waisbrooker says "when John Brown's body fell it shook the earth." Perhaps—but public opinion was at fever heat on the question of slavery, and endless agitation was everywhere prevalent. The coming change was near at hand, and whether John Brown had sought martyrdom or not, it would surely have taken place. Conditions were ripe for the conflict, and it had to come. Now let us view another case of martyrdom and note the result under different conditions. Four brave and earnest men were hanged Nov. 11, 1887, in Chicago, and intense excitement prevailed from one end of our country to the other, and prophets predicted dire disasters which would follow their unjust and unwarranted execution; but as martyrs their deaths resulted in nothing, and have not to this day. Why? Public opinion was not ripe for the change they sought to bring about, and while sympathetic natures were shocked in thousands of cases, no impulse was given to Anarchy, and it shows no sign of mounting the tidal wave that leads to success. D. M. Bennett did not seek martyrdom, but his unjust imprisonment has produced but one result to this day—it augmented his number of friends and increased the power and circulation of his grand old Truth Seeker. The Comstock laws under which he suffered deep injustice still disgrace our statute books. Why? Because public opinion has not been aroused to that extent necessary to demand their repeal. E. C. Walker and Lilian Harman experienced limited martyrdom in their efforts to subvert the "divine institution" of matrimony, but their sacrifices and sufferings had no more effect in destroying it or creating a system of sex union to replace it than a Chicago divorce case would. Why? Because the public pulse was not at fever heat on that subject, and a universal desire for a radical change was not then apparent, and is not yet. Ill-timed martyrdom is useless, and martyrdom of any kind should never be sought. We have during the past year heard much of the martyrdom of Bruno, but his tragic death has been vastly overrated as a spur to human advancement and the progress of civilization. The progress of ideas is natural, and the world would have kept moving had he recanted like Galileo and avoided the fearful fate which the love of Christ inspired the Catholic church to impose upon him. In those days in which he lived, the world had limited methods of communication between people and among nations, and in my opinion his heroic fortitude in facing such a death and the cause which led to that death were hardly known outside the immediate locality where he met his fate. Even if they were, Galileo escaped martyrdom and accomplished just as much for human progress as did Bruno; and while some may regard him as being less firm and resolute, I would ask all such if firmness and resoluteness in the face of such inevitable consequences is worth the manifestation. Would it not be better to yield when overcome by brute force and submit to the unavoidable? I say yes, and, with Ingersoll, would profess belief in anything to get rid of the thumb-screws, as he once expressed himself when speaking of martyrdom.

Now, in regard to Mr. Harman's martyrdom, I do not think that, as a resultant factor in producing a desired change, it will amount to anything, for public opinion is not aroused or interested in the work he had undertaken. My sympathies are with him, and I hope executive clemency will intervene before he is compelled to drag out the weary years in a prison hell which have been imposed upon him; and right here is a proper time to say that in all probability no criticism expressed in any Freethought paper had the slightest influence on his fate, and though some have expressed the thought that an editorial in the Truth Seeker would aid in his conviction, such talk is devoid of sense. Freethought papers are not read by such juries as convicted him, and I shall be surprised to learn that the judge is a subscriber to any of our Freethought papers.

Now a word in regard to the portrayal of disgusting crimes against nature. I do not agree with Mrs. W. that anything will be gained by such publications, and the less said about them the better. The knowledge that a certain vice is prevalent in Turkey has not prevented its introduction to the United States, and the West End scandal in London gives similar testimony for that country, whereas, in the estimation of certain "ulcer-probers," the knowledge of such a vice should have prevented its advent among other nations or other people. We have all heard the story of the Irishman who was asked at the confessional if he had had ever done a certain dishonest trick; he replied that he had not, but the next time he went to confession he admitted that he had. The priest then took him to task for denying it at the previous confession, but McGinty, or whatever his name was, replied that he didn't know anything about it until told by the priest. We all know the evils of intoxication, and men who have committed murder under the influence of whisky have left their solemn warning from the gallows; but a knowledge of this terrible evil does not restrict it, and man, that creature of moods and impulses, still drinks whisky and commits murders; and every city in the land deserves the same fate that befell Sodom and Gomorrah, and for the same reason.

In view of all this I fail to see where or why a further and more extended knowledge of vice is necessary for the salvation of the world or the purification of depraved and corrupted society; and while public opinion refuses to sanction the exposure and revealment of unnatural vices as old as the race, it is sheer folly to incur martyrdom by so doing. C. SEVERANCE.

Los Angeles, May 21, 1890.

A RULE OF RIGHT CONDUCT.

Pre-science renders con-science useless, and con-science surrenders to pre-science. Justice renders God useless, and God surrenders to justice.

An equal use of whatever is, is his due, is the due of every one, and is the only due that justice means to give to every one. If not, why not? If so, then what?

Then "give and receive an equal use of whatever is," is the universal standard rule of right conduct. If not, why not? If so, then what?

Then we can no more use two kinds of rules of right conduct than we can use two kinds of right angles; we can no more use two kinds of due than we can use two kinds of straight lines; we can no more use two kinds of duty and destiny than we can use two kinds of parallel lines; we can no more use two kinds of justice and right than we can use two kinds of perpendicular. When we give and receive said due, we do justice; and by doing justice we end all injustice, and establish justice. Then is when we are doing unto others as we would have others do unto us; and then is when we love our neighbor as ourself, and not before. Then we govern ourselves as we would have others govern themselves; and any one who is fit to give and receive his due is fit to live it. Yet unfit as the imperfect man may be to live it, there is no other life worth living. Unable as the imperfect man is to use his due, there is no other due for him to use; and there is no other due for the perfect man to use. We are cursed and blessed in accordance with the use which we make of things. Owing a thing adds no value to the thing. Whatever events heretofore have been could not possibly have been otherwise than they have been, and that is the reason why "whatever is is right," and forever will be so.

Con-science, the moral, religious, ethical, political, social, secular agent in the imperfect man, in every age and clime adored and worshiped, and in whom man puts his trust, is Satan, the law-giver, the devil, the mythological boy, the "old boy," the very old boy, old as Adam and Eve, old as good and evil, old as Harry, the "old Harry," the very old Harry, who says to the people, "If you will fall down and worship me (i.e.), if you will consent to obey all my dictates and let me do all the preaching, praying, electioneering, and voting, I will give you the right to own something," and to-day, day by day, the people are giving their consent in order to get the right to own something. He also says that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and whatever he says the people say is law and gospel too. His voice and vote is the voice and vote of God, the voice and vote of the people, the voice and vote of the devil himself. He of course votes on both sides; votes for himself, and elects himself commander-in-chief of all the armies and navies in the whole world, and he is now continually increasing his armaments and munitions of war in order to complete the work of tyranny, desolation, and death, already begun with perfidy and cruelty unequalled in the most barbarous ages, and his motto now is, "In God We Trust," and it is the people's motto too. He is first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. The right to own something begets the temptation to steal something, to rob, to lie, to murder, to assassinate, to get something. The right to own an apple in the first place begets the temptation to steal an apple in the last place.

The right to own a man, in the first place, begets the temptation to steal a man in the last place. The right to own man's labor, in the first place, begets the temptation to steal a man's labor in the last place. The turmoil and the strike now going on in and throughout this world at this time means something above and beyond anything that man has ever thought of. The striker doesn't deserve his due until he is fit to give and receive it; but when he is able to do that, then he will be fit to live it, and not before.

When the last battle is fought and the last blow is struck, his due will not have changed one iota, because his due is as immutable as justice, because the demand and supply of justice and his due are one and the same, co-equal and co-eternal, and immutable, forever the same.

People in this era are determined to find out the why and the therefore, and they will, too, "if it takes all summer."

If any one has specific charges to make against this axiomatic "Rule of Conduct," now is his time to get up and "speak out in meeting" and prefer them.

JOHN THOMAS.

Madrid, N. Y.

INFIDELITY ANNIHILATED.

A sermon under the above caption was delivered in a meeting-house not a thousand miles from Tacoma, Wash., by the Rev. Jay Whiner, D.D., just after the Liberal convention. The good old soul (God bless him and his kind) had been serving the Lord for over forty years. True, he started out on a mighty slim capital of that very slim article called "faith," all he knew was that he loved Jesus and that God was good; and now after the lapse of nearly two generations he knew no more.

By some chance he got hold of a leaf or two out of a book called "The Bible Against Itself." His first impulse was to throw the ungodly thing away; but then, might not some one find it and use it against the "master?" On second thought he put it in his pocket with the intention of consigning it to the flames on his return home. But before throwing the offending tract in the fire he examined it and saw how easy it would be to break down every argument and thus break down infidelity at one fell swoop. Accordingly he sat down and thought it out, and the resolve was made that next Sunday the noxious plant known as Liberalism was to receive its coup de grace. He had not lived all these years for nothing; now he would get his holy revenge—yes, revenge; holy, but still revenge—on the scoffing infidels who had dared to laugh at him and doubt his master. With these pleasant thoughts he fell asleep. He was sorry that he could not write the thoughts that came crowding into his brain, but alas! he could not write; he spoke only from inspiration, and surely the Lord would not desert him now.

Among others who were attracted to the sleepy little church was one of those wicked innovations known as "reporters," and there he sat as quiet as a mouse until the reverend started his discourse, when out came a very dirty note-book "cover," next a note-book and pencil, and in a minute he was scratching, in the way peculiar to his craft. The Rev. Mr. Whiner had noticed him when he entered and had said in his soul, "I will win his heart," but when the terrible note-book came out he knew the case was hopeless. What business had this wicked reporter on this of all occasions to come in there and take the very words out of his mouth? And he was sore affrid and displeased. But then a thought struck him: "May not this be a scribe who shall give my inspired thought to the great, wicked world? And, too, who knows but the pencil driver is a Christian?" And he feels a thrill go through his frame, but it is only for a moment, for he suddenly remembers that he has never seen or even heard of such a thing as a Christian reporter. His knees smite, but he goes on to vindicate what he knows to be right and must convince even the most hardened skeptic, to which class he consigned the scribe.

The choir have finished their "usual," and the quondam preacher, but now scientist, steps forth. His deep treble permeates to the utmost corner of the massive little church, and a suppressed murmur arises in the hearts of the simple folk, who for years have gazed on his noble countenance, for there is a look there of such spirituality and conscious power that they marvel greatly.

He began:

"Brethering and sistern: I hev no text to preach on from the holy book. I am goin' to preach from a Infedel track. Don't be afraid. I han't goin' to do like Thomas an' Swing an' Beecher did; I a'nt goin' to leave the church. No, sir; I'm not goin' to apostrafy, but I em goin' to 'nihilate Infidelity an' Agnosticism; an' what's more, I'm goin' to do it from one of these books. The good Lord hes put inter my han's the way of doin' it, an' I'm goin' to do it, I am. Firstly, he talks uv God dividin' night from day, as is spoken uv in the first chapter uv Genesis, fort and fift verses. He tells that rite, fur he cain't git aroun' scriptur; but then he goes on an' says that God contradicks hisself by dividin' lite from darkness on the fort day. Now fur my argyment. They 'lows that God made the lite in both cases, or he don' say different; he only says that science says that you cain't divide lite from darkness but once, an' some on 'em go so fur as to say it cain't be done at all. Now, them is nigger-amuses that the world calls sciencists, but I'm goin' to prove that God kin make lite an' darkness jest as he pleases. En the first place you all know from exper'ence that He is almighty an' all-powerful. Well, you know that from your own exper'ence in the church, don't you? Well, ef he be almyty, he kin do as he pleases, cain't he? Then what's to prevent him from keepin' a little uv the darkness over from the first day, or Sunday, till the fort day, or Wednesday? An' then when he gits good an' ready he kin take an' sep'rate as leetle or as much as he pleases. An' don't you furgit that he never does anything till he wants to, either. He must have ben a pore shake ef he cudn't hev kep' a leetle darkness that long. Why, I kin keep it thet long myself by puttin it in the cellar.

"Secondly, the Infedel claims on the second count that God had no business to change his mind. Shoo! He quotes Genesis i, 31, uv the good book, where God says his work is good; then he quotes Genesis vi, 6, an' tries to make fun uv God by sayin' thet—by—sayin'—the—the text. Well, s'posin' he did get mad, hain't he a rite to? They say thet man is only 'stinguished from the jackass by his s'position to change his mind, an' I don't s'pose there is a blasphemer alive that would liken the orther uv his bein' in that way.

"Thirdly, then ag'in in the thirdly plase the Infedel says, says he, 'about God not repentin', jus' as if the one who invented repentin' hes to do any uv it hisself. This time he bases his blasphemy on the inspired word uv Numbers xxiii, 19. Then he goes on a little furdur an' fin's thet he kin repent if he wants to. Well, wouldn't you give the one who first made repentin' a chance to use some uv it on hisself?

"Fortly, I think by this time you kin see that I've 'nihilated the Infedels, as I said I would. They bring up what they call geology and say that it proves the hole Bible a lie; they say thet the stratter shos thet it wuz here long before the time Moses said it wuz. Well, s'posin' it wuz, an' s'posin' thet the stratter an' the fosselized bones shos how much older it is; it jus' shos thet God kin make a job that kin stan' the weather an' the war uv the elements. Amen."

Note. I dislike to chronicle the fact, but this eloquent and masterful effort of one of the most erudite (?) divines of the day and Andover Theological Academy has so completely crushed Agnosticism that I cannot draw any comparison in modern history to describe the baneful effect. O yes, there is one instance, and that is where Robert Elsmere succeeded in one short winter's work to undo all that such men as Comte and Bradlaugh had accomplished during a long life of unceasing effort. I allude to the workingmen's club he converted to Elsmatism.—The Reporter. MAURITZ S. LIDEN.

The Nation's Heroes.

O ye truly great and noble
Who to honest fame aspire,
Shrinking not in freedom's conflict,
Though it lead through flames of fire;
Fighting nobly life's great battle
Of the weak against the strong,
That o'er error truth may flourish,
Justice triumph over wrong.

That each slave may burst his fetters,
That each tyrant may be bound,
That all men may live as brothers,
Virtue reign and peace abound;
Though the price be fame and fortune,
All the luxury wealth can give,
The great prize is worth the venture,
Ye, while others die, shall live.

When the monuments of heroes
Shall have mouldered into dust,
When the swords of hated Neros
Shall have crumbled into rust;
When the transient fame they boasted
Shall have vanished from the earth,
When a race of noble freemen
Shall have ushered into birth;

Then shall fame accord due honors
To the noble, great, and good,
Who through freedom's dreadful conflict
In the foremost ranks have stood.
In her own gigantic temple,
Blazed in gold each name shall shine,
Far above all other heroes
Worshipped as almost divine.

And their deeds of noble daring
Shall inspire the poet's song,
While ten thousand happy ages
Roll their smiling years along.
History's brightest, dearest pages
Shall their stainless records keep,
And the world they died to rescue
O'er their hallowed dust shall weep.

—G. W. THURSTON.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Talent.....	May 30, 31	John Day.....	July 24
Ashland.....	June 1	Prairie City.....	July 25
Eagle Point.....	June 2, 3	Baker City.....	July 27, 28, 29
Brownville and Coburg..	June 5 to 8	Union.....	July 30
Grey's River.....	June 11 to 18	Summerville.....	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Portland.....	June 22	Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11
Cascades, Wash.....	June 24, 25	Rosalia.....	Aug. 13
Fossil, Or.....	June 29	Plaza.....	Aug. 14
Lost Valley.....	July 1	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Wagner.....	July 2, 3, 4	Spokane Falls.....	Aug. 17
Prineville and vicinity.	July 7 to 16	Davenport.....	Aug. 18, 19
Monument.....	July 18	Buckley.....	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Hamilton.....	July 19	Tacoma.....	Aug. 25
Fox.....	July 20, 21, 22	Port Townsend.....	Aug. 31

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XII.

ENTITLED YE PLAINS.

The Plain of Science.—The Favorites of the Dragons.—The Car of Free-thought.—The Trees of the Plain.—Simon falls in with Unitheos.—Simon and Unitheos in the Plain.—The Vision of Unitheos.—True Communism.

1. Now, beyond the Forest, was on the right hand a great and beautiful plain, called the Plain of Science, and on the left was the Vale of Superstition.

2. And between this vale and Plain of Science was a noble tree like unto a banyan tree, and the name of it was Natural Wealth.

3. And upon it there grew a very great abundance of wholesome fruit; yea, all manner of fruit hung upon its branches; and it depended not upon the seasons for its fertility, nor cast its leaves in the autumn; its verdure was immortal, and its beauty was glorious. And it continually sent out new branches, which growing outwards and downwards, at last sent down stems into the ground, which took root, and grew into trees themselves, and they in like manner sent forth their branches, which also grew into trees; and thus the tree went on, year by year increasing its dimensions, and becoming greater and greater continually.

4. Yea, was its growth by no means so great as it might have been had it been cultivated as it ought, and its increase not impeded.

5. Nay, the tree could have produced fruit and food enough for all the people of Cosmos, were it but duly apportioned.

6. But it was guarded day and night by certain evil, malicious, and malignant dragons, whose names were Ignorance, Avarice, Fraud, Religion, False-education, and many others.

7. And these malignant dragons continually drove away those whom they called the common people, and would scarcely permit great numbers of them so much as a mouthful, but gave the fruits to their favorites, whom they loaded with more than they needed, and more than they could by any means eat; so that while these feasted themselves gluttonously, and wasted and destroyed that which they could not eat, others, their fellow-beings, perished miserably for want.

8. And though the dragons would not give those whom they called the common people their rightful share of the fruit, yet did they make them bring soil from the Plains of Science for the nourishment of the tree, and to do all the labor, while they themselves, and their favorites, took their ease, and reaped the harvest which the others did sow.

9. And some of the guides brought soil from the Vale of Superstition, also, for the tree, and this it was that prevented the tree from flourishing as it might; for such soil did but poison the tree and retard its growth.

10. Now, if soil had been brought from the Plains of Science only, the tree would have flourished so abundantly that there would have been enough fruit, and to spare, for every soul in the whole country of Cosmos, and every man might have dwelt at ease; for if the labor had been duly apportioned, and every one had done his share of it, then would the burden have been indeed light.

11. But instead whereof, many labored hard, and got little fruit; and many got more fruit than they could eat, and labored not at all, except it were to destroy their superabundance of fruit; and many there were that died of want, because they were driven away from the tree; and to this thousands of bleaching bones which lay about bore hideous testimony.

12. And the giants which dwelt in the Plains of Science took note of this, and made ceaseless war against the dragons, and endeavored that all should have their due proportion, and no more.

13. And the Forest of Evidences was in the way, and hindered very many from coming at the tree; wherefore they tore down the trees, and brake down the fences which surrounded it, and made constant war against the Beast and his servants.

14. And through the Plains of Science flowed the river called inquiry (which Simon had seen before he entered the Valley of Repentance), and which fell into the Lake of Unbelief; and from this lake the river flowed onwards towards another and greater lake, called the Lake of Truth.

15. And the river and the lakes, and all the trees of the Plain of Science, gave off certain pleasant odors, but which the dragons who guarded the tree could by no means endure; for it caused them to lose their strength, and grow weaker day by day, so that they could not now guard the tree as they were wont, nor altogether keep away the people from it.

16. Yet were the dragons still very powerful, because there arose from the decaying trees in the Forest of Evidences, and from those in the Vale of Superstition, very nauseous stenches, that did hinder the odors from the trees of the Plain of Science, and from the river and lakes.

17. And for this reason did also the giants make inroads upon the Forest, and upon the Vale of Superstition.

18. And from the Lake of Truth the odors were exceedingly potent, and were especially abhorred by the dragons, and the beasts and his servants, and by all the people of the Vale of Superstition; for they could not by any means withstand them; and fled from them as a man would fly from death.

19. And the giants had a certain car, called the Car of Free-thought, and to the car was harnessed a certain noble and generous steed called Philanthropy. And within the car was great store of seeds, which, when the car proceeded, were thrown out into the air, and fell into the ground, and there took root, and in time grew up into stately trees, producing very pleasant flowers; and anyone plucking these flowers was able with more ease to overcome and outwit the dragons and obtain the fruit of the tree they guarded.

20. And the name of one of these trees growing from the seeds thrown out of the car was Education, and the name of the flower, Knowledge; and of another the name was Research, and the flower, Discovery.

21. And the car did proceed on its way, as it were, in half circles, starting from the Lake of Unbelief and going to the Lake of Truth.

22. And it took water from the Lake of Truth, and shed it about as it went.

23. And the beast, his servants the guides, and some of the more foolish of the pilgrims, were continually putting all manner of obstacles in its way, and endeavoring mightily to stay its course.

24. But all their malice failed to stop the car, though they delayed it often.

25. Yea, despite their utmost malice, the car still went on, in ever-widening circles, overthrowing and trampling upon all impediments, and putting to rout and confusion all that dared oppose it.

26. And the Forest of Evidences, and the Vale of Superstition were in its way, but the resistless car went on, slicing off great portions of the Forest and the Vale upon every journey.

27. And the giants cast out the seeds, and shed abroad the water; and the seeds took root, and the water nourished them, and weakened the dragons, and sickened the beast and his servants.

28. And the car goeth on even to this day, and the Forest and Vale are doomed, and will disappear; and the dragons, though still potent for evil, are losing strength day by day, and soon may their end come. Selah.

29. And within the Plains of Science were also many other trees, such as were spoken of before, from which the giants armed themselves with cudgels.

30. And these trees were cultivated because they were in themselves very beautiful, and because they furnished excellent weapons to the giants, and because their fruit was good for the eyesight.

31. And some one of the trees were called Geologos, others Astronomos, others Chronologos, others Ethnologos, others Philologos.

32. And Simon fell in with another pilgrim, called Unitheos, and had much discourse with him.

33. Now, Unitheos had not entered the City of Conversion, nor come through the Valley of Repentance, but had come into the Forest from the country of Cosmos in a direct line.

34. And Unitheos had some little understanding, and when the gutter called the Narrow-way grew too filthy, or too narrow, he stepped out and went comfortably.

35. And he had been up some of the trees, and seen little, and had grown tired of climbing.

36. And when he and Simon came out of the Forest, and upon the Vale of Superstition, Unitheos liked not the prospect, and he said unto Simon, Come out of the path, for it leadeth down yonder dismay, whither I care not to go; and see how pleasant it is on the other side, and how much more healthy and vigorous the trees and shrubs appear than they do hereabouts.

37. Yea, verily, said Simon, doubtfully; it seemeth pleasant, but thou knowest the guides bid us keep in the path.

38. And Unitheos said, Kick the guides; they are men like ourselves; come out, let us examine the matter for ourselves; and we find hurt, we will return. And he led on, and Simon followed timidly.

To be Continued.

IS HUMAN IMPROVEMENT A DREAM?

We are much pleased with Robert G. Ingersoll's article on labor. His heart is in the right place, and his head does good work. Yes, indeed, there is to be "a revolution in the relations between labor and capital," and we hope it will be a peaceful one.

"The laboring men ought to remember that all who labor are their brothers and sisters." Surely they are comrades in toil, and ought to be in rest.

"For a man to get up before daylight and work till after dark life is of no particular importance."

"Any man who wishes to force his brother to work more than eight hours a day is not a civilized man."

But I must quit quoting, for the whole article is full of truth so clearly stated that working men and women can understand it.

Ah, how many of us understand the situation and feel the effect of present methods! But is it not a sort of mockery to remember that we are brothers and sisters, who have no method of co-operation that will thoroughly and effectively sustain each other in their efforts to meet oppression? I have long wondered why the oppressed of large cities do not co-operate with producers in the country; why the various mechanics and artisans cannot unite their various orders in one with some farmers, and so economize their earnings until they can start in business for themselves. They can work to one common purpose and soon have the means to establish business of their own.

That is their only way. It is the way brothers and sisters do when they are worthy of the name. Laborers of all kinds must lay aside all their petty differences, if they have any, and avoid strikes wherever it can be done, and save their small amounts for one common purpose. After they begin to do this, how long, think you, will it take them to have something of their own? How soon the farm can be made to produce much we need, so that if the boss's shop does not bring enough to suit, the home will supply the remainder until the transition state is past. How soon the taskmaster will learn that there is a limit beyond which he cannot pass. How soon men and women will breathe freer and see what beauty there is in life after all. My hope is that we will sustain the common schools; that we will let religious contentions die; that we will agree to sustain each other politically as well as industrially—not for the purpose of demagoguism, chicanery, legal robbery, or any other unjust or ignoble purpose, but to secure simple justice for all.

Let us organize for one common purpose, in a way that failure shall be impossible.

There is no need of a thousand plans being formulated; any one that will thoroughly feed, clothe, protect, and profitably employ us will do—but, remember, it must do that. The social feature will easily arrange itself when we conclude that our sisters are as good as ourselves, and allow them equal rights and opportunity. My experience has never taught me that women are less beautiful, useful, noble, generous, loving, and virtuous when given equal opportunity with men. Pay them equally well; nor ask them to do or be what you would not, and they will maintain their honor in the battle of life.

In this article I am not speaking about idlers, nor encouraging any one to be envious of the rich. Those who work hard and save of their earnings until they have capital enough to get on with are to be commended for their industry and frugality.

But the very fact that many who have had plenty and lived moderately and were industrious have had reverses of fortune and are left at the foot of the ladder again is sufficient to show that there is need of a better way.

A farmer is careful to protect the delicate and the weak ones of his flock and herd, because he can make more out of them. And I suppose mankind are to neglect one another because they have no pecuniary interest in each other. Shall we let every man dig for himself because, forsooth, to reform and form unions is "dreaming?" Why, the principles of our government are those of union—union of states, union of hearts, and union of hands to protect and maintain ourselves against the strong and selfish.

Are our common schools a dream? There is union. Our post-offices also are the effect of union. Our armies too, but alas! they are for destruction as well as protection, and I suppose that kind of union is right because it is right.

I think some of the dreamers have had their eyes pretty well open when they gave ideas to the world to experiment with. And I do not think the laboring classes are copying after European models any more than are the rich. Shall we do as Germany has done to be wise? Or shall we carry out our republican ideas to a more logical conclusion and dethrone other kings in our search for common justice and human comforts?

If a man works fourteen hours to live and saves five cents we ought to congratulate him; but how about the employer who saves fifteen or twenty-five cents from the same labor? Congratulate him too, I suppose; but how about the system that makes such conditions possible? I am not much of a kicker, but I will kick against such conditions, and never think I am trying to change the laws of nature either.

I would not have Mr. Gunther think I have turned against him. If I turn against anything he has said, it is the vinegar in his philosophy. I doubt not that he is honest and thinks as he writes. But how about the rest of us—are we all—fools, dreamers, and idlers because we offer thought for the betterment of our and humanity's industrial and social conditions?

Compare Mr. Ingersoll's letter with Mr. Gunther's, and you will see the bright sunlight of his human kindness putting a silver lining along the pathway of life.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

Sanel, Cal.

"DO SPIRITS HAVE TEETH?"

The question under the above heading, propounded in the form of a disquisition by O. Wettstein, which appeared some time ago, but has never yet been answered, I am enabled to answer in the affirmative, as the following experience, related by "J. B. Jr.," of Natick, with the Davenport brothers, in 1873 will show. As a recital of the circumstances leading to the exposure of these Spiritualistic frauds, who created such a furor some twenty years ago, will no doubt be read with great interest by your readers, and especially by the younger part thereof, I give it in full:

"Natick, June, 1873.—I have seen the Davenport brothers and know that they are a fraud. I went to see them at our hall and paid my money. When they were about to commence, Mr. Rand, who traveled with them—formerly a preacher and now a humbug—put out the light. I struck a match and lit a lamp near me. Rand told me to comply with their custom, and then put out the light. I lit another match, and after several attempts on their part to darken the hall, and as many efforts on mine to light it, they threatened to give us no show. Groans, hisses, peanuts, and horns triumphed for a few moments, when Mr. Rand said they would try once more, if they could have order and darkness. The brothers entered the cabinet, lights down; another shower of peanuts. A voice from the cabinet said: 'Stop throwing things at the cabinet or we shan't try!' I struck a light, and the boys came out and spoke to Mr. Rand. They said they would not try again and we could have our admission-fee back. There was a rush for the stand, a score of hands extended, each receiving his fee, and while some were going out others were coming in, and one man held out his hand three times receiving his fee. A friend gave Rand the hint, and he went to the door and passed them out as he paid, till he had expended the evening's receipts, and five dollars out of his own pocket besides.

"I then entered into conversation with one of the boys, asking him why they gave it up; told him no one would molest them again. He said they would not risk it when there was such a spirit manifested. Then we—myself, Mr. Bly, and some others—took a light and went into their cabinet, making a daring survey of that spirit-box, while they—Rand and the brothers—stood dumfounded, and although a Deist, may the powers forbid if I should ever try such humbuggery. The bell-handle was filled with teeth marks and was chewed until it looked like a corn cob! The tambourine had the same teeth marks all around its rim, the drum having been hung where they could kick it; the fiddle was scratched and jammed by striking it with the ropes.

"This was the last evening of the Davenport brothers at Natick. I have attended circles and spiritual lectures, have had circles at my house, have paid money and attention to these things, but somehow the spirits won't work well when I am present! (Showing that credulity, faith, and a vivid imagination are essential conditions of success. H. W.) I consider the subject too ridiculously foolish (for people devoid of these attributes. W. H.) and the promulgators of Spiritualism too easily imposed upon themselves to bother them with my presence any more. May they henceforth manipulate their 'spooks' in peace.

"J. B., Jr."

Thus far our narrator. As for these manipulations, or as they are preferably termed, "manifestations," the following from the Boston Herald, of November, 1873, will divulge their "modus operandi:"

"The Davenport brothers decline to be tied at the elbows!—The Davenport brothers drew about five hundred people to Tremont Temple, last Wednesday, to witness their cabinet feats. Messrs. Wyseman, Marshall, and C. St. John were appointed a committee to tie the performers and note results. Mr. St. John did his work so thoroughly in tying the elder Davenport that the spirits were an unconscionably long time in getting ready to make even the faintest show of astonishing the wonder-seeking part of the audience. Near the termination of the performance, Mr. St. John grew suspicious that the 'mediums' were doing more than the spirits, so he proposed to tie the elder Davenport by the elbows. But the manager objected (though what difference could it make to the spirits how the mediums were tied?) and Mr. St. John then appealed to the audience with a few common sense remarks, eliciting loud applause from some and hisses from others. There were loud cries of: 'Tie them at the elbows!' but a part of the audience raised such a boisterous protest against this proceeding that he put on his overcoat and hat, and denouncing the whole performance as an unmitigated humbug and a ridiculous farce and those who believed in spirit-agencies as willing to be imposed upon, etc., he left the platform, bringing the performance to an abrupt and noisy close.

"P. S.—Mr. Hall offers the Davenports $100 if they will submit to his tying them, but they decline the offer."

With these facts before us is it not easy to perceive that as the "boys" were tied to their chairs with their hands extending beyond their knees they were enabled to move their arms backwards, freeing their hands from the ropes that confined them, and then, when they got through with their performances of exhibiting their "spirit-hands" and chewing bell-handles, tambourines, and other instruments with their "spirit teeth," making noise enough for a whole pandemonium of spirits let loose, slip their hands back between the ropes again? This could have been the more readily accomplished if their hands had by careful training and manipulation from their earliest infancy been kept soft and pliable, the bones of their hands yielding like the bones of circus performers; their father, who, by the way, was their manager, conceiving the idea to train his boys, and particularly their hands, for just such a show. If any of the boys are alive yet, I am satisfied that if their hands were subjected to a medical examination, the bones thereof would be found as yielding as a cartilage.

But however that may be, the question, "Do spirits have teeth?" has been answered, though, perhaps, not to the satisfaction of believers.

H. WETTSTEIN.

Marengo, Ill.

WANTED—A REST.

There are in the United States a class of people who are very pious, and since a God in one's heart is somewhat of an expensive luxury, they concluded that to give him a place in public documents, may be sufficient to keep him satisfied and send them eventually to heaven, as a reward for their faithfulness to him "from whom all blessings flow." Some of these pious people are kicking because of President Harrison's neglect to put God in some comfortable quarters somewhere in his last message. To these "pious" kickers, we must say that we have had plenty of experience with a number of gods, not only in public documents, but in everything pertaining to the affairs of government. We have seen men obliged to spend the best of their lives, if not all of it, in military service, killing others and destroying cities, the houses of worship included, which other people, who happened to believe in a somewhat different looking God, had built. We have seen people taxed, imprisoned, banished, outraged, or hung, all in the name and by the grace of God. This was done and it will continue wherever an official god existed or exists. We therefore object to having any god put into the affairs of state.

To the pious folks to whom our language may seem somewhat heretical, we will say that the best they could do to satisfy themselves of a practical application of God to the affairs of state is to go to Europe, where monarchy reigns. There they will find God in everything we enumerated, and if their bigotry would not get the best of them, they will see the justice of our assertions and the necessity of keeping God and state forever separate. Go, then, and give us a rest.—The Northern Light.

PRESENT AND FUTURE WORK.

From Fair Play, Valley Falls, Kan.

In answer to numerous inquiries from the friends of Mr. Harman we will say that every resource of the law will be exhausted by able and devoted attorneys in the effort to secure tardy justice through the higher courts. The necessary preliminary steps have been taken and our readers will be advised from time to time in these columns of the success or failure that attends each movement.

In the meantime the comrades here and all over the country are anxious to circulate petitions asking for the release of the unjustly imprisoned editor. The following petition will be ready for signatures in a few days. By the time any requisitions for them can reach us we shall have three thousand printed and the form will be ready to run more as soon as these are gone. They will be distributed from both the offices here, from the office of the Truth Seeker, 28 Lafayette place, New York, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., of the National Defense Association, 120 Lexington avenue, New York, and undoubtedly by other Liberal journals in Eastern and Pacific Coast cities, Denver, etc. This is the form of petition selected:

To the President of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States and of the State of _____ respectfully petition Your Excellency to grant a pardon to Moses Harman, convicted at the April Term, 1890, of the U. S. District Court for Kansas upon a charge of depositing non-mailable matter in the mails and sentenced to five years' hard labor in the penitentiary, and to pay a fine of $300; for the following reasons, to wit:

1st. The punishment, five years' imprisonment at hard labor and $300 fine, is excessive, being the most severe penalty ever inflicted in this country, in any case of this kind.

2d. Mr. Harman is a man of unquestionable moral character, was perfectly sincere in what he did, and made the objectionable publication in good faith, and, regardless of what our own views may be in the matter, we recognize his sincerity and integrity of purpose in doing as he did.

3d. Mr. Harman is an old man about sixty years of age; is in feeble health; has been for nearly fifty years a cripple; is weak and frail, incapable of performing or enduring hard labor, and his life is, in all probability, seriously endangered by the confinement and rigor of prison life.

We know that Mr. Harman would have preferred a form that was much more nearly a protest than a petition, but we believe that this is calculated to meet with more general approval among the friends of justice than any other that could have been drafted.

To the petition asking for the release of E. H. Heywood 70,000 signatures were obtained. A little later 200,000 were attached to the petition calling for the pardon of D. M. Bennett. With the present improved facilities for distribution and the greater enlightenment of the public regarding the inquisitorial methods of Comstock, McAfee & Co., it should be easy to get at least half a million names upon the petition of Mr. Harman. Let every friend of justice take hold now and work as never before. Be careful and have only the names of adult men and women upon your papers, none of children.

One generous Kansas friend has paid or guaranteed all legal expenses up to a certain point. For the sinews of war needed after that time in making the fight in the courts, and to meet expenses which must be incurred in printing and circulating petitions, and hundreds of thousands of leaflets and papers free of charge, we must call upon the Liberal public. Money can be sent to C. L. Swartz, associate editor of Lucifer, and to ourselves here, and also to Dr. Foote and the Truth Seeker, New York, addressed as above. All sums forwarded will be acknowledged through the paper to which they are sent. Send at once for blank petitions.

Lilian visited her father on Monday, May 12. She found him in reasonably good spirits, but in rather poor health, so poor, in fact, that the prison authorities had not yet set him to work. Shaving off his heavy beard had given him a severe cold, which, in connection with his old ailments, had very nearly prostrated him.

BOOKS.

The "Weekly Nationalist" is a great improvement upon the "California Nationalist," especially as to typographical appearance. It will be published at Los Angeles by a co-operative company; $1.50 per annum.

The Hon. John H. Mitchell of Oregon has sent us his speech delivered in the Senate last month in support of the resolution providing for the election of Senators by the people of the state instead of the legislature. We are with Mr. Mitchell in this matter, but as an amendment would move that the Senators be elected to stay at home.

In one volume the Open Court Publishing Company issues three essays on very interesting subjects; namely, "Comparative Philology," by H. Oldenberg, "Comparative Psychology," by J. Jastrow, and "Old Testament History," by C. H. Cornhill. The title of the whole is "Epitomes of Three Sciences;" price 75 cents. Professor Cornhill, writer of the third essay, is an orthodox Christian, and treats Old Testament heroes as "men of God." Being thus fundamentally in error, the author cannot be said to have written anything very trustworthy as to its conclusions. The others are from a rational point of view and contain a great deal of valuable information.

A novel entitled "Edward Burton," Lee & Shepard publishers, Henry Wood author, is just at hand from Boston. It is the worst yet. Burton, the hero, is a New England young man who studies theology. He hurts his back in athletic sports at college, and his brain by the study of Calvinism. From these injuries he recovers, but while convalescing contracts Christian Science, which becomes chronic. The author leaves him in this deplorable state. Other characters are an Anarchist who blows himself up with a bomb; a young lady Christian Scientist who is foolish enough to decline an offer of marriage from a Materialist, the only wholesome character in the book; a titled adventurer looking for an heiress; a young gentleman who gets drunk but is cured by Christian Science; an utterly utter girl who treats patients by the Christian Science method, the latter dying as might be expected, and a few odd persons thrown in to help out the conversation. Here is the love scene with which the novel ends. Dramatis personæ: Burton and the utterly utter girl:

"He quietly [not in a rude or boisterous manner] kneeled at her feet, but her face was gently inclined toward the reflection of the sun in the distant water. 'Helen, you are my dearest love! my beautiful ideal! my angel!' he exclaimed in low musical tones. 'You are the pure shrine where for a whole year I have bestowed homage. You are the sacred image which has been constantly reflected in my soul.' Her face was still slightly inclined toward the distant reflection, but it shone with a radiance of its own. He clasped her unresisting hand, and pressed it to his lips. 'May I call you my love?' The blue dreamy eyes had become moist, and they turned from the distant landscape and sweetly looked into his, and her soul responded through them."

It is inferred that the two were subsequently united in marriage.

"Freethought" in Washington, D. C.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of two specimen copies of your publication, sent in response to the request of this office, and to thank you for your courtesy in furnishing the same. Very respectfully,

Washington, D. C., May 16. ROBERT P. PORTER, Sup't of Census.

Never Heard of It Before.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It is reported by Spiritualists of this vicinity that Col. R. G. Ingersoll visited Slater, the slate-writing medium, and received a communication purporting to be from his brother. When asked what he thought of it he replied that one of three wrote it—himself, Slater, or his brother, and that it was not himself or Slater; so it must be his brother. What I desire to know is, did Ingersoll visit Slater? If so, what was the communication, if any, and what were Ingersoll's remarks on the subject?

Bernardo, Cal.

F. M. BATES.

A Debater Found.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your paper of the 17th is a communication from A. K. Coward, of Norwalk, Cal., calling for some one to debate with Clark Braden. When Braden was here following Putnam around several of us offered to debate with him, but the parties having Braden in charge declined. Nobody would do; they said, but Putnam. They knew that Putnam would not debate with him. I regard Braden as the foremost champion of Christianity in the United States. He is the most able one I know of; the most characteristic and fitting representative; a Christian gentleman par excellence. That Freethinkers regard him as a "skunk," morally and socially, may follow as a natural sequence, but that cuts no figure in a debate. Of course, we prefer (at least I do) an antagonist to be a representative of his party. I have heard Braden speak; have read his book, "The Problem of Problems;" his pamphlet, "Ingersoll Unmasked;" and some of his other writings; have read his "Challenge to Infidelity," etc., and do not fear him in debate. I am not an experienced debater, nor very well read in history; but I am satisfied that I can hold my own with Clark Braden, if he will debate on the square. He always seeks to get the under hold. If Brother Coward does not find a preferred party, let him communicate with me, and he will find a stayer, whatever else I may lack. Ask Putnam.

I would suggest a question about in this shape:

Resolved, That the Bible is entirely of human origin and fallible in its teachings. Infidel affirms. Christian denies.

Resolved, That we are indebted to the influence of the Christian religion for our civilization. Christian affirms. Infidel denies.

Each side to choose a moderator, and they two shall choose a president.

As to conditions:

1. Each disputant shall have the largest liberty of discussion.
2. Each party shall give a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $500 (or more), to be forfeited to the other party in case of failure to be on hand and debate as per agreement, unless prevented by unavoidable circumstances, of which due proof shall be made.
3. All negotiations between the parties shall be in writing in permanent ink.

Negotiations may be made through the columns of FREETHOUGHT, if it suits the folks. It will make good reading, as the Campbellites will probably whiffle and whaffle and finally back down, and then charge us with doing so.

F. S. MATTESON.

Aumsville, Or.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND.

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas. F. Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schrell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.
Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1463 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.
Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

Health and Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy, $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer, $1.

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina, Ills. $1.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

A Flock Without a Shepherd.

About a year ago George M. Sanborn came from St. Louis to take charge of the First Congregational church of Eureka, Cal., as pastor. He was a young man of fine presence, engaging manners, pleasing address, and some ability. He soon became very popular and attracted a large congregation. The congregation was carried away with him and outgrew the old building, and a new one was projected and is now nearly completed, involving the church society in debt.

Meantime ugly rumors got afloat about Sanborn's treatment of his wife in St. Louis. Eastern papers characterized him as an adventurer, and finally formal charges were preferred against him. The congregation was warm in his support and declared that it was persecution. He was charged with attempting a felonious assault on a servant girl while pastor of a church in St. Louis. They refused to accept the evidence and he became more than ever the idol of the town. A church council was called to try him on the charges, but returned a Scotch verdict.

Scandals had been started about his relations with Mrs. Ricks, wife of T. F. Ricks, of Eureka, but still his congregation remained loyal. Recently Mrs. Ricks parted from her husband and obtained a divorce in San Francisco. Sanborn asked for leave of absence, intending to start for the Sandwich islands, but spent most of his vacation near Mrs. Ricks in San Francisco. He also obtained a divorce from his St. Louis wife, and left suddenly for San Francisco.

On May 21 a letter was received from him saying that he had married Mrs. Ricks and left California and the ministry forever. Public opinion strongly condemns him as a designing man who has ruined a home. Mrs. Ricks was the mother of four children and stood well in society, and her husband was a man of wealth. The latter has gone overland to get possession of his children.

Cross and Redirect.

Lawyer—Now, Mr. Costello, will you have the goodness to answer me, directly and categorically, a few plain questions?

Witness—Certainly, Sir.

"Now, Mr. Costello, is there a female at present living with you who is known in the neighborhood as Mrs. Costello?"

"There is."

"Is she under your protection?"

"She is."

"Now, on your oath, do you maintain her?"

"I do."

"Have you ever been married to her?"

"I have not."

(Here several severe jurors scowled gloomily at Mr. Costello.)

"That is all, Mr. Costello; you may go down."

Opposing Counsel—Stop one moment, Mr. Costello. Is the female in question your grandmother? "Yes, she is."

ST. PETER (at the gate)—Well, who are you?

Applicant—I'm Dr. Squills, of Boston.

St. Peter.—Sorry we can't admit you, but there is absolutely nothing for you to do. You see, we are immortal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.

OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Pader

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.; 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against
LIBERTY.

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Glenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

Good Work in California.

In the Chronicle Union of Bridgeport, California, April 26, we find an excellent report of a large and enthusiastic meeting, held by the citizens of that place "for the purpose of entering their protest against Congress interfering in the religious concerns of the American people." The meeting was addressed by the chairman, Mr. W. O. Parker; District Attorney C. L. Hayes; and Mr. J. H. Cook, vice-president of the National Religious Liberty Association. With reference to the Blair Religious Amendment Mr. Hayes very aptly remarked: "The Constitution as it is, is my motto. It was amended twenty-five years ago to free the slave; and I am not in favor of now tacking on another amendment to enslave the people."

Judge Eddy suggested that all present who had not signed the remonstrance to Congress, be invited to do so before leaving the house.

A series of strong resolutions was adopted denouncing the Blair Amendment and the Sunday bills before Congress, from which we copy the following two:

Resolved, That we most earnestly request the senators and representatives of this state in Congress to oppose the adoption of the joint resolution and measures referred to. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to said representatives for presentation to the Senate and House, and that the county newspapers be, and they are hereby respectfully requested to publish the same with the proceedings of this meeting.

Resolved, That the earnest and effective work being performed by the National Religious Liberty Association in opposition to such legislation and to said proposed amendment to the Constitution meets with our unqualified approval, and that J. H. Cook, vice-president, and Assistant Ira Wheeler, present at this meeting, deserve the thanks of the people for their untiring zeal manifested in advancing the cause of the association.

The report closes as follows:

The meeting then adjourned, when all present, except one or two, signed the remonstrance, if they had not previously. The meeting was a very orderly one and fully reflected the sentiments of our people on these most unpopular measures.

We are glad it is so; and let the good work go on.—American Sentinel.

A "Blue Law" of Old Times.

In view of the large number of breach of promise cases which have been brought of late years the following extract from an old statute of New Jersey, passed in colonial times, and, it is said, still unrepealed, which shows how our forefathers viewed this question, is of interest:

"That all women, of whatever age, rank, profession, or degree, whether virgins, maids, or widows, who shall after this act impose upon, seduce, or betray into matrimony any of his majesty's subjects by virtue of scents, cosmetics, washes, paints, artificial teeth, false hair, or high heeled shoes, shall incur the penalty of the law now in force against witchcraft and like misdemeanors."

MAN enters newspaper office. Editor looks up in alarm—"My dear sir," says the visitor, "I have a bench warrant for your arrest."

Editor—Thank God, it is no worse! I thought you had a poem.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size, octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards,

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard St., San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT, THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER

should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. E. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases. $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60, $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50; fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handing" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And buy where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution: Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

A Great Philological Question.

An exchange provides the interesting information that a Texas debating society recently selected for a subject:

"Is it proper to sound the r in dorg?"

A South Carolina gentleman brings the information that the letter r has no business in the word, but that the letter w in "dawg" is silent, except in so far as it affects the quality of the a.

Modern Moab.

A colony is being formed on the reservation about twenty miles southeast of Pierre, S. D., by a new and fanatical religious sect. They are under the leadership of a woman and hold their property in common. The woman is rather handsome and of commanding presence, and rules over the colony of about 200 in a despotic manner. Their religion seems to be a cross between Mormonism and the Jewish customs of Biblical times. They offer burnt offerings of calves, etc. They have called their town Moab. —Chicago Tribune.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
12. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
13. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
14. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
15. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
16. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
17. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
18. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalle Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words. Richard Chenevix Trench.
31. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
32. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
33. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
34. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
35. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
36. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
37. Geological Sketches. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
38. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
39. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
40. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
41. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
42. The Dawn of History. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
43. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
44. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
45. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
46. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan J. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
47. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
48. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
49. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
50. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
51. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
52. Illusions. James Sully.
53. The Origin of Species. Two Double Numbers. Charles Darwin. 30 cents each.
54. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
55. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
56. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
57. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, J.L.D.
58. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
59. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
60. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
61. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
62. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10 c.
63. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
64. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herb. Spencer.
65. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
66. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
67. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
68. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
69. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
70. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
71. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
72. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
73. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
74. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
75. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
76. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Ficton.
77. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
78. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
79. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
80. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
81. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
82. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
83. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whympfer, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—
EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,
ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO
Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,
Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors. The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

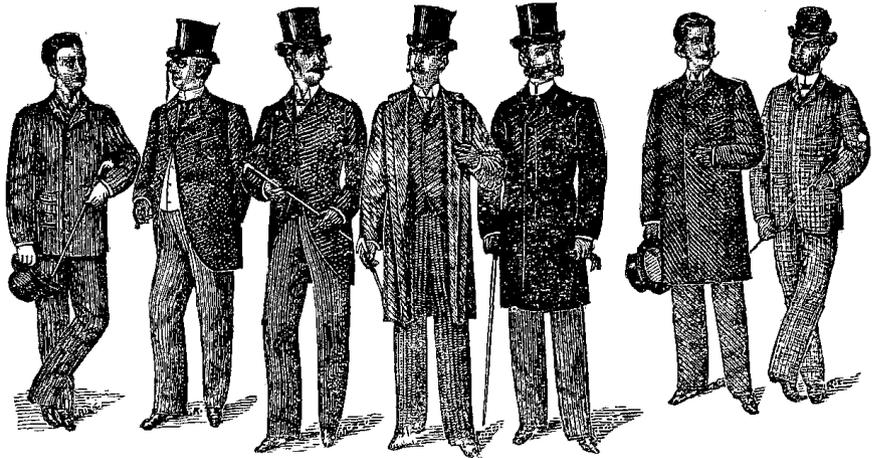

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,
Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

Standard Scientific Works

Works by Alexander Bain.
English Composition and Rhetoric.....	$1.75
Education as a Science.....	1.75
Works by Charles Darwin.
Origin of Species, 2 vols.....	$4.00
Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....	2.00
Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....	4.50
Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....	2.00
Works by J. W. Draper.
History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....	$1.75
Works by Ernst Haeckel.
The History of Creation. 2 vols.....	$5.00
Works by Huxley.
Lay Sermons.....	$1.75
The Advance of Science.....	.25
American Addresses.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin.....	.50
The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.00
Works by John Stewart Mill.
Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....	$4.00
On Liberty.....	1.25
Works by Richard A. Proctor.
Other Worlds than Ours.....	$1.75
Our Place among Infinities.....	1.75
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.75
The Moon.....	2.00
Works by Herbert Spencer.
Studies of Sociology.....	$1.50
Man versus the State.....	.30
First Principles.....	2.00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.00
Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....	2.00
Education.....	1.25
Organic Evolution.....	.75
Works by Andrew D. White.
Paper-Money Inflation in France.....	$.50
The Warfare of Science.....	1.00
Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
Body and Mind.....	$1.50
Responsibility in Mental Disease.....	1.50
Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
Handbook of Household Science.....	$1.75
Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....	1.75
MISCELLANEOUS.
By Carl Marx.
Capital.....	$3.00
By Asa Gray.
Darwiniana.....	$2.00
By L. L. McLaughlin.
Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....	$3.50
By John B. Henck.
Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....	$2.50
By C. Marcel.
Study of Languages.....	$1.25
By Lester F. Ward.
Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....	$5.00
By Frederick Overman.
A Treatise on Metallurgy.....	$5.00
B. F. G. Fairfield.
Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....	$1.25
By W. B. Carpenter.
Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....	$1.25
By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
Evolution.....	$1.50
By Sir John Lubbock.
Origin of Civilization.....	$5.00
By Charles A. Abbott.
A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....	$1.50
By Garrett P. Serviss.
Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....	$1.50
By Nathan Sheppard.
Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....	$1.50
English as She is Spoke.....	$.30
English as She is Wrote.....	.30
Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories.....	.30
Comedies for Amateur Acting.....	.30
The Distracted Young Preacher.....	.25
Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR..... $25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Protected Against Foreign Gods.

Several months ago the firm of Arnold, Cheney & Co. of New York imported a curious and valuable Maori god from New Zealand by way of San Francisco. The idol was sent through the mails from New Zealand. It was intended to rest in the Metropolitan Museum of New York. When it arrived at the New York general post-office it was seized and held for the payment of duty as an imported divinity. There is no post parcels treaty between this country and New Zealand.

The strange part of the queer case is that if the idol had been addressed to the museum and not to a private firm, and had it been sent by steamer to San Francisco, thence by any of the transportation companies to its destination, it would have been admitted free of any duty, as a freak intended for public exhibition. The consignees, under these circumstances, refused to pay for the tabooed god, and asked that it should be returned to its island home. Accordingly the Maori divinity was forwarded from New York to the dead-letter department at Washington. It is now on its way to this city. Upon its arrival here it will be sent to New Zealand on the Oceanic steamer Zealandia.

The case is regarded as an unusually novel one by the postal authorities. Probably the idol will be reshipped to New York after the Zealandia takes it home.

A Roland for an Oliver.

While cross-examining Dr. Warren a New York counsel declared that a doctor ought to be able to give an opinion of a disease without making mistakes.

"They make fewer mistakes than the lawyers," responded the physician.

"That's not so," said the counselor; "but doctors' mistakes are buried six feet under ground, a lawyer's are not."

"No," replied Warren; "but they are sometimes hung as many feet above ground."

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 0
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 0
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond.....	$5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....	$1.50
Six Months.....	.75
Three Months.....	.50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, & Linton Beville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology Price, 50 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 23.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 7, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Benicia is a city of "magnificent distances." It covers quite a territory on the sweeping hills about the bay. Its largest building is the Catholic church, and evidently St. Peter has quite a foothold. It is a quiet town, and Monday is a good deal like Sunday so far as passers-by are concerned. The streets are not crowded. Benicia, however, is favorably located for manufactures, and is increasing in this direction, and has a future of considerable importance.

I gave one lecture on Sunday evening, May 18. The attendance was not large. It was the first lecture of the kind ever given in the place. A beginning has been made and that is all; but the beginning is half the battle. The audience was appreciative, and I expect a much larger one the next time I come. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Ostello, with their phalanx of pretty children, are the "band of hope" at this point, and while they are in the field the enemy will not have it all his own way. I met a few other cordial friends, and am not by any means dismayed by the fortunes of war. This is a picket line, and the main army will come up some day and there will be an onward movement.

Leaving Benicia Monday morning, I pass a few hours with our genial friends—N. D. Goodell, R. Butterfield, and others—at Sacramento, and in the evening continue my journey, via the Oregon express to the North. In the morning, four thousand feet above the sea, we are winding through the mighty forests, alongside the stream that like a rushing host glitters in the sun, while against the luminous sky, an immense block of snow, Mt. Shasta shines now on this side of the track and now on the other, with changing magnificence, for over one hundred miles. As we emerge upon the vast plains of Siskiyou county, an enormous pyramid it rears itself in massive splendor, a sheer ascent of ten thousand feet from the level of the table lands. It is a gorgeous spectacle, while round about it the lesser mountains and hills like varying waves roll and gleam into the brilliant horizon untraveled leagues away.

At noon we arrive at Montague, and change cars for Yreka. Yreka is an old mining town that escaped the trail of the engine, and not desiring to be altogether "left" has built a railroad of its own. It is a somewhat picturesque village scattered along the foot-hills, and will undoubtedly remain just where it is for many a day to come. It will neither increase nor decrease. Rip Van Winkle might go to sleep in Yreka and wake up after twenty years and he would find no change in the aspect of the place. The buildings will be all there and nearly the same people. Yreka is one of those curious old towns that crystallize on the verge of civilization and float along with a kind of weird antiquity.

I take the stage at Yreka for Ft. Jones, eighteen miles away.

The ride over the vast hills is entertaining, and the prospects, at times, wide and beautiful through the rifts of precipitous ranges. I reach Ft. Jones in the cool of the golden evening. It is verily like a New England town in its remote placidity. The stage coach comes once a day, and that is all which disturbs its quiet comfortableness. I could easily imagine that I was "down East." The hotel had a familiar look, and as J. H. Lindsay advanced to greet me, I did not feel at all unacquainted. We were "old friends" at the first shake. Lindsay is really the oldest inhabitant in Siskiyou county. He came in '49 and has stayed right along making and losing money with the equanimity of a philosopher. He might have been a millionaire, but he wouldn't take the trouble. He enjoys life in the here and now. At one time he found a nugget worth three thousand dollars. He didn't keep it all to himself. He is as generous as the day with every good fortune that overtakes him. So far as Freethought is concerned, Ft. Jones is a somewhat slow place. I did not have over fifty at either lecture. A few staunch Liberals are here. I felt repaid for the work I attempted to do. Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Courts and family, of the hotel where I found agreeable entertainment, are thoroughgoing in Freethought principles, and generous in support of them. Mr. H. E. Witherspoon, the schoolmaster of the place, acted as chairman of the meetings, and although not agreeing with all I might say, he recognized the liberality of our platform, and was not afraid to express his honest thought. I found others ready to stand by the colors. I do not altogether despair of Ft. Jones. It has good elements and promise of progress. Scott's valley, at one end of which it is located, has many resources; once mining, but mainly farming at the present time, and when these are developed, the country will make Ft. Jones a prosperous village. A railroad is thought of from Yreka up the valley to Etna, and this would give a better fortune to Ft. Jones and its vicinity.

Just as I was on the verge of departure, I came across Geo. H. Ramsdell, of Etna, whom I first met, three years ago when I struck Myrtle Point, Coos county, Oregon. He is one of the pilgrims of the earth and always on the go. He has been quite over the coast and knows about everybody. He is a good campaigner and proposes to push Freethought. If ever I come back to Ft. Jones again, I must take in Etna, where I understand are a number of Liberals. The outlook in this corner of the world is not so bad as it might be.

Thursday morning, Lindsay and myself and the little dog, "Suse," Lindsay's invariable companion for the last twelve years, began our journey to Linkville, Oregon. We take the stage to Yreka, and the drive in the brilliant morning, amidst the vast and splendid scenery, stretching away to Shasta and the Salmon range, was exceedingly delightful. At Yreka we meet Judge Smith, of Linkville, a member in good and regular standing of the "broad church," an agreeable addition to our company. From Yreka we take railroad to Montague, and thence to Ager's, a distance of ten miles, when the stages run to Linkville, traveling all night long. Judge Smith had his own conveyance, and so securing another private conveyance, we went that afternoon to Shovel Creek, a distance of twenty miles. Here is an imposing hotel built of stone, and good accommodations. The fashionable name of this place is Klamath Hot Springs. There are also mud baths here, which are said to be quite medicinal. The Indians used to take them, and the civilized world follows the example. I didn't try one, but confined myself to the swimming bath, which was quite refreshing. The antique name of the place is Shovel Creek. The original squatter found a shovel here, whose painted symbol adorns the office of the hotel. The discovery was such a joyful surprise to the lonely pioneer that he named his ranch "Shovel Creek," and when he sold the ranch to other parties, he insisted that the name should be retained, and in local vocabulary it is still the name, and will so continue to the end of time. It is a pleasant place, surrounded with green hills and forests, beside the rushing Klamath river. Many invalids resort hither for rest and recuperation. I found it much more comfortable to lodge here than to take the night stage for Linkville. It happened that D. Gordon was also en route for Linkville, and this co-incidence furnished Lindsay, myself, and the dog a private conveyance all the way to Linkville.

It is a rough journey, however one takes it, to Linkville from Shovel Creek, a distance of thirty-five miles. Seven miles from the hotel we come to Shovel Creek mountain, where it takes one hour to climb the steep grade. We go up a couple of thousand feet, and down below in the wild canyon the swift Klamath boils along. It is a magnificent picture. Noble views open over the broad hills, the snowy peaks appear, and Mt. Pitt sends up its white column seventy miles away. It was after six o'clock when from a neighboring declivity Linkville was spread before us in its rural beauty. It is a village of about seven hundred inhabitants on the banks of the Link river, so named because it is the link between the upper and lower Klamath lakes. It presented a pretty appearance, with the broad waters before it, and beyond the waters the vast meadow lands of the Klamath basin, stretching to the hills, which in varied forms surround the wide expanse. Linkville is 4100 feet above the level of the sea. It has a population of 700, with only one church, at which only four men and eight women were present in the morning, and about twenty in the evening. It is the county seat of Klamath county.

The upper Klamath lake, one mile distant, is seventy-five feet higher than the town, and the river connecting the two lakes furnishes unsurpassed water-power, and hundreds of mills can be kept in operation. The place has superior attractions as a health and pleasure resort, on account of the lakes on either side, twenty and thirty miles long and in some places fifteen miles wide, and the hot springs, which possess great medicinal virtues. There is a prosperous career before this fertile country. Some time a railroad will be built along the Klamath to this point and further on, and when this is accomplished Linkville will be the center of one of the finest portions of the state.

Coming to the Union Hotel the first man I met was Professor Hall, formerly of Central Point, a staunch Liberal. I did not know that he was in this far-away land, and his greeting assured me that I was by no means among strangers; and when afterwards I came across J. D. Fountain, who was in Ashland the last time I lectured there, I felt quite at home after the long journey. I found Linkville to be one of the most Liberal towns I have visited. I gave three lectures and all were well attended, and the audience increased from night to night. These were the first Liberal lectures, and the welcome was all that I could wish. I was repaid for venturing into this almost unknown land. My friend, J. H. Lindsay, also felt rewarded for daring to begin the campaign. I was expecting to be here last fall, but a fire which destroyed the business portion of the town prevented. It was a disastrous destruction of property, and the past winter has been fearful, but despite these reverses there is plenty of courage left to win the fortunes of the future.

On Sunday I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Forbes, in whose pleasant home is the spirit of progress. S. B. Cranston, a member of the state senate in 1864, declared himself a Freethinker thus early, although the Christians claimed him because he affirmed that all the religion he had was to try to do good. C. A. Cogswell, a Grand Army comrade, Sheriff M. D. Childers, George Hurn, B. Monroe, W. T. Butcher, James Barkley, Daniel Gordon, Joseph Wilson, L. V. Stiles, J. W. Hamakar, P. L. Fountain, Dr. De Puy, W. E. Bowdoin, of the Klamath Star, and Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Smith are among the many friends and cordial supporters whom I had the pleasure of meeting at Linkville. Although all might not agree with everything that I advanced, yet the appreciation given was that of cultivated and open minds willing to look upon both sides of every question. I have not had a more enjoyable work anywhere than in this beautiful frontier town, which looks forth from its shining tiara of waters with such a splendid promise. The invitation to return is reciprocated with all my heart.

I had the pleasure of meeting here Lindsay Applegate, now 82 years of age, an invalid, but who hopes still to be well again and do good work. He is one of the first settlers, having come here when the British and American flags were floating for supremacy over Oregon, and he was among those that gave sovereignty to the star-spangled banner. Wonderful changes he has seen since that early time. He is still looking ahead, however.

On Tuesday morning Daniel Gordon, 79 years of age, but still young in spirit and tough as any of us, took Mr. Lindsay, myself, and "Suse" into his own wagon for the return trip, and thus we are saved from the long night ride on the stage. Tuesday evening we are at Shovel Creek, and Wednesday morning reach Ager. Here I bid good-bye to Lindsay, my companion for the whole week's campaign, true as steel, and generous in devotion to the cause. I shall not forget our journeys together, nor the success that has been achieved through the efforts of my veteran comrade. He is called "Uncle Jimmie" by all that meet him. Almost everybody in the country knows him. He is identified with its growth. As Judge Smith says, he has not an enemy in the world, and I hope he will live for many a long day, and that we may join heart and hand again for Freethought labors. I have had a splendid beginning for the summer's field. Hope is bright, for I can see that "Humanity sweeps onward."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE LICK STATUARY.

As is well known, the Freethinker, James Lick, left the sum of one hundred thousand dollars "for statuary to be placed in front of the San Francisco city hall and to be emblematic of three significant epochs in the history of the state of California." Mr. Lick died in 1876, and on June 2, 1890, nearly fourteen years later, designs for the statuary were presented to the trustees. The San Francisco Chronicle of the 2d inst. thus refers to the matter:

"To-day another scene in the Lick statuary farce-comedy is to be enacted, as by the terms of a contract made between four different people and the trustees, models are to be sent in by noon on June 2d for the group bequeathed to the city by James Lick.

"As far back as the spring of 1887 the four trustees scattered broadcast circulars inviting sculptors and architects to enter a competition for the Lick statuary according to the terms of the bequest and the testator's ideas of what the group or groups should represent. It was announced that certain prizes would be awarded to the first three successful competitors, and that the award would be made as quickly as possible after August of the same year, when all the designs were to be sent in.

"The time was finally extended, and it was October, 1887, before all the drawings were delivered. A public exhibition was made of the twenty-four designs to obtain public opinion, the names of the designers being carefully concealed. Then came a lull in the activity. Sculptors, artists, and architects inquired in vain when the decision was to be rendered, the evasive answer received being always that it took time to decide.

"As a matter of fact nothing was said or done until August, 1889, or more than two years after the flourish with which the circulars were issued. Then the trustees each named a gentleman or firm in this city and invited him or it to prepare a model for the group and take $750 in return for his work. Trustee Plum named Hochholzer, one of his own cabinet furniture designers, and naturally an adept with the sculptor's scalpel. Trustee Schoenwald chose Happelsberger, the sculptor whose fame rests on the Garfield monument at the park. Trustee Floyd selected F. Seregni, a teacher of penmanship and drawing, and Trustee Mastick named Wright & Sanders, architects.

But one of the four nominees is able to make his own models. Hochholzer's models, to be delivered to-day, were made by the sculptor Weinert; Wright & Sanders' by one or two local sculptors; Happelsberger made his own, and Seregni's have been made by Rupert Schmid, the sculptor.

"To cap the whole story, it is well understood and freely talked of by all the competitors, and even the trustees, that the actual execution of the statuary will be divided up among the competitors, their modelers doing the sculpture, and they getting the glory of aiding in the job, and so the $100,000 will be spent."

We know nothing about the jobbery here hinted at, but at least one of the designs submitted should be rejected at sight. It is that of the writing teacher, Seregni, and is thus described:

"The first group . . . represents a Mission father with uplifted hands, while in sitting posture at his feet is an Indian, the group representing the advent of Christianity in the state."

Is it possible that anyone acquainted with the religious views of James Lick could imagine for a moment that he intended his bequest to be used for such a purpose as this—to celebrate the advent of superstition in California? If a group representing the last priest in the act of quitting the state, leaving behind him a land without a church, a convent, or a parochial school, and a people from whom the last delusion of Christianity had vanished—if a group like this could be historically true, as we hope it sometime may be, there would be an appropriateness in expending James Lick's money to erect it. But his idea of the entry of Christianity into the state would be better represented by picturing California as the Garden of Eden and Catholicism as a serpent beguiling the aborigines.

When the University of California formally accepted the Lick Observatory, the orator of the day remarked that the gift had been bestowed upon us in order that by carrying us farther among the stars we might be brought nearer to God. That was unfair enough, and wholly untrue; but the orator's misleading words are soon forgotten, or remembered only for their folly. If the present scheme is carried out, however, the same sort of misrepresentation will be perpetuated in bronze and marble. The lie will be lithographed, and Lick must stand for centuries in a false position before posterity. The statuary should be at once and forever rejected.

DO WE WANT A SUNDAY LAW?

The Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, field secretary of the American Sabbath Association, has chosen California for his field of labor, probably for the reason that there is nothing for him to do elsewhere. He was in Los Angeles at latest accounts. His object, of course, is to secure the passage of a law making labor upon the first day of the week a misdemeanor. We have no idea that Mr. Crafts thinks that by this means he can stop Sunday labor. The most he can expect to do is to get the legislature to pass the law; and when the law is passed Sunday labor and Sunday recreation will go on as at present in states where Sunday laws are upon the statute books. There will, of course, be petty persecutions like those that have occurred elsewhere, but the general result will be the same here as there.

The Sabbatharians seem to care not so much for Sunday observance as for Sunday laws. If they were working for the observance of the day they would apply their labor in states having a Sunday law for them to work under. Take the state of New Jersey for example. That state has a Sunday statute as long as the moral law. It would fill a solid column of FREETHOUGHT. Yet Sunday is not better observed in New Jersey than in California. During the spasm of virtue under which New York city suffered a few years ago, when, for at least one Sunday, the liquor saloons made a pretense of closing, the inhabitants had but to cross the North river and New Jersey welcomed them with open saloons. Railroad trains and street cars were running, stores were open, street merchants vended their wares, concerts were in full blast, and, so far as Sunday observance was concerned, Hoboken did not differ from San Francisco. There was, however, this disadvantage: The people there, by engaging in these pursuits, were deliberate law-breakers and misdemeanants, while the people of California, doing the same thing, do not enjoy that distinction. As a means of manufacturing criminals and contempters of the law, Sunday statutes are a success. As instruments of persecution they have answered the purposes of bigots, but they never have been generally enforced since the days of puritanism, and are not likely to be again.

This Sunday movement in California, conducted by Eastern crusaders, is altogether too much like the missionary enterprise, and presents the people of this state in the aspect, practically, of uncivilized pagans. But we can say to Mr. Crafts and his Eastern backers what intelligent "heathen" say to the missionaries: Show us in the country you come from the practical and moral benefits of the religion and the laws you advocate. Prove to us that a Sunday law in New Jersey or New York, or any other state, makes the inhabitants of those states better citizens than those of California. Point out to us the community where the surrendering of individual liberty shows results worth the sacrifice, and we will consider your claim. But until the Sunday law has demonstrated its beneficence where it is in force, there is no reason why we should adopt it.

Apart from these considerations the Sunday law is a religious institution uniting church and state, and therefore forbidden by a secular constitution.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, June 8, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Dr. D. C. Moore; subject, "Human Progress and Evolution."

NOTICE.

We send out this week notices to subscribers in arrears. Those who receive them are asked to give them their immediate attention.

As the work of mailing these notices is necessarily done by assistants, some errors may occur, for which due allowance should be made.

THE Chronicle is kind enough to say:

"Thomas Paine said many clever things in his time and one or two that will endure for all time. Of such as these are: 'It is but a step from the sublime to the ridiculous,' and 'He rose like a rocket and fell like a stick.' Another, and one which is frequently used as a forensic embellishment, is the celebrated sentence with which he commenced No. 1 of his series of pamphlets entitled 'The Crisis,' the words being: 'These are the times that try men's souls.'

Thomas Paine was also the author of many other sayings which are destined to survive the lapse of years. One was:

"The belief in a cruel God makes a cruel man."

Another:

"One good schoolmaster is of more use than a hundred priests."

Again:

"Man has no property in man."

"The age of ignorance commenced with the Christian system."

"Any system of religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be a true system."

"Of all tyrannies that afflict mankind, tyranny in religion is the worst."

"Let us propagate morality unfettered by superstition."

"No man ought to make a living by religion. One man cannot act religion for another—every person must perform it for himself."

These are all good maxims, and they express more than abstract truths. They are precepts that recommend themselves to every intelligent mind, and solid facts that are demonstrated by history and experience.

A DISPATCH from Hiawatha, Kansas, says:

"The death of Neal Heeney, a prominent citizen of this place, which took place last night, will probably furnish the text for many sermons on the subject of Sabbath desecration. Heeney had gone to Severance, a place on the railroad in Doniphan county, about fifteen miles from here, and in the evening went into the poolroom and began to play. While the game was in progress a thunder storm came up, but attracted little attention, as thunder storms are not uncommon occurrences in Kansas in summer. The game continued, and Heeney was just in the act of making a shot when there was a blinding flash of lightning and he fell to the floor dead. Most of those who were in the room at the time were badly shocked, but none of the others were fatally hurt."

When the ministers have extracted all the texts possible from the foregoing incident, they may turn their attention to this one:

"To avert the dreadful hailstorms that have recently visited the town of Mahlen, in Germany, the people of the village met in their church May 22 to offer up prayer that fair weather might return. While upon their knees lightning struck the church, and four of the devotees were killed and twenty injured."

THE Denison, Texas, Sunday Gazette very aptly calls attention to the fact that the Mormon church is not the only religious organization in this country that places the alleged laws of God above the laws of the state, which was the assumption upon which Congress has disfranchised the followers of Brigham Young. Article 13 of the "Testimony" of the United Presbyterian church of America reads as follows:

"That the law of God is supreme in its authority and obligations, and where commands of church and state conflict we are to obey God rather than man."

It is to be remembered that what the Presbyterians call the law of God is, as a matter of fact, only the law of a few men who control the organization. To call any rule of conduct a law of God comes very easy to those who have no regard for the truth, but it would be more difficult to prove it anything but a human production; and until the divine origin is proven, men are responsible to men for any kind of law they inculcate or obey. So far as the state has knowledge, there is no law of God.

SOMEBODY having asked the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts if a Saturday law was not necessary to protect the Jew in the religious observance of the seventh day, Mr. Crafts replies: "It is not sufficiently emphasized that the Jew is left absolutely free to observe the seventh day. He can close his shop; he can refuse to work." So he can; but it is not "sufficiently emphasized" that the Christian is left absolutely free to observe the first day. "He can close his shop; he can refuse to work." Thus it will be seen that the attitude assumed by Mr. Crafts toward the Jew is exactly the attitude of Secularists toward the Christian. And since Jew and Christian have equal freedom and equal opportunities, what more is to be desired? Nothing, except by Christian bigots who want to get all the law and advantage on their side.

At the Sabbath Convention recently held in San Jose it was voted to request all Christians to pray, both in their private and public devotions "for the enactment of a righteous Sabbath law in California." The framers of this resolution should have said what they meant. What they want is not a Sabbath law, but a Sunday law. The only Sabbath for which there is any scriptural authority is Saturday. And as for a "righteous Sabbath law," there never was one on the statute books of any state, and never will be. If the San Jose Christians pray as they vote, they will pray for the unattainable.

THE editor of the Ironclad Age remarks: "Frank Bennett, an old-time Infidel, was recently elected mayor of Seymour. The godlike elected him, seeing that he never expends a cent in support of his irreligion, and they know an unbeliever of that kind never counts in a 'bar' fight." There are, we understand, many Infidels like Mr. Frank Bennett, who by withdrawing from the church are relieved of the burden of pew rent, and who have been Freethinkers for many years without a cent of expense.

THE able paper by the late J. W. North now appearing in the London "Agnostic Journal" under the title of "Christianity and Science," and credited to the "Progressive Thinker," was published in FREETHOUGHT about a year ago, having been furnished for that purpose by the author.

THE census enumerators are asking people some questions he answers to which they have no business to know. Such are the inquiries concerning diseases and their nature. It is the right of every man or woman to conceal sufferings that are not contagious, and nature has provided for this by enabling them to "throw up the little breastwork of a lie," which would be justifiable in the present case if ever.

If the Lick trustees imagine that they were appointed to do nothing except draw their salaries they are performing their supposed duty most faithfully. Their delay in selecting a design for the city hall statuary represents a loss of ten thousand dollars to the estate. The trustees get a thousand dollars each per annum, and the secretary draws three thousand.

The English clergy of the Established church are reported to be "greatly aroused" over the prospect of disestablishment. It would indeed be a great calamity to these gentlemen if they were obliged to earn their own living instead of taxing the public to provide it.

The splurge over the Oelrichs-Fair nuptials is hardly decent. It is interesting only to the prurient to be repeatedly reminded that on the night of June 3 Mr. Herman Oelrichs assumed relations toward Miss Theresa Fair which he may not hitherto have enjoyed.

Is the present census going to give any statistics of the number of Freethinkers in the country, or are all who are not Catholics to be lumped together as "Protestants?"

PETITIONS for the pardon of M. Harman may be had at this office. We learn that the health of Mr. Harman is somewhat improved and that he has been set at work in the penitentiary.

OBSERVATIONS.

They tell me that if a man desires to be of any account in this growing community he must ally himself with one of the great political parties, and therefore I have joined a club. I did not inquire whether it was Republican or Democratic, that being immaterial to me, as I am no partisan, and the political tendency of the member is not inquired into. He signs his name to a roll, and that is all. The candidate pays the expenses. My club meets in a deserted building that looks as if some other kind of a club had been used in knocking out the windows and pulverizing the clapboards. Most clubs meet in a corner grocery, but our candidate does not believe in saloon politics. It is more expensive, as the time is likely to be shorter between drinks.

I have always had some curiosity to know what "ward politics" was like. If this club is a fair sample, there is nothing especially dangerous about it. I will give a brief synopsis of the proceedings at the meeting which I attended:

Meeting called to order by the president, a mild mannered gentleman—the members, seated on some rough and slivery benches, applauding as he rises. "The first thing in order," says the president, "is the calling of the roll, which we will now proceed to dispense with." (Great applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: You will now listen to the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting. (Cheers.)

THE SECRETARY reads minutes, containing resignation of a former president. Minutes adopted upon motion amid applause.

OFFICIOUS MEMBER: With reference to the resignation of our former president, I move you, Mr. Chairman, that the office of president be declared vacant. (Applause.)

Seconded and about to be carried when the discovery is made that a president, the one now presiding, was elected at last meeting. Officious member takes it all back. Seconder collapses and remains quiet the rest of the evening. (Applause.)

Business resumed. Chairman of Executive Committee reports. Your committee instructed serjeant-at-arms to provide more lights to illuminate club-room. Furnished said serjeant-at-arms with funds for the purpose. No lamps; no serjeant-at-arms. Recommend the election of another. (Applause.)

OFFICIOUS MEMBER: I move that the office of serjeant-at-arms be declared vacant. Motion cautiously seconded.

THE PRESIDENT: It is moved that the office of surgeon-of-arms be declared vacant. (Applause.) What shall we do about it?

UNKNOWN MEMBER (suggestively): Put the motion.

THE PRESIDENT: What head are we now under?

SECRETARY: Unfinished business.

PRESIDENT: This is new business to me.

CRIES: Put the motion.

THE PRESIDENT: What is the motion before the house, Mr. Secretary?

THE SECRETARY: Sargan'-arms—vacant.

THE PRESIDENT: Oh, yes. The question is that the surgeon-of-arms be declared vacant. (Applause.)

Motion put and carried. Another serjeant-at-arms elected. Vote cast by secretary and counted by president.

CRIES: Speech, speech!

Newly-elected serjeant-at-arms responds. Don't profess to be a speech-maker, but will do his duty. (Tremendous applause.)

No other business before the house. Speeches called for. German member, upon invitation, declares he is no talker, but a worker. All brothers in the cause. (Candidate: Hear, hear!) Will put the wheel to the shoulder. (Cheers.)

IRISH MEMBER (upon invitation) says he is no speech-maker, but a worker. He will, however, put his shoulder to the wheel. (Great enthusiasm.) Closes by calling on Captain Jimson (the candidate) whom he hopes soon to call by another title. (Hit of the evening. Unbounded applause.)

CAPTAIN JIMSON arises and bows. Makes an address, admonishing Irish member against casting ridicule on the grammar of German member. We are all brothers. (Loud and long-continued applause.)

RETICENT AND GLOOMY MEMBER (upon invitation) says he wishes to be excused this evening. When the time comes will have something to say about certain members of the club. (Sensation.)

OFFICIOUS MEMBER calls upon gloomy member to prove his assertions, such assertions being most extraordinary and detrimental to the interests of the club.

IRISH MEMBER: Let it lay over as unfinished business. 'Twill bring out the b'ys at the next meeting if they think there's going to be fun. (Laughter and applause, restoring harmony.)

THE PRESIDENT: Has any other member anything to say for the good and welfare of this club?

IRISH MEMBER: I rise to a pint of order.

UNKNOWN MEMBER: Who said pint of lager?

CANDIDATE: Here, here. (Moves adjournment, which is carried with a rush.)

Outside the door the candidate is surrounded by his constituents, who waft him along the street until a grocery is reached, when all disappear.

Our club has a large number of members, some of whom have a distinct pull in the ward. Party leaders must come to our terms or bury their political aspirations.

Mr. B. R. Tucker, editor of "Liberty," declares that I am wrong when I say that such men as Harman and Heywood serve to draw the enemy's fire while the main body of reform moves on unmolested. On the contrary, he says, "they precipitate an irresistible onslaught upon our whole line which is liable to result in our annihilation." I am not quite ready to yield the point, in spite of Mr. Tucker's further argument that any act which "courts certain defeat is rash, ill-timed, and calculated to separate us farther from economic liberty and sexual liberty."

But how do we know when an act courts certain defeat? It must be remembered that every step outside the beaten track is an experiment. We never know exactly what we may be permitted to do until we try it. When there is general doubt about the thickness of the ice, the man who goes ahead and tests it is regarded as a useful person if he finds it safe, and a fool if he breaks through and gets drowned. We are ignorant of the amount of liberty we may enjoy until we feel about us and find out how tight the bonds are; but we can safely risk our last dollar on the proposition that we will never have any more than we reach out and take. The blessed "people," represented by the church and state, are not in the habit of extending favors to us in the form of new liberties; they are much more inclined to cinch us closer. For this reason I often feel that Vanderbilt's celebrated maxim, "The people be damned," may have something in it after all.

But to return. Mr. Harman, as an experimenter, has found out that the "beast," to borrow a term from Mr. John Most, will not permit him to publish matter like that contained in the Markland letter. This is knowledge which costs Mr. Tucker and myself nothing, yet the information is worth as much to us as it is to Mr. Harman, as either of us might have published it if he had not, and got five years in the penitentiary. Heywood's "Cupid's Yokes" taught us the same lesson free of cost to ourselves. It is on account of the foregoing considerations that I feel a certain sense of gratitude to these pioneers, and I wish they had sufficient sense to accept, as others do, the results of their experiments, and keep out of the clutches of the beast.

It was not pleasing to the Rev. Alexander Dowie, faith-healer, that the Freethought Society should hold a sociable and dance in the hall adjoining the one where he preached last Sunday evening. Mr. Dowie further objected to a Freethought meeting being advertised at the same time and place as his faith-healing services. This resulted in having the piano slid across the hall where it would disturb him as little as possible, and then the exercises proceeded.

Mr. Eastman presided. Miss Staley led the musical programme with a piano solo; the Misses Haelke next appeared, dividing their attention between the piano and a zither; Mr. W. S. Bell gave a very well-selected humorous reading; Miss Arper recited "The Old Man Comes to 'Frisco" excellently, and Messrs. Haelke and Schultze performed a laughable sketch entitled "Ulrich's Lamentation." These things consumed the front part of the evening, and after a brief intermission during which the chairs were removed, the floor was crowded with dancers, the able orchestra did its perfect work, and the audience proceeded to amuse itself. The ladies had provided large quantities of cake, while other members of the committee contributed sufficient colored lemonade to prevent a drouth. These were free to the wayfarer and formed a part of the entertainment of which mention should in no wise be omitted.

On this occasion the ladies somewhat outnumbered the gentlemen present. On lecture evenings the majority is usually of the other sex, which fact shows that our sisters are highly endowed with the social nature, while in the brethren the intellectual faculty is predominant.

Next Sunday evening the society recurs to sober business, and will listen to a lecture on "Human Progress and Evolution" by Dr. D. C. Moore.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

One of the worst railroad disasters in the history of this state occurred on the narrow gauge track in Oakland on Decoration Day, May 30. An engine and one car, in which were about thirty passengers, fell through an open drawbridge into Oakland creek. A few of the passengers succeeded in escaping through the windows and roof of the car, but thirteen are known to have been drowned. The responsibility for the accident seems to rest wholly with the engineer, who could not help seeing the signal flag and the open bridge. Following are the names of the drowned: Mrs. Bryan O'Connor, of San Francisco; E. R. Robinson, of San Francisco and Oakland; Luigi Malatesta, 2004½ Dupont street, San Francisco; Attilio Malatesta, son of Luigi Malatesta; Martin Kelly, assistant chief wharfinger, San Francisco; M. Q. Williams, 48 Fourth street, San Francisco; H. S. Austin, 220 Mission street, San Francisco; Miss Florence Austin, San Francisco; H. S. Auld, Honolulu; J. B. Irwin, agent for Singer's sewing machine, Thirteenth and Washington streets, Oakland; Captain Dwyer, Sacramento; Misses Nellie and Katie Kearns, San Francisco.—The Supreme Court commissioners for this state have rendered an opinion upholding the validity of the vaccination act. The question came before the court on an appeal from the Santa Cruz Superior Court. James Abeel, guardian of D. K. Abeel, a pupil, desired the latter to attend the public schools without being vaccinated. D. C. Clark, principal of the school, refused to enroll the pupil in the school unless he was vaccinated, when the guardian of the boy sued out a writ of mandamus to compel him to do so. The Superior Court dismissed the writ.—The San Francisco Turn Verein gave a very interesting gymnastic exhibition at 323 Turk street last Sunday evening. Next Sunday the Verein begins a three-days festival at Badger's Park in Oakland.—The Chinese are pouring into Mexico, to the great alarm of native laborers and miners, who are being superseded by the yellow pests.—William Patten, one of the oldest residents of Oakland, Cal., and one of the first men to come to this coast in early days, died in Oakland last week. He was 93 years of age.—The charges of immorality made against the Rev. Dr. Stratton, ex-president of Mills College, have been dismissed after investigation by a committee of Methodist ministers.—It is now said that Hardie, the Los Angeles lawyer who was murdered recently near Tombstone, Arizona, was not killed by Indians but by whites. The body was not mutilated or robbed.—Schaefer, the billiardist, in his recent match with McCleery at Metropolitan Temple, this city, scored three thousand points without a miss—the greatest run on record. McCleery, the local champion, had fifteen points to his credit at the end of the game.—Sixty-five Hollanders arrived in Merced May 30. They are direct from Rotterdam. The citizens turned out and welcomed the new recruits to the town with a brass band and speeches. The entire company of immigrants have declared their intention to become American citizens.

John Geiger, aged 35 years, hanged himself Saturday night in the orchard of his employer at Pittsburg, Pa. He has been insane on the subject of religion for several years, and those who knew him well were accustomed to hearing him say he could hear the angels calling him.—Pickpockets raided a Missouri Pacific train from Warrensburg, Mo., crowded with Dunkards returning home. One Dunkard minister was relieved of $1800 in money and another of $800 and a gold watch. Different members of the party lost watches and other valuables.—The Prohibitionists of the country are holding their seventh annual national camp-meeting at Oakland, Ill.—President Harrison was the guest of the Scotch-Irish congress at Pittsburg, Pa., last Saturday.—Walt Whitman, the poet, was entertained at dinner in Philadelphia, May 31, by a number of his literary friends, the occasion being his 71st birthday.—The Texas Spring Palace at Fort Worth was destroyed by fire on the last evening of the annual festivities. Many men, women, and children were injured, some fatally.—A statue to General Lee, the Confederate soldier, was unveiled at Richmond, Va., May 30.—Maude Fisher, a religious girl 18 years old, committed suicide last Monday, in New Britain, Conn., by drowning herself in a reservoir, because she thought she was too wicked to live.

In the Chamber of Deputies at Rome, May 31, Prime Minister Crispi closed the debate on the internal policy of the government. The situation of Italy abroad, he said, was never so good as now. A motion expressing confidence in the government was carried by a vote of 329 to 61.—The woman's Liberal Federation will present a memorial to Gladstone asking him to include the franchise to women in the programme of issues at the next general election for members of Parliament.

CHURCH PROPERTY IN SAN FRANCISCO.

There are certain figures on the taxation of church property in this city presented in Magee's Real Estate Circular for April, 1887, which I think should be preserved for reference; and as that issue is now out of print, I subjoin some of the items from a copy loaned me by Mr. L. Diamant:

The Roman Catholic church then owned 57 parcels of real estate distinctly specified, improved and unimproved by buildings, some of these consisting of several lots; also lots in seven specified tracts, the number of lots not being stated. The assessed value was $897,645; the taxes paid were $14,102.36. Of these amounts, my addition gives land assessments at a total of $598,955; buildings and other improvements, $251,005; not discriminated in Magee's table, St. Joseph's (10 Howard), $27,760; Magdalen Asylum, $6,775. These make a total of $884,495, which is $13,150 less than Magee's total, but I have not time to clear up the discrepancy in additions.

Besides this, there are five mortgages on these properties, aggregating $51,455, taxes on which are legally payable by the parties owning the mortgages.

The valuations and taxations of property owned by other denominations are as follows:

Episcopal, 7 lots—$107,890 assessment; $1694.98 tax; mortgages (3), $22,300. Congregational, 6 lots—$62,705 assessments; $985.10 tax. Baptist, 4 lots—$35,170 assessments; $552.51 tax. Presbyterian, 11 lots—$122,180 assessments; $1,919.45 tax; 4 mortgages, $41,000. Methodist, 16 lots—$134,755 assessments; $2,117.50 tax; $19,575 mortgages. German churches (Protestant?) 5—$36,655; $591.52 tax. Protestant Orphan—$98,360, land and buildings; $1,545.24 tax. Young Men's Christian Association—$46,280; tax $727; (of which building is valued at $9000). Boys and Girls Aid Society—$9,655; tax, $151.67. Russian, 2 lots—$13,990; tax, $219.78. Unitarian (Geary st., since sold)—$71,550; tax, $1,124.05. Swedenborgian—$11,750; tax, $180.60. Hebrew synagogues, 4—$101,880; tax, $1599.91. Hebrew asylums, 2—$25,050; tax, $390.54. Hebrew cemetery—$15,400; tax, $242.

Total assessed value of all churches, homes, asylums, etc., $1,791,875; taxes, $28,147.28.

Now comes the cream of it. Magee says: "Of course, churches and the charity properties of churches are not assessed at over half what other property is assessed at, and this is perfectly proper. . . . What they now contribute to the city and state in taxes is a mere bagatelle; yet their exemption from taxation would be a great aid to religion, charity, and education. At least so say the representatives of all these churches alike." Of course they say so; it is as much in their line of business as for a cigarmaker to claim that smoking is healthy—they live by it. "These churches," says Magee, "were not organized to make money." Nevertheless many ministers get large salaries, and many church members find it pays to be such.

Mr. Magee winds up with the statement: "The total property of all our religious bodies has an assessed value of but $1,791,875; its salable value to-day is at least three times that sum, or nearly $5,500,000."

That is, church property then was only assessed a third of what the law requires, and what the assessor is bound by his oath to assess it for. But presumably he gets absolution for his perjury.

The pretense of churches promoting morality, etc., is very thin. The records of our prisons, insane asylums, poor-houses, etc., so far as they can be obtained, prove exactly the contrary; the more orthodox the belief, the greater the proportion of criminals it furnishes. As to education, the orthodox church seminaries seem mainly engaged in teaching their pupils how not to think, and this is also largely the case in the public schools.

Yet Magee and the assessors claim that tax-payers generally should be taxed extra in order to enable the churches to disseminate their pernicious dogmas at the cost of those who do not believe in them instead of the cost of those who do. This is done by a virtual combination of church and state as complete as any which exists in any European country, through our system of misrepresentation. Our political beliefs are fully as superstitious as the orthodox religious beliefs. To be religiously free is to be politically disfranchised. So it is to be a free and independent thinker on any subject. We have no representative government and never had; and the only country that has anything approaching to one is Switzerland; excepting that as to the election of school trustees, Great Britain has the cumulative vote.

A very large proportion of the real estate of the Roman Catholic church consists of vacant lots, held all over the city and suburbs, presumably for speculative purposes. That church is the heaviest land-grabber in this city; and it is probably the same in other large cities. It is no wonder that Archbishop Corrigan was so bitterly down on "Father" McGlynn for advocating the taxation of land alone, which would diminish, by many millions, the income of that church that fastens the chains of superstition on the people more and more securely, through the workings of our systems of political misrepresentation and taxation, and in defiance of all progress of thought in other directions. Canute failed to roll back the waves of the advancing tide; but that church, through alliance with politicians, continues to roll back the otherwise advancing tide of modern thought. And it will not be otherwise until we have Freehought in politics, as well as in religion; until we cease to be slaves to party as well as to sect, and reject that most detestable of all superstitions which consists in the belief that we have a representative government.

ALFRED CRIDGE.

A MISTAKE.

"One might as well try to prove by denial that there is no sun, star, earth, light, or a thousand other existing realities, as to deny the creator."—Mrs. Noff, M.D.

The writer of the above makes a great mistake by classing the seen and the known with the unseen and the unknown. Science, history, and every reasonable person will agree that suns, stars, earth, and light exist. These facts are as plain and probable as that two and two make four. No one denies them or tries to argue that they are myths. But as far back as we have any record men and women have denied a creator, and year by year the number of Atheists is increasing, especially so among the intelligent, thinking class of people. They see no need for a creator or a creation. They see no proof of any thing, any power, or any existence outside of and beyond matter with its powers and potencies.

The wiser people become, the less faith they have in the supernatural. As they trace effects back to causes and find out the reasons why, they see no need and no possibility of there being a "great first cause," a cause itself or himself or herself uncaused. But they find each result preceded by innumerable causes, running so far back into time as to blot out the possibility of finding a beginning. They learn that matter is eternal and has in itself all the powers that produce present effects and have produced past effects through all eternity.

God is only a name for ignorance and idleness. The believer don't know and can't conceive, and instead of trying to learn and understand, simply says "it's God," and thus raises a blank wall that effectually prevents all further knowledge. The more crude and uncivilized the age the more gods the people have. Only knowledge will destroy the deities and make men wiser, kinder, and better than any god has ever been conceived to be.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Mrs. M. P. KREKEL, of Kansas, gave the last of the course of three consecutive lectures last Sunday evening, which was the most eloquent and brilliant of the series. The lady is one of the most gifted and polished orators we have ever listened to. Her themes are attractive, and the masterly manner in which she discusses them evidence that they are wisely chosen. Mrs. Krekel combines eloquence with logic, and brilliant rhetoric with profound reasoning in her discourses, together with a fine delivery and dignified attractive personal appearance, and we assure our readers who were not so fortunate as to hear the talented speaker that they lost a rare intellectual treat. There is a possibility of Mrs. Krekel visiting Lodi on her return from Fresno, and it is hoped that she will again favor us with one or more lectures.—Lodi Valley Recorder.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Grey's River	June 11 to 18	Baker City	July 27, 28, 29
Portland	June 22	Union	July 30
Cascades, Wash.	June 24, 25	Summerville	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Fossil, Or.	June 29	Dayton	Aug. 10, 11
Lost Valley	July 1	Rosalia	Aug. 13
Wagner	July 2, 3, 4	Plaza	Aug. 14
Prineville and vicinity	July 7 to 16	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
Monument	July 18	Spokane Falls	Aug. 17
Hamilton	July 19	Davenport	Aug. 18, 19
Fox	July 20, 21, 22	Buckley	Aug. 21, 22, 23
John Day	July 24	Tacoma	Aug. 25
Prairie City	July 25	Port Townsend	Aug. 31

TEXT BOOKS IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

"The state board of education will receive proposals on June 3 for the furnishing of such text books as may be hereafter enumerated for the use of the common schools of the state for a period of five years from and after the 1st day of September, 1890."

The following letter tells its own story:

WASHINGTON SECULAR UNION.

Organized January 29, 1890, for the protection and perpetuation of American institutions. President, R. Winsor; secretary, C. B. Reynolds; treasurer, G. M. Boman; directors at large, A. Rosenow, R. J. Wilson.

2104 Sixth street, SEATTLE, WASH., May 24, 1890.

To the Hon. Board of Education of the State of Washington:

Gentlemen: The Washington Secular Union having been organized, and through its efforts a fund provided to enforce and protect all individuals in the "absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment," as guaranteed by Art. I. Sec. 11, of the constitution of this state; and farther, to see that "no one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion," and that "no public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction" in violation of the provisions of said section; the Washington Secular Union, believing that your honorable board has the public school system of the state and its success uppermost in your hearts while about to receive bids for and determine what text books shall be used in the public schools of this young state for the next five years; and believing that your responsibilities as a board, under your oath of office as well as your consciences as men, and individual duties as citizens of the state, will cause you to protect and guard, as well as bow in humble obedience to, the rights referred to and guaranteed by the constitution; desires to call your special attention to the fact that many of the text books now in common use in the schools contain quotations from the Bible known as the King James version, Bible stories, and other matters of religious sentiment, belief, and instruction.

You will observe that in our constitution the exclusion is not of sectarian instruction, etc., but of any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, and that under our constitution there is not even room for the contention made in the case on the relation of Weiss, et al. vs. School District No. 8 in the city of Edgerton, Wis., decided by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin March 18, 1890, and reported in vol. 44 of the Northwestern Reporter, at page 967, to which your attention is respectfully called.

If any school-book offered or proposed to be used in any of the public schools of our state contains any religious instruction or sentiment, we respectfully request your honorable board to reject any and every such book.

Absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment being guaranteed to every individual, necessarily includes every individual scholar at our public schools, and this can only be effected by the use of text books entirely free from any religious belief or sentiment.

And we earnestly solicit that in the discharge of your duties as the state board of education you will remove all excuse for the hierarchy of Rome, or any other power or person, to make just attacks upon the public schools and school system of the state on account of the practices in and conduct of the public schools in violation of the most sacred rights guaranteed by the constitution.

We desire to call your attention to the fact that in many of our public schools the teachers, in direct violation alike of the letter and the spirit of the constitution, open school with such religious worship, exercise, and instruction as happens to suit the humor, faith, or caprice of the teacher or local school board; in profound ignorance or utterly ignoring the fact that Washington is now a state, with a bill of rights and a constitution.

At Lynden, Whatcom county, the public school exercises are opened by one of the teachers reading a chapter from the King James version of the Bible; the Lord's prayer is recited by the entire school, after which a gospel hymn is sung. Reading the Bible is religious instruction. Reciting or repeating the Lord's prayer, or any other prayer, is religious worship. Singing gospel hymns is religious exercise.

Why should such unlawful proceedings be tolerated, when even the most fanatical and bigoted religionist, equally with the Liberal, is interested in the strict enforcement of the bill of rights?

For if it is right and just to have the Protestant Bible read, the Lord's prayer repeated, and gospel hymns sung at the opening of public schools when or wherever Protestants are in a majority, then it is equally right and just to have the Roman Catholic Bible read, prayers to the virgin Mary repeated, and hymns or parts of high mass sung at the opening of public schools when and where Roman Catholics are in a majority.

The officers and members of the Washington Secular Union are each and all most staunch and devoted friends of our public schools, regarding them as the bulwarks of American independence and the only sure reliance for the perpetuation of our republic.

We should deeply deplore being compelled in the defense of the sacred rights, so wisely and justly guaranteed by our constitution, of absolute freedom of religious sentiment to every individual, to appeal to the courts, because we desire to avoid the religious strife, hate, and bickering that such litigation would engender.

We therefore ask the action of your honorable board, believing you have the right, power, and duty to avert such litigation or appeal to the courts by officially notifying all public school officers of the state of their duty and your determination to enforce obedience to the constitution, affording absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment and belief to every individual. To insure which we ask you to positively prohibit the use of any book containing any religious exercise or instruction, or that indorses or inculcates religious belief or sentiment, in any public school in the state. Respectfully yours, etc.,

C. B. REYNOLDS, Sec.

R. WINSOR, Pres.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XII.—CONTINUED.

ENTITLED YE PLAINS.

The Plain of Science.—The Favorites of the Dragons.—The Car of Free-thought.—The Trees of the Plain.—Simon falls in with Unitheos.—Simon and Unitheos in the Plain.—The Vision of Unitheos.—True Communism.

39. Now, they had not gone far when they perceived one of the giants busy with one of the trees called Astronomos.

40. And the giant perceiving them, inquired whither they went; and Simon said, We are bound to the great and glorious city beyond the river.

41. And the giant smiled, and plucked some of the fruit from the tree, and offered them thereof, saying, Eat; they are good for the eyesight.

42. And Unitheos partook, and lo! a film fell from his eyes, and he saw that the firmament was neither of brass nor yet of tapestry, and he began to mutter.

43. And I, Philo Aletheia, listened to his muttering, and heard this, The stars are not candles, but Joshua was an ass.

44. But Simon, saying the fruit was dry, swallowed but little.

45. And the giant said to Unitheos, Where thinkest thou is the city thou searchest for; where thy guide-book telleth thee?

46. And Unitheos started and said, Nay, verily, that which I thought was the outskirts of it has vanished, now that I see better.

47. And Simon said, I fear me much, Unitheos, that this is some snare of the evil one. I do remember that I perceived trees somewhat like unto these in the Forest, but the fruit thereof was by no means like unto this.

48. And the giant answered, saying, Of a truth there are trees somewhat like these in the Forest, for seest thou yonder car which is casting out great abundance of seed? Out of that car hath seeds been carried into the Forest, and trees have sprung up; but, as thou sayest, though the trees somewhat resemble these, yet the fruit is different; and the reason is this:

49. In the Forest the guides destroy and bend the trees, and compel them to twine themselves round other trees, such as belong to the Forest, and thus they become strangled, and their growth impeded, and their fruit becometh unsound and worthless, and is never matured; whilst here the trees are under no law, but grow accordingly to their several inclinations, and do accordingly flourish and bear their natural fruit.

50. And the giant led Unitheos to another tree, called Critical Examination; and this tree gave forth light, and its virtues were such that whatsoever was brought nigh unto it, straightway became of its true color and texture, and appeared without disguise.

51. And the giant desired Unitheos to examine his guide-book thereby; and Unitheos did so, and immediately the book looked so hideous that Unitheos cast it upon the ground, and kicked it away, and began to laugh.

52. And Simon was greatly astonished, and mightily afraid, and he inquired of Unitheos why he laughed and kicked the book.

53. And Unitheos said, Verily, I laugh because I now perceive what an ass I have been; and I kicked the book because 'tis full of lies. Prithee come hither and look at it by this light, and then thou wilt kick it also; and Simon looked.

54. And Simon began to be exceedingly affrighted, and he cried out piteously, saying, Ah, Unitheos, now we are altogether undone; woe, woe, woe is me! Oh, that I, one of the chosen, should be thus entrapped! Fly, Unitheos, while there is yet time. And Simon turned him about and fled like a full-grown whirlwind.

55. And as he fled, there suddenly surrounded him on every side more than six hundred and nine imps, called Doubts, and they began to bite and gnaw him without compassion; and one of the greatest of the imps was called Unpardonable Sin, and it ran a tilt at Simon with its claws, and spitted him thereon, and held him aloft and carried him away; and the rest of the imps followed, tormenting Simon without ceasing.

56. And Simon groaned with an exceeding great and grievous dismality.

57. And sundry guides came up and battled with the imps, and sent them packing, and unspitted Simon.

58. And Simon rejoiced exceedingly, and danced for joy, and shouted aloud, and split the afflicted clouds with his vociferous howling, and go: him again into the gutter and plunged headlong into the mire and filth, and bathed himself unsparingly in the mud, and sang like a pelican.

59. And he girded up his loins afresh, and went on his way triumphantly, and held up his empty head, and strode away with valiant and lordly strides.

60. And Unitheos and the giant laughed consummately.

61. And the giant showed Unitheos some of the wonders of the Plain, and made known to him the desire and intention of the people thereof, how they desired to cultivate the great tree called Natural Wealth, and let all men share in its bountiful produce, and debar none.

62. And Unitheos admired very exceedingly, and extolled the giants and their cause; and when the giant left him he began to ponder on the things he had heard and seen, and, pondering, he fell into a vision.

63. And he saw a new earth and a new heaven.

64. Vast plains were spread before him, studded with pleasant dwellings, and peopled with happy and smiling nations.

65. There was a man truly a man, and his fellows were his brethren. Not one was higher than another, nor one any lower.

66. The ground teemed with abundant fruit, and verdant pastures nurtured unnumbered flocks. There the sloping vale spread its charms to the glowing sun, and shimmered in silvery beauty beneath the colder glances of the moon.

67. There the towering hill lifted its hoary head to the skies, the swelling bosom thereof clad in richest verdure, and girdled with unfading firs.

68. There the crystal streamlet pursued its way, now flowing silently and peacefully through shady glades, and now murmuring in gentle cadences, like the softest notes of the air-stirred lyre, and anon leaping in mimic fright from crag to crag, and forming tiny cascades sparkling like unto a myriad gems.

69. There mighty rivers swept majestically along their rock-girt courses, now gliding slowly and placidly through verdant plains and wood-girt valleys, and now swiftly racing adown gentle declivities, and anon, in seething fury, rushing in thunderous torrents over mighty precipices, and with foam-crowned crest forcing their resistless way with surging bounds through appalling gorges, and awakening from the cavernous depths a thousand weird echoes.

70. There the feathered songsters of many-hued plumage filled the air with their melodies, and adorned the woods by their beauty.

71. There the resonant din of commerce rose to the skies, and the busy hum of prosperous cities smote on the listening ear.

72. There the craftsman was equal with the highest, and not a man dwelt in idleness, or lived by the toil of another.

73. There every man did his portion of the labor, and none labored more than was his due, or beyond his strength.

74. There every one had sufficient wherewith to provide for his needs, and none more than sufficient, and the residue was for the sick, the feeble, and the aged. Thither came not famine, for all alike shared in the bountiful outpourings of the earth.

75. There was the abode of learning and knowledge, and every man had abundant leisure to profit thereby.

76. There dwelt not crime, for the inducement thereto was vanished. No man dwelt in fear of the robber, for, all having enough, none had need to steal.

77. Thither came not pestilence, for Science was nurtured. Thither came not war, for there were neither kings nor priests.

78. There innocent mirth and youthful pleasures made the earth ring again, and the shades of night joyous.

79. There the sweet song of blithesome content pervaded the air, and the merry carolings of youth filled the heart.

80. There the swift stepping of the frequent dance gladdened the eyes, and the elastic bounding of ruddy children made men merry.

81. And the rest of the Vision of Unitheos, behold, is it not written in the book of Futurity, and in the chronicles of the To-come?

To be Continued.

HELL.

J. M. Wheeler, of London, has written a work entitled "The Christian Doctrine of Hell," in which he quotes a good many pious authorities on that burning question. Following are portions of his citations and comments:

"The Sight of Hell," by the Rev. J. Furniss, C.S.S.R., is another popular work issued "permissu superiorum" among "Books for Children and Young Persons." A more atrocious composition it is difficult to conceive. The agony is piled on as though the imagination of the writer reveled in the description of torture. One specimen, a mild one, will suffice:

Perhaps at this moment, seven o'clock in the evening, a child is just going into hell. To-morrow evening at seven o'clock go and knock at the gates of hell and ask what the child is doing. The devils will go and look. Then they will come back again and say, the child is burning! Go in a week and ask what the child is doing; you will get the same answer—it is burning! Go in a year and ask, the same answer comes—it is burning! Go in a million of years and ask the same question; the answer is just the same—it is burning! So if you go forever and ever, you will always get the same answer—it is burning in the fire!

I declare I would rather put into the hands of any young child Boccaccio's "Decameron," or any of the works put on the Roman "Index Librorum Prohibitorum," with which I am acquainted, than this pious work by a Christian father.

Protestantism did nothing to lighten the realm of outer darkness. Rather, by its repudiation of the priest-serving doctrine of Purgatory, it rendered more glaring the contrast between the condition of the saved and that of the non-elect. Calvin asks: "How is it that the fall of Adam involves so many nations, with their infant children, to eternal death without remedy, unless that it so seemed meet to God?" The same holy Christian says of the damned: "Forever harassed with a dreadful tempest, they shall feel themselves torn asunder by an angry God, and transfixed and penetrated by mortal stings, terrified by the thunderbolts of God, and broken by the weight of his hand, so that to sink into any gulf would be more tolerable than to stand for a moment in these terrors."

According to the "Westminster Confession," ch. xxxiii: "The wicked who know not God and obey not the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be cast into eternal torments." And the "Larger Catechism," Art. 29, declares: "The punishments of sin in the world to come are everlasting separation from the comfortable presence of God, and most grievous torments in soul and body, without intermission, in hellfire forever." "They that have done good shall go into life everlasting; and they that have done evil into everlasting fire," is the doctrine of the Book of Common Prayer.

Bishop Jeremy Taylor, the prose poet of the Church of England, says in his discourse on "The Pains of Hell:" "We are amazed at the inhumanity of Phalaris, who roasted men in his brazen bull: this was joy in respect of that fire of Hell which penetrates the very entrails without consuming them." "Husbands shall see their wives, parents shall see their children, tormented before their eyes." Picture it, think of it, Christian, and then give praises to your demon God. The good, really good, bishop tells us the bodies of the damned shall be crowded together in hell like grapes in a wine-press, which press one another till they burst. "Every distinct sense and organ shall be assailed with its own appropriate and most exquisite sufferings." Surely the creed is accursed which led so worthy a man as Taylor to paint with unction this description of the Pains of Hell.

Our own Milton, liberal in theology though he was, adheres to the Biblical idea of—

"Regions of Sorrow! doleful Shades! where Peace
And Rest can never dwell; Hope never comes,
That comes to all: but Torture without End
Still urges, and a fiery Deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd."

Bishop Hall says: "What, oh what, is it to conceive of lying in a fire more intense than nature can kindle, for hundreds, thousands, millions, yea millions of millions of years, which, after all, are only a minute of time compared with eternity?"

Dr. Barrow asserts that "our bodies will be afflicted continually by a sulphurous flame piercing the inmost sinews." Wesley says:

"Eternity and deep despair
On every flame is written there."

Again he says: "From the moment wherein they are plunged into the lake of fire, burning with brimstone, their torments are not only without intermission, but likewise without end."

The sight of the torments of the damned in hell will increase the ecstasy of the saints in heaven. This is the doctrine of St. John, and it has been repeated by orthodox Christian preachers times without number. And, though orthodox Christian preachers dare not preach it now, it is the legitimate outcome of their belief. In heaven the angels see all, and must therefore witness the torments of the damned; and these do not diminish their happiness, though the damned be their own parents or their own children.

Jonathan Edwards, one of the most consistent Christians that ever breathed, devoted a work to the subject. The thirteenth sermon of his "Works" is entitled "The End of the Wicked Contemplated by the Righteous," and is particularly devoted to the illustration of the doctrine that "the sight of hell torments will exalt the happiness of the saints forever." "It will," he continues, "not only make them more sensible of the greatness and freeness of the grace of God in their happiness, but it really makes their happiness the greater, as it will make them more sensible of their own happiness. It will give them a more lively relish of it; it will make them prize it more. When they see others who were of the same nature, and born under the same circumstances, plunged in such misery, and they so distinguished, it will make them the more sensible how happy they are."

In his direful poem on "The Last Day," the once popular Dr. Young makes one of God's victims vainly ask:

"This one, this slender, almost no request:
When I have wept a thousand lives away,
When torment is grown weary of its prey,
When I have ran of anguish'd years in fire
Ten thousand thousands, let me then expire."

The pious Dr. Samuel Hopkins thus displays the divine character and illustrates the loving kindness of the blessed scripture promises: "The smoke of their torment shall ascend up in the sight of the blessed forever and ever, and serve, as a most clear glass before their eyes, to give them a bright and most effective view. The display of the divine character will be most entertaining to all who love God, will give them the highest and most ineffable pleasure. Should the fire of this eternal punishment cease, it would in a great measure obscure the light of heaven and put an end to a great part of the happiness and glory of the blessed."

Contrast with this holy utterance of the pious Christian the burning words of the Atheist poet, James Thomson:

"If any human soul at all
Must die the second death, must fall
Into that gulph of quenchless flame
Which keeps its victims still the same,
Unpurified as unconsumed,
To everlasting torments doomed;
Then I give God my scorn and hate,
And turning back from heaven's gate
(Suppose me got there!), bow, Adieu!
Almighty Devil, damn me too."

Baxter, in his "Saint's Everlasting Rest," declares: "The principal author of hell torments is God himself. As is was no less than God whom the sinner had offended, so it is no less than God who will punish them for their offenses. He has prepared those torments for his enemies. . . . The everlasting flames of hell will not be thought too hot for the rebellious; and when they have burnt there for millions of ages, he will not repent him of the evil which is befallen them."

Was not Shelley right when he described the Christian Go!—

"A vengeful, pitiless, and almighty fiend,
Whose mercy is a nick-name for the rage
Of tameless tigers hungering for blood?"

It would be easy to multiply citations. Spurgeon, among living divines, has preached hell as hot as anybody. But the doctrine is decaying together with real faith in Christianity.

CALIFORNIANS DON'T WANT IT.

At the present time we are again reminded that religious fanatics are awake and active with their Sunday law schemes, and, as the public press is teeming with their plans and purpose, it should also give the other side a hearing and permit open discussion. As an American citizen, who believes that a person's acceptance or rejection of Christianity has nothing to do with his rights and privileges under a purely secular government, I rise to protest against every effort on the part of organized Christianity to enact and establish restrictive Sunday laws. And while uttering this protest I would ask, when and where have the people of California at large ever requested or demanded the enactment of such laws? Every attempt to restrict personal liberty on Sunday is and always was traceable to a few religious fanatics, and we have in our midst to-day one of these busybodies from the East, who is back of all the agitation now going on.

In view of this fact, I am led to ask: Are the people of California so ignorant of their wants and wishes in regard to Sunday laws that they must import eastern fanaticism and puritanism to enlighten them? Do the people of this city wish to see a Connecticut law in force here, that will prevent the running of trains on Sunday between the hours of 9 a. m. and sundown? Do they wish to be debarred from a Sunday trip to the coast and the pleasure of Sunday excursions? Do they want every place of Sunday amusement closed, and the sale of Sunday papers, an open barber's shop or a bakery, made a legal crime, as is the case in Massachusetts? Do they hanker after that enforced "rest" which their religious guardians seem so anxious to confer upon them? In my opinion the answer to all these questions will be a loud and prolonged "No!" from the great majority. The progress of the world has been so great since the sixteenth century that the puritan Sabbath of that era is not a desirable or appropriate thing to resurrect, and the people of the great and growing West rebel against such intolerance as religious fanaticism and bigotry seek to establish. If the people of California felt the need of laws to restrict their personal liberty on Sunday, they would probably make it manifest in various ways; but nothing has been said or known of such needs until the advent of eastern agitators, who come here and prate of our extreme wickedness, and plead with us to enact Sunday laws so eastern people can migrate here with safety and fill our empty tenement houses. What an insult to intelligence it is to be told that dull times and vacant tenements are due to the absence of Sunday laws! And what a jowl that person must have to assert such a thing before persons of common sense.

How hard up the advocates of Sunday laws are for facts and arguments when they deal in such nonsense. It is both a slander and a falsehood to assert or insinuate that crime and wickedness are so prevalent in Los Angeles that eastern people cannot locate here with safety to person and morals, and I wonder that some one has not before now resented this gratuitous insult. California has no need of such people within her borders, and these self-invited advocates of a puritanical Sabbath are wasting wind and efforts in their endeavor to create a demand for laws the people do not want. Here in California we believe in freedom to exist without church control, and desire no union whatever of church and state. History has revealed too much of religious tyranny to make the resurrection of blue laws desirable, and every step in that direction will find wide-awake opposition throughout the state. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" therefore let every man keep it as he sees fit, and those who dislike the freedom which prevails in California will meet with no objections or hindrance if they desire to migrate to Connecticut or Massachusetts, where liberty is considered a crime and restricted accordingly.—C. SEVERANCE, in the Los Angeles Herald.

SONNETS.

GROWTH.

The world grows daily larger to man's gaze,
The infinities retreat before his blows;
He stood at first, trembling in sad amaze,
And fearful of the mists that round him rose,
Believing each a monster full of woe;
When powers of nature less did terrify,
His ignorant fancy peopled earth and sky
With demons, gods, and devils, each a foe
To wretched man; then calmer grown, his eyes
Unsealed dispelled his fears; the threatening show
Of phantoms disappeared; he saw the sun arise,
The sun of knowledge making all men wise;
Now all his tyrants dead, he sits and smiles,
And music breathes far up the world's great aisles.

MUSIC.

Man's first utterance is a cry, his last a groan;
But all between his two eternities
He hears a harmony from unseen skies,
Oft interrupted and in fragments blown
About his jarring life; but every tone
He seizes eagerly, and strives to speak
With voice or instrument; this echo weak
Yet faithful is music called; the soul upflown
Throbs at this reading of the primal law,
The path of motion, life's expressive voice,
Tender as love, stilling to solemn awe,
Cure of sad minds, outlet of mounting joys,
Sweeter than power, brighter than flashing gem,
Man's kindly lullaby and requiem. HERBERT MILLER.

A Secular Funeral.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We have just had the first Secular funeral in this neighborhood. Adolph Muehl died May 25 of consumption, aged 38 years. He leaves a wife and three small children. Though he has been sick for nearly three years, he bore it with patience to the last. He often expressed the wish while living that no minister should officiate at his funeral. There were no prayers rendered, an absence which the Christians present noticed. Judge Robinson, of Davenport, made an appropriate speech at Mr. Muehl's home, and read a fine selection at the grave. Respectfully,
Davenport, Wash. PETER SELDE, JR.

But Dr. Stratton is "Exonerated."

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Stockton "Mail" seems to be one among the very few papers having the moral courage and independence to expose the immoral practices of certain privileged characters known as ministers of the gospel. That paper, in its issue of May 19, gives a graphic account of the Rev. Dr. Stratton's late racket among the females of Mills Seminary. The article referred to would seem almost unfit for publication, were it not that such practices are quite frequent among the reverend doctors of divinity, and that the public has a right to know something of these pious pretenders and self-appointed teachers of public morals. The "Mail's" correspondent asserts that "the inhabitants of the world are divided into three sexes—men, women, and ministers." He might have said "men, women, and drones."

Hardly a day passes but we read of some ministerial scandal or some act of questionable purity committed by these chicken-dinner parasites—these parlor pets and brazen libertines. If this reverend dainty work continues, it will necessitate a special law or a new society for the protection of innocent and unsuspecting females. Ministers, as well as others, should be held responsible for their misdeeds; they should, before entering upon their soul-saving occupation, be required to pay a special tax or high license, and also to give bonds for their good and lawful behavior.

J. C. P.

Turlock, Cal, May 27, 1890.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Bidding Ukiah, with its steeples and creeds, lamp-throwers, Liberals, and all others, a Freethinker's go(0)d be with you and take care of your soul, if there is one found in the final round-up; and with the mercury away up to 100 in the shade, I climbed up beside the driver of a four-horse stage for a thirty three-mile ride over the rocks and mountains to Lakeport, in Lake county. We passed through fine shaded groves, in the darkest of which the driver related a blood-and-thunder incident of a terrible crime committed in his stage a few years ago in that very spot. It was thus: A Mexican in Ukiah fell deeply in love with an American lady of the same place who did not reciprocate his Spanish adoration, and to escape his constant advances she took the stage over this route. But Spanish lovers' eyes, like all other lovers' eyes, are keenly watchful over the adored one. The Mexican saw his fair inamorata depart. He soon hires a fleet-footed horse, takes a shorter route, gets ahead of the slow-going stage, and waits in the sombre gloom of these shaded dells until he hears the stage coming. He then struck his horse a violent blow with his whip, turning him loose to go home, while he rolled himself all over in the deep dust, so when the driver came up he was not recognized. He said his horse had thrown him and nearly killed him, and asked to be taken to the next house. They put him in the stage and started on. The fiend watched his opportunity and shot the girl, killing her instantly, and then shot himself to death. As there were no other passengers, the driver was compelled to go on alone with his ghastly load of love and passion, with blood and brains bespattered everywhere.

He told me that was one lonely ride at least he had taken in these Mendocino mountain wilds. Being somewhat of a believer in Hamlet's ghost, "my father's ghost" (but not in the holy ghost), I rather expected to see the murdered woman's form standing under these wondrous big trees, for it was "a tale that thrilled my bosom through;" but she did not materialize then and there, so an opportunity was lost to prove to FREETHOUGHT that the dead do live. My belief, however, goes on forever. If a man (or woman) dies, he goes right along and attends to business daily.

We rode up this long winding, and at times dark, canyon for fifteen miles until the summit was reached, and we passed into Lake county. Now commenced the break-neck ride down the mountain side on a road where often in making a sharp turn it seemed as if we must go over into the depths below. But the driver was as sober as usual, the horses true as steel. The old coach swung from side to side, crowded as it was, with passengers, all from Frisco; the fire, as we struck some rock in the road with the rattling wheels, often lighting up the shadows of night's fast-falling curtain. Down, down we went almost with lightning speed, until Blue lakes were reached, where we stopped for the indispensable filling up of the inner man, sometimes called for short "grub." These Blue lakes are getting to be a great summer resort for fishing and boating, hunting and flirting, billing and cooing, and such. There are several hotels and many summer cottages built here, for the scenery is perfectly grand. These little mountain-locked lakes, covering a few hundred acres, the water clear and blue as the bending sky above, are nearly two thousand feet above the ocean, while the solid, silent crags and peaks of the embracing, heaven-pointing mountains seem to say to the tired traveler and business man or the worn-out, pale-faced wife and mother from city life, throw away dull care and toil in the tread-mill of life, leave corset and bustle, fashion and creed, mint juleps and cocktails, come up here to the arms, not of Abraham, but these pine-clad hills, and bathe in the elixir of life (not a fountain filled with Jesus's blood), but in the pure agua distilled in the heavens and cradled here in these beautiful lakes. Here one can be natural; far removed from the haunts of man nature rules supreme. The virgin soil, the rocks, formed in the birth agonies of our fire-and-water-made planet, still in the main lie where the great accoucher, Mother Nature, laid them—in her own lap—millions of years ago. Our swift-rolling orb is growing old, but in the wrinkles of her rocky face and depths of her fructifying soil we read the history of all the past.

Supper over, "All aboard for Lakeport!" shouts the driver, and with fresh horses we now turn into Scotch valley. Leaving the enchanting lakes and cozy nooks, we find this new scene a narrow but well-settled valley of most beautiful homes, locked in here by nature's walls of adamantine rocks and forests wild. This is almost another Eden, with its vine-clad hills, fruiting orchards, alfalfa meadows, and hop-fields; but the terrible rains and snows the past winter played sad havoc, sweeping away fences, buildings, and stock, washing down hillsides and burying up little farms with mud and drift. Verily Mother Eve eating that little crab some time ago has made a world of work for sin-cursed mortal in earning his brow by the sweat of his bread. Just think of it, if Eve had not been flattered and beguiled by the nasty snake there would be no fig leaves to-day to hide nature's handiwork. It would be a free show, not even a circus tent in the way to keep the small boy out.

At length the stage rattled down to the side of a much larger body of water, called Clear lake, and we are landed safely in the hotel at Lakeport, county seat of Lake county. Our thirty-three-mile ride since three o'clock P.M. has tired us all out, so we retire to our virtuous couch to sleep the sleep of the righteous and dream that "the world do move." The next day being Sunday, we obeyed strictly the holy injunction of resting from all labor. In the evening I went to the new and beautiful Christian church, with its stained windows, tall steeple, and such, and found the house crowded and a revival of religion with a full head of steam on, with two imported engines (preachers), plenty of flowers, good old-fashioned singing, that would almost convert you of itself. In fact, I think I dropped a tear or two in remembrance of past deeds that I will not mention here—it is not best.

The exercises were very interesting, the sermons able and sound, from their standpoint, and the appeal to sinners by Brother Shelton to come now, ere it was too late, almost caused you to lose your correspondent. I felt the shaft of conviction go through my ungenerate heart, or some of the inside works. I was on the front seat; it was hard to bear, and being so close to the battery, the magnetism—as my friends, the Spiritualists, would say—almost got me; but I did manage to hand the elder a written notice of my lecture next evening at the court house, which he most gracefully read to the audience, and asked them to tell all their friends. The court house was filled to overflowing, and I heard that their church was very slim for an audience that evening. I gave four lectures here to good audiences. As I was putting up notices in the post-office for my last lecture there, the postmaster ordered me to take them down, saying no man who taught Darwinism or that man came from monkeys, could put up notices of his infidel talk in his office. I asked him if he did not know that the church thought so much of Darwin that when he died they buried him under the great Westminster Abbey along with their canons and bishops, saints and popes, an honor that very few could hope to attain to. Again, that Darwin never said man came from monkeys, nor did I say it. I asked him if monkeys were not a higher source to come from than "the dust of the earth" which he believed was man's embryonic condition. He answered by saying he was just as well-read as I was, and that I need not think I could talk him down. I said I did not want to talk him down, but up to the grand scientific truths of evolution, that revealed the fact that his Bible was a fake, that hell had froze over, the devil was a gentleman with no cloven foot, and that his three head-god had no head at all, but was an infinite supremacy of intelligence, matter, and spirit, that doeth all things well, by fixed and unchangeable law called nature's method of procedure. The man was a good Methodist brother, but ironclad with his education in creedism. Oh, for a thousand lecturers to compass the country over and pull down the structures that are in the trail of the priests.

The week I stopped at Lakeport to lecture, I found a home at the Lakeview House. This is a hotel that would be a credit to any city, a fine three-story brick, fronting on the beautiful lake, and kept by J. D. Jourden. In this case "Jordan is an easy road to travel," and every tourist, health seeker, land and home hunter, will not have seen the country unless they stop with Jourden. It is the best house, and best kept of any in this whole mountain country.

Here the tired, dusty traveler is at rest, with a cuisine fit for a king. The house is always full, yet room for "one more." Every Liberal should stop here, for the landlord is radical and Liberal from the outside all the way through. Lakeport is the most beautiful little city I have found in the mountains; but my letter is too long, so I will await until the next.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

The Tualatin Secular Union.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Last Sunday, May 18, my mother and I had the pleasure of visiting the Tualatin Secular Union, organized by Mr. Geo. H. Dawes April 20, at the Kruse school-house, near Wilsonville, Clackamas county, Or., about eight miles from Oswego. We found the Union a very thriving one, consisting of thirty-three members or more, with Mr. A. O. Kruse, president, and Mr. O. P. Sharp, secretary. The meeting was held in the Grange Hall, a pleasant, spacious room occupying the second story of the Kruse school-house. The meeting was well attended.

After some valuable remarks by the president, recitations were given by Miss Viola Barnes, B. F. Barstow, and John Tyler. H. A. Kruse read a very interesting and instructive article concerning the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition. Mr. Kruse is a young man who is much enthused in our Freethought cause, and his energy aids much in promoting the success of their Union. Mr. H. A. Kruse also furnished some beautiful music on the organ, and Miss Beda Sharp, Miss Allie Hayes, and others sang two pretty songs, which were very entertaining and helped to make the meeting a most enjoyable one.

The meeting closed with a discussion. The subject for discussion was: "Resolved, That no sectarian beliefs should be taught in public schools." All who spoke were in favor of the Bible being excluded from our public schools, and gave their reasons for believing that the Bible was not a fit book to be taught in our schools. One gentleman said he thought the Bible to be the worst book ever published—the most immoral, obscene, and disconnected. The speakers all agreed that if parents wished to have the Bible taught to their children, they should have it taught them elsewhere—not in our public schools. The discussion was a very useful one. This subject concerning the Bible in our schools should interest every American citizen. There were quite a number of young people present, and this discussion, no doubt, will help much toward setting them to thinking on the subject of state secularization.

The members of the grange in the Kruse neighborhood are all more or less Liberal, we are told, and they have kindly given the Secular Union the use of their hall for their meetings free of charge, and likewise the use of the organ which is in the hall. The Union is to organize a choir, and has voted to purchase copies of the "Cosmian Hymn Book" and other Liberal song books for the use of the choir.

All combined pleasure with business, and the meeting throughout was sociable, instructive, and enjoyable; and amid pleasant farewells the audience dispersed, with bright hopes for their next meeting. The Union meets every second Sunday at 2 P.M. The subject for discussion at the next meeting is: "Resolved, That Infidelity has been of more benefit to humanity than Christianity."

We are glad this new Union is beginning so hopefully, and sincerely hope it will continue to prosper. Liberals everywhere should form local Unions wherever it is possible to do so. There have been a number of local Unions organized in Oregon during the past year. I wish them all the greatest possible success, and hope new ones will continue to be formed. We Liberals must organize and work together, and support our Freethought papers if we hope to do effective work toward state secularization and mental freedom. Most respectfully, your Freethought friend,

ELVA E. DAVIDSON, Ass't Sec. Or. State Secular Union,
Oswego, Or., May 25.

Obituary.

On Sunday, May 4, death came to our community and claimed for its own one of our most beloved citizens in the person of Charles E. Fry, the youngest member of the former business firm of Fry Brothers. He was a native of Hope, Ind., and 34 years old at the time of his death.

Although pulmonary consumption had for years been preying on his vitality, he never gave up the hope of regaining his health, even to the last. Being entirely free from superstition, he had no fear of death, and could look with calmness toward the future; but the desire to enjoy the things of this life to a good old age was very strong, the result of his generous and affectionate nature manifesting itself towards all those who were fortunate enough to form his friendship.

A Freethinker from his early youth, and fairly versed in the history of Christianity, as well as possessing brain power of a highly intellectual order, he was always "too many" for the numerous "servants of the Lord" sent as special messengers to bring him to see the "error of his ways" and the terrible punishment in store for him if he would reject their proffers of "saving grace" and would not love their heavenly master with his whole heart before it should be too late, the most-zealous even prophesying the ruination of Nipomo should he remain unconverted, and showing no timidity in endeavoring to impress him with the "awful" fact that he must soon stand before the "judgment bar of God." Not even when the dew of death lay heavy upon his brow did they refrain from their oft-repeated attacks; as just before he died, while his devoted brother was absent from his side a few moments, a "good sister" went to him with exhortations to "place his trust in Jesus," etc. Summoning his fast-failing breath, he gasped hoarsely to her to go away and let him alone, which she deemed it expedient to do.

Calmly and peacefully as the falling to sleep of an infant he yielded up his life, and no lines of cruel suffering remained to mar the placid clay.

Lovingly, tenderly laid to rest in the bosom of Mother Earth, and as lovingly mourned and remembered by relatives and friends, he sleeps the tranquil sleep of one who had fulfilled the task of life as far as he was able to do so, having lived an active business life, as well as a useful one in being happy and contributing greatly to the happiness of others.

Farewell, dear friend. We fear not for thy future. No inquisitorial terrors can reach thee now. E. R.

Nipomo, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents. Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bot. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel. BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission. Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc..

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Polsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.

How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer. $1

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Ills.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

An Undesirable Minister.

The Western Watchman says: Recently and at about the same time, the Rev. Geo. M. Sanborne, of Eureka, obtained a divorce from his wife, and Mrs. T. F. Ricks obtained a divorce from her husband. The report has come during the week that Sanborne and Mrs. Ricks were married at Reno on Monday last, and that the Rev. Sanborne had left California and the ministry forever. A family in our midst has been broken up and a brilliant opportunity in the ministry has been forever blighted.

Considering all the circumstances of the case, we cannot find words to express our feelings or portray the public sentiment. It is something like the man of excessive passion and profanity who was driving a wagon loaded with apples or potatoes, or some such freight, up a long hill and when he got up to the top of the hill stopped his team and looked back in the road; he then discovered that near the foot of the hill the tail board had become loosened, and his load was strewn in the road from the bottom to the top of the hill. The man looked at the long line of freight for a while, when he quietly got down and gathered all up without uttering a word. This proceeding seemed so strange to those who knew the man best that they asked him why he had not done some swearing. He replied that "there was no language that could do justice to the case."

This is our fix just now. The "Times" has essayed to administer condemnation and execration upon the man who has thus broken up a family and scandalized his profession and betrayed a large circle of the most loyal of friends, but it cannot reach the case. We might imagine a million Judas Iscariots and Benedict Arnolds, with all their treachery and ingratitude, concentrated into one man, and that man could hardly be expected to betray the steadfast friends who had lifted him up when in direst need. The red-handed assassin, the sneaking midnight thief, even are credited with some sense of gratitude for kindness received, but here is a case that has no mitigation, no shadow of excuse or cause to palliate, but as long as the man Sanborne escapes the unerring, deathdealing bullet of some avenging Nemesis, he must be shunned, loathed, and despised by all, even to the lowest of earth's creatures, his life a reproach upon his profession, and his presence a burden upon the earth.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper. PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sale. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Jaues.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Jaues.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 498 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin, 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation, 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy, 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
 The Moon.....2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology, 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50

- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made referred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 karat Gold, sma 1 size Badge Pin.....2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as re-puted or non-y refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

New Election Law.

The Council of Federated Trades has adopted an election law, based on the provisions of the Australian ballot system, but containing additional safe-guards against fraud that make it reasonably safe and much superior to that now in operation. The law provides that all ballots cast in elections for public officers within this state shall be printed and distributed at public expense. Any convention, which in the meaning of the act, is an organized assemblage of delegates representing a political party that at the last election before such meeting polled at least 3 per cent of the entire vote cast in the division for which the nominations are made, may nominate candidates for public offices to be filled by election within the state. Nominations shall be certified by the chairman and secretary of the convention. A candidate for any office may be nominated otherwise than by a convention, a certificate to the effect that he is the choice of electors to the number of at least 3 per cent of the entire vote cast at the last preceding election in the division in which he runs, and bearing the signatures of that percentage of voters, having the force of an indorsement in convention. Certificates of state candidates shall be filed with the secretary of state; the city and county clerks receive those of nominees for municipal offices. Vacancies may be filled by the convention or by a committee delegated for that purpose. Not less than twenty-five days before an election the secretary of state shall certify to the county clerks the names and descriptions of the candidates, and these shall be published twice in at least two newspapers within the county, in the order in which they will appear on the ballot. Ballots other than those printed by city or county clerks shall not be cast or counted in any election; the legal ballot shall be water-marked in a plain manner, but the design shall be kept secret until the day of election. Tickets for different offices shall not be printed on the same colored paper, and all ballots shall be numbered and bound in stub books. The law relating to the clerks and inspectors does not differ from that now in operation. Tickets for state officers shall not be put in the same box with ballots for municipal officers. Voters shall put a cross after the name of the person for whom they desire to vote. Severe penalties for contravention of the law are provided.

HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ
INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF
THE WALTZ SAFE
Fire and Burglar, of Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.
13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.
Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.
The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.
Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

The Humboldt Library
—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. } Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalle Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Waiuwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. } The Study of Words.
31. } Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. } Geological Sketches.
39. } Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. } The Dawn of History.
45. } C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. } Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. } Illusions.
57. } James Sully.
58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. } Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, I.L.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation
75. } to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin.
76. } The first three are single numbers, the last a double
77. } number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
79. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
82. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
84. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
85. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
86. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
87. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
88. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
89. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
90. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
91. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
 94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
 95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
 96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
 97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
 98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
 99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
 100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
 101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
 102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
 103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
 104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
 105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
 106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
 107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
 108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
 109. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
 110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
 111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
 112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
 113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
 114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
 115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
 116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
 117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Jaing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
 118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
 119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
 120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
 121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
 122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No., 30c.)
 123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
 124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
 125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.
- Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—
EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,
ABOUT THE
Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO
Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,
Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.
OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.
PRICE, $1.50.

A HAND-BOOK
OF
FREETHOUGHT.
By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors. The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures
DR. J. L. YORK,
Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 24.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 14, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Talent pursues the even tenor of its way. It does not grow very fast, but it generally stays. It has survived the hard winter, and the summer prospects are of blue and gold. All along the Rogue River valley the harvests are beginning to appear. A little rain in due season will square the accounts, and the ledger-book of the weather will show considerably on the credit side. As usual, the Secular Pilgrim brought the showers, and they poured abundantly on his devoted head, for no pilgrim in this age of "conveyance," as the wise call it, would ever think of carrying an umbrella, the most mutable of all things in this world of immutability.

My friend Breese is as radical as ever, and proposes to take in the whole universe, seen and unseen, and both worlds at a time, and all worlds. But however transcendental he may become, he never loses sight of the "things that are." He has a level head, although his intellectual wings disport in the "blue empyrean." Mrs. Breese is somewhat of a doubter still after my own fashion, although the phenomena presented are of a somewhat marvelous nature. What makes the phenomena? is still the question, and the "spirits" do not have it all their own way. Even spirits must conform to logic and the rules of human thought, and so as matter is infinite, and the living human mind unmeasured, it seems that the "spiritual world" must take a back seat until the previous question has been definitely settled. We have been roaming over the mysterious, the intangible and the interminable, but return to the same starting-point, and faith and knowledge must continue the everlasting truce.

I arrived in Talent on Thursday morning, and a good day's rest was before me in this happy camping-ground, and I enjoyed it to the utmost. Nature was before my eyes in her beautiful garb, the fruits and flowers were abundant, and genial associates made the passing hours profitable and sparkling. I lectured on Friday evening and Sunday morning, and the old guard was present and many new faces appeared. Our friends Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Terrill visited with us on Thursday evening at Breese's. On Saturday I wended my way to the foothills under Wagner butte, where the snow is still lying white on its shaggy top, and there enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Dean. I was quite entertained with an account of Mr. Dean's religious experience—how he went into the fold, and how he went out of it. He really thought he had committed the unpardonable sin; and when the ministers found out that he had been reading Infidel books, they confirmed him in that belief. It was not until his "big brother" came home with a vigorous dash of Freethought that he recovered his senses and his appetite at the same time, and religion became a thing of the dead past. Dean is a Materialist like myself, but he is a medium and has had some very remarkable tests. Like myself, however, he is content to let science settle the matter, and believes that natural and human causes will be discovered. Deeply interesting, however, are the facts he relates, and one communication which he received from a "spirit" is put into good English, and is a very reasonable essay, considering the standpoint from which it was produced. I have suggested the publication of this, with its attendant history, in FREETHOUGHT, so as to place the phenomena on record for examination. A contribution to "spiritualistic" phenomena by a Materialist might be of service to our good friend Hull in the elucidation of the problem in which every thinker has a perpetual interest.

I find that our staunch Secularist W. Beeson has been reading Bellamy, and, like others, has been fascinated by the glorious dream, and intends, through the philosophy of Freethought, to make it a reality. To my mind, these are signs of progress, for if Nationalism does not represent the best method of co-operation, it does represent a noble ideal of what may be the result of combined human effort. Comrade B. C. Goddard, Hendrik Goddard, and all the family were with us in this campaign. C. K. Klum is at the "old stand," and the flag of Freethought is there also. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Robison, E. K. Anderson, S. Culver, Henry Amerman, J. R. Robison, and others are in the ranks, and "bate no jot of heart or hope." With the mountains looking upon us; the blue sky and vast clouds, like glittering armies, overhead; the spreading valley, with homes of men upon its fruitful bosom; the wild hills, where the sparkling gold is waiting—these, blending with thought and toil, make the days entertaining, and Talent is a delightful spot amidst the journeys of this secular world.

Ashland is still queen city of Southern Oregon, and continues to improve. Since I was here a new hotel has been built, and a fine opera-house is in process of construction, equal in convenience and beauty to any between Portland and San Francisco. Coming into the valley from the Siskiyou mountains, the city presents a most charming aspect, spreading against the hillsides, while green and cultivated fields are lying at its feet. This is the land of fruit. I presume there is no city on the continent within whose limits so much fruit in such variety is raised as in Ashland. Beautiful orchards meet the eye in every direction, and the flower gardens are simply resplendent. I revealed to strawberries all the time I was here, and could ask for no greater blessing. Good old Isaac Walton declared—and I concur—God might have made a better berry than the strawberry; but he never did.

I left Talent Sunday noon, with the showers lowering over the mountains, as usual, to drench our pathway, while the sunshine was glittering with mocking lustre, as if to say, no matter if I do come forth, the predestined rain will come with me. And surely it did. Right in the very splendor of the sunlight the jeweled drops dashed with wild glee into our faces, as if they enjoyed the incongruity of the situation. Notwithstanding the elements, Nellie, the nimble nag, drew Breese and myself in good style up to Granite Hall, where quite a large audience was in readiness to hear the lecture on "The Religious Conspiracy." Our standard-bearer, H. S. Evans, secretary of the Union, acted as chairman. Numerous showers in the afternoon, and perhaps the interest of the election which was to occur on the morrow, made the attendance less in the evening than I expected; but there was gain, although the church bells did ring incessantly. The Ashland Union was organized last fall when Mrs. Krekel was here, and it has continued to flourish. Secretary Evans, President Lucky, Hutchins, McCall, Coolidge, and other strenuous and working Liberals have kept the line moving, and there never was a better promise of success. It would be too bad for the churches to entirely command in a community where advanced thought has such genial surroundings.

Sunday afternoon, after the lecture, Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins entertained me in their cosy home, where, secure from the storm of elements outside, the "inner man" was replenished for the evening work, and the inspirations of good companionship made "the heart beat lighter" to the rhythm of the world that is "growing brighter." Sunday evening and Monday, I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge. After many hard knocks, our friends now take the afternoon of life amidst blooming flowers. Mr. Coolidge has been over almost the whole coast, and traveled thousands of miles on foot, where the white man had scarcely been before, and by pluck has won a fortune. He has never trusted in God, but always in himself. When he first began to till the soil and plant trees, he was looked upon as a kind of crank, for it was not supposed that this valley was fruit producing. He was among the pioneers in developing the resources. He has one of the best orchards and vineyards in the state, and his garden is brilliant with flowers, a picture of harmonious colors. Monday morning we rambled over his well-cultivated acres, and the parsons wonder why it is that the Infidel has made such a magnificent success. He does not pray—he simply works—and that is the secret of it.

It was election day, Monday, and the streets of Ashland were crowded with all sorts of people to settle the destinies of the country. One man in a unique paraphernalia of rags, of almost every color, with a hat of picturesque dilapidation, was haranguing the amused crowd from the rear platform of his wagon, upon what topic I could not distinctly make out, but I believe some one had wired his wheels to prevent locomotion, and hence his emphatic eloquence. He is an inhabitant of the woods, and, I should judge, only came once a year into the domains of civilization on "town-meeting day," as they used to call it in New England, when everybody is expected to put in an appearance whether they vote or not. Election day presents many peculiarities of human nature, and affords a curious study to those who contemplate the stupendous problem of democracy. I am glad to say that some of the subscribers of FREETHOUGHT won the honors of the day, and will do credit to the voice of the people. Dr. Price, Dr. Caldwell, Judge Toland, J. O. Miller, D. High, Thos. Smith, and others are among the many representatives of Freethought in this prosperous community; and with nature rendering such abundant gifts, I don't think there is any fitter place for an "earthly paradise" than right here.

On Monday afternoon, I come down to Central Point, where I meet Will Terrill and go over to Eagle Point ten miles away. The hubbub of the election is just dying out as we arrive, and the judges are busy summing up the returns. It was not, perhaps, the most favorable time for a lecture right after an election, but the hall was full. I guess some of the younger portion came to attend the dance, which was afterwards, until morning, but they gave good attention to the discourse, and perhaps learned something. I left the music and flying feet, and retired to Pioneer Hotel, where I had a good sleep until morning. The proprietor of the house is a genial gentleman, but an awful Presbyterian. I have not been in a place where they say grace and have family prayers for many a year. I rather enjoyed the "set back" into old familiar theological surroundings. The host rather apologized for the custom, but I told him I had not the slightest objections. I had done the same thing myself, and it really did not disturb the appetite at all. In spite of the religion, I found a most Liberal atmosphere and enjoyed my sojourn in this quiet retreat, where amidst the most lovely scenery and brilliant sunshine and musical winds, I could pen my "News and Notes" with all the jubilant jingle of last week's FREETHOUGHT, where G. E. M. gives his outlook over the vast expanse where postage stamps never fail, and the mucilage sticketh closer than a brother.

I found mine host, Peter Simon;—good scripture name—to be a German, who came over in 1848, and his last wish is now after forty years' absence to visit Fatherland, and then he says he is ready for the other side of Jordan. But just now he had rather take in the Fatherland than heaven, and I believe he would have a better time over there than he would among the harp-players.

Among the first Freethinkers that I struck here was W. W. French and his son, and they are certainly those who can be counted on every time. I was glad, also, to meet Comrade Newman and his family, all in the front ranks, and the littlest one, three years old, takes pride in calling himself Robert Ingersoll. Jos. Friar, T. E. Nichols, Postmaster Flora, S. A. Carleton, and others are among the friends at this point, which, though out among the hills, is one of the most lovely places for the pioneer Infidel that I have yet found. I lectured on Tuesday evening, and the attendance was larger than on the first night, less of the younger people, but more of the older folks. These were the first lectures of the kind, and the greeting shows that the field for the future is bright.

After the lecture, in the glorious moonlight, I went home with the Terrills of the younger generation—Will and Delbert and Miss Effie and the aunt, Mrs. Bradley—who live on a ranch five miles away at Brownsboro. The boys have been "backing" it during the winter, but the women folks are now helping them out and trying to preserve order. I never got into better Freethought company than with these bright and youthful spirits, who know how to work for this world and delight in making things progressive. Wm. Terrill is schoolmaster just now, and the others run the ranch. No growling is permitted, and everybody do as they are a mind to, and herein lies the paradise that is to be.

Wednesday morning the clouds roll off. Mt. Pitt shines out in luminous splendor. The wild woods and rocks glisten in the sunshine, whose warm radiance bathes the landscape, to where the billowing hills, crested with snow, sink into the shining sky. I bid farewell to my good friends with the intention of some day returning to this picket line, where I have found such animating signals of a forward movement.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

LEGAL SUPERSTITION.

Within the past few days the newspapers have made public a good many instances of superstitious belief in legal power, and abuse of it.

One case is that of the women ball-players arrested in Indiana for disturbing the Sabbath. These women had an unquestionable right to play ball.

About June 7 a party of Belgian glassblowers landed in New York, but having had the foresight to insure themselves work before leaving Belgium, they were forced to take a return steamer back to their native land. If they had reached this country destitute and with no work in view, they would have been admitted. Their exclusion was an act of tyranny totally unjustifiable.

Judge Cooley, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has issued a circular calling for the legal suppression of that class of speculators in railroad tickets known as scalpers. Yet every citizen has a right to buy and sell anything he chooses to make a business of handling, and the scalper's business is as legitimate as that of the railroad companies.

The other day a San Francisco policeman saw a man named Squire Jones emerge from a house suspected of containing a lottery office. As the man was walking away the officer stopped him and proceeded to search his pockets. Jones resisted, as he should have done, and was clubbed into submission. No lottery tickets were discovered, but Jones is in jail on a charge of battery.

The strike of ironmolders in the city affords another illustration of the prevailing belief that one person's business is to be legally supervised by other persons. The moulders had an undoubted right to strike, and the non-union men have an equal right to work in their places; but the quarrels between the two sets of laborers and the police supervision over both, show that the notion of individual freedom has not as yet entered the heads of any concerned.

Here is part of the objects of an organization called "Economists" that lately held a meeting in this city: "First—To rid the country of Chinese coolies. Second—To restrict immigration. Fifth—To make eight hours a legal day's work. Sixth—To make laws to divide the products of labor among those who produce them," etc. This platform shows that its framers have the law superstition strongly developed.

The "Examiner" of last Sunday gives space to a "Citizen" who proposes an ordinance "to prohibit vehicles from being driven with one wheel only on the cartrack!" as though the law could drive a horse in such a way that both wheels of a wagon on a five-foot axletree would run on tracks four feet apart. The average political dupe has about the same faith in law that the religious dupe has in his deity. Each thinks his fetich all-powerful, but still powerless to do wrong.

It is not necessary to mention all these forms of political superstition. We have the labor-law superstition, the prohibition fanaticism, the prevention of vice delusion, the marriage license inquisition, and oath, blasphemy, and Sunday law crusades. It is about time that intelligent people got over the insane belief that majorities possess powers of omniscience, or that the question of human rights is to be voted upon and decided by a numerical superiority of two or three.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, June 15, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Prof. W. S. Bell; subject, "Popular Objections to Freethought."

ARREARAGES.

We have just sent out notices to subscribers whose arrearages in the aggregate amount to more than five hundred dollars. It is very easy for these subscribers to pay this sum, but it will be very hard on FREETHOUGHT to lose it.

SEVERAL men who within the past few weeks became murderers in order to vindicate their honor have been acquitted by San Francisco courts. As a natural result murders of the same kind grow more frequent. Last Monday Michael Conlin shot his wife because she drank liquor. Conlin is a drinker and was intoxicated when he did the shooting, yet he is more than half justified by the press of this city, and the "higher law" is likely to acquit him. All these tragedies spring from the mistake which men make that wives are their property and subject to their will and correction.

THE pope has again emitted his wail. He says:

"The persecution of me and the church in Italy is increasing. Twelve years have I been confined within these walls, and it is only within these last few years that the offenses charged against me have become intensified. While I live I must protest against and expose the blasphemous way in which Italy is treating the Holy See."

There is nothing in this charge of persecution. The Italian government treats the pope as it would any other citizen. It is because they know him to be an impostor and humbug that the people of Italy no longer treat the pope with respect which he does not deserve.

A PATRIOTIC press is rising up to hurl back Minister Hurlbert's statement that General Grant once admitted that England had some institutions of which Americans might well be proud. One Russell Young declares that Grant couldn't have made such an admission because he was "an American of Americans." According to Mr. Young an American of Americans is debarred from telling the truth about any other country, which is very much like being a bigot of bigots.

WHATEVER the ministers may do, the Rev. Dr. Patton, of Princeton, will stand by the old creed. He says: "We cannot eliminate doctrines because we do not like them, nor can we insert new ones ourselves because popular clamor calls for them." Dr. Patton's position is impregnable. If the creed was ever true, it is true now, and not one infant a span long can be saved from the fate to which it consigns him by all the revisers in the world.

THERE is no occasion for surprise at the revelations concerning the rotten work done in the construction of San Francisco's new city hall. Contracts secured through political pulls, and relet and sublet to give all the heelers a job, are usually performed in this way. A city hall well built would never give satisfaction. It must have enough defects and fall down fast enough to keep the favorites in a soft place inspecting repairs.

To what great uses may the laws of our country be put! Last Sunday the female members of two baseball clubs were arrested for playing ball at Danville, Ill., and charged with disturbing the peace. The women had advertised the game, and when it came off two thousand Danvillians were present to be disturbed. The arrest is a great outrage. Women have as good a right to play ball as men, on Sunday or any other day.

THE people of Oakland did themselves great credit by the way they greeted the members of the Turn Vereins of the state last Saturday. These Turners are a valuable class of citizens. They are progressive in politics, Liberal in religion, promoters of education both mental and physical, and pledged as an organization to the total separation of church and state.

VICTOR E. LENNSTRAND, imprisoned in Stockholm, Sweden, for delivering a lecture which the Swedish authorities pronounced blasphemous, was liberated May 2 by a pardon from the king, granted because of ill-health. Two other charges hanging over him may again consign him to jail if the king's court so decides. Lennstrand was suffering from prison fever.

WHILE there are laws against gambling the "first lady of the land" ought not to encourage people to break them, as Mrs. Harrison has done in presenting a plate decorated by herself to a church fair at Washington to be raffled for at one dollar a chance. What makes it worse is the suspicion that the winner will not get his money's worth.

A SILVER bill has finally passed the House of Representatives, the Democrats voting against the bill and the Republicans for it. It seems strange that party affiliations should produce this unanimity on what might be called a purely economic question, but it goes to show that neither party has any large number of independent thinkers and voters.

WHY should the Presbyterians desire to so revise their creed as to make redemption possible to the non-elect? According to the faith delivered to the saints, all mankind are depraved and unworthy of salvation, and if that is so, anything else would be a defeat of justice. If we deserve to be damned, let us be damned.

PETITIONS for the pardon of Moses Harman are being circulated. We have blanks at this office which we will be glad to send to any who can obtain signatures.

OBSERVATIONS.

Dr. D. C. Moore, who was announced to speak before the San Francisco Freethought Society last Sunday evening, did not appear, and what he knows about "Human Progress and Evolution" still remains to be imparted to an expectant world. It is supposed that as the date approached he was stricken with orthodox paralysis, as he notified the secretary that he did not desire his name made public through the advertising columns of the daily press. If such is the case, he is excusable, for nobody lacking the courage of his convictions could feel at home in the Freethought Society. Every man must protect his reputation to the extent of his ability. I have seen some, however, who are careless on that point. For instance, there is Mr. Burgman, the tailor on Fifth street. I carried him a large card last week to hang up in his store to advertise this paper. He said it should be posted in a conspicuous place if he could find room. I inquired if it would not injure his business, and he replied that it might have that effect in the case of some persons; "but then," he added, in his quaint Theosophical way, "if they do not like it they can go to hades."

We therefore had no lecture at the Freethought Society. Mrs. Lindal gave a few remarks, and Mr. George Cummings spoke also. Mr. Schou received the offerings of the people, in return for which he made a speech that was worth all the money he got in his hat. I handed out the cards bearing the programme for the coming month, and, having some left over, distributed them among the congregation of the Rev. Mr. Dowie, who held a meeting in the adjoining hall. I observed that some did not seem pleased with the cards, but tore them into small fragments and scattered them to the four or more winds blowing at the time. I thought of the warning we have received through revelation touching the futility of casting pearls before pork, but said nothing about it for fear of hurting somebody's feelings. As none of the persons mentioned are intelligent enough to read FREETHOUGHT, allusion to the matter here can do no harm. Perhaps, under providence, some of the programmes went where they will do good.

Next Sunday evening Prof. W. S. Bell speaks on "Popular Objections to Freethought."

Four of the days which I am accustomed to devote to the work of preparing FREETHOUGHT for the press have been spent this week in Police Court, No. 2, Lawler, judge. It is a good place to get acquainted with some of the odd features of life in this metropolis of the West, as it is customary to say when speaking of San Francisco. People who never go to the police court cannot know all about human misery. I saw there, in a box about the size of the average potato bin, numerous persons who on the previous evening had stepped aside from the narrow path that led to their domicile. Many wore white bandages to conceal the place where the policeman's club had caressed their brows. Some were not yet sober. The occupants of the box differed as to sex, several being females. One case excited my close attention. A good looking young woman was charged with abstracting forty dollars from the shoe of a young fellow whom she had entertained at her room. The fellow who brought the charge made a shameless confession connected with the alleged theft. It seemed from this confession that for the sake of revenge he was willing to stand in a public place and acknowledge his total depravity. His evidence was diaphanously thin. The young woman was also put upon the stand, and there she told her equally shameless tale. One question put to her I thought might have been omitted. The prosecuting lawyer inquired, "What is your business?" and while every auditor peaked his ears she replied, "I am a woman of the town." The lawyer repeated scornfully, "A woman of the town!" and she answered briefly, "I must live." She was acquitted, I think justly.

Another case, as described by Attorney Mott, involved a citizen in the crime of "allowing a dog, etc., to run at large." He was examined on the dog question, the etcetera portion of the charge not being pressed. This man, whose name was Wagner, conducted his own defense. He had an Irish lady to examine as a witness to the alleged fact that his dog had bitten a little girl. He asked his preparatory questions leading up to the main point; then, standing on tiptoe and shaking his forefinger impressively at the witness, he threw his whole weight into the question, "Madam, did you see that CHILD bite that DOG?" And the frightened woman, knowing what he meant to say, but not noticing how he said it, answered: "Before God, I did, sor."

But that was not the case which interested me. I had been called as a witness in the case of the State versus a man who shall appear in these records as J. Doe Bushrod, a carpenter whose workshop is located in the rear of 838 Howard street. Bushrod made some book cases for the lighthouse stations and was sufficiently unreasonable to hold the goods for his pay. The contractor, a youth I will call Gulliver, had Bushrod arrested for felony embezzlement. Gulliver's father was also in it, and the two together formed the most precious pair of liars I ever came in contact with. The elder Gulliver is a foul-mouthed old reprobate that any decent man would be justified in kicking at sight and hearing. The younger one looks like a sneak-thief. These fellows were witnesses for the prosecution, and the way they perjured themselves would satisfy the inventor of lying that he had not lived in vain. They lied in their complaint, they lied on the stand under oath, they lied to the judge, to their counsel, and to the prosecuting attorney. I was acquainted with the facts from beginning to end, and I cannot recollect that either of these rascals told one material truth throughout the whole examination. The younger man had on the 28th of May, in my presence, agreed to an order on the government for a certain sum of money to be paid for the work, and at his instance I drew the order; and yet the scamp denied repeatedly, while giving his testimony, that he ever saw or authorized such an order, though it was shown to him in court. Again, on the 15th of May in the presence of witnesses he signed a contract to pay a fixed price for the carpenter's work, but when the contract was presented to him in court he repudiated it as a forgery, though the witnesses were there to confront him. Both Gullivers swore that they had paid Bushrod the price agreed upon.

I was myself placed upon the stand, and by telling the truth contradicted the Gullivers on every point. Slate's Attorney Mott conducted the prosecution, and stubbornly, it seemed to me, refused to recognize the discrepancies in the witnesses' testimony, while anything that I could say totally failed to recommend itself to his confidence. Printer Browne and Bushrod himself told my story over again. There was exact harmony between the three of us even on points where our memories had not been refreshed by a previous comparison of notes. It was a beautiful illustration of the way facts fit one another. Yet it took the court four days to get so far as to release the prisoner on his own recognizance.

I do not like to see a matter left in doubt when the facts are capable of proof. Now here is a case where two witnesses are contradicted by five—that is, by themselves and three others—to say nothing about the everlasting truth being against them. Somebody has committed perjury. If the Gullivers told the truth, I am a guilty party, and ought to be in San Quentin. If I told the truth, the Gullivers should be taken into custody.

It is easy to see from things that transpired during these four days what a difficult contract a police judge undertakes when he promises to administer justice. Judge Lawler shows much sagacity in sifting evidence and rendering decisions. He has the judicial and magisterial pose to perfection, but can change it readily for any demeanor he regards as appropriate to the case. When the long-winded and blustering attorney is stuffing the court with preposterous arguments, the judge twists his moustache carelessly, gazes at the spouter in the most unconcerned way, and ejects tobacco juice without the slightest attempt at concealment. If the matter presented be relevant, he listens closely and respectfully. The important points in testimony he often requires the witness to repeat or the stenographer to read. Toward a hesitating witness he presents the reassuring aspect, and his face glows with benignity. His patience is enduring, and has the peculiarity that its end is foreshadowed by a smile and nod, whereat the tedious bloviator before him subsides if he be wise.

Prosecuting Attorney Mott's office is hardly less wearing than that of the judge. No matter how weak a case the complainant has, Mr. Mott must make something out of it. I could imagine when he was examining Mr. Browne and myself that his face wore an appealing look, as if beseeching us to say something that would help the prosecution. Once he had me involved in an apparent contradiction, and his countenance lighted as he rose to his feet to demand the explanation. The next answer cleared the matter and he sat quietly and wearily down.

Judge Sawyer, counsel for the defense, is in the evening twilight of life, though still vigorous as a pleader, and retaining the faculty of condensing and presenting a case with the strong features in the foreground. When in the possession of his full physical powers I should prefer to have him talk about some other person than myself, especially if his remarks were uncomplimentary. He scorched the Gullivers as with a red-hot iron, and he has my gratitude for that.

A queer official in this police court who should not be overlooked is the bailiff with a green shade over his left eye. It is his business to keep order, and it is probably due solely to his zeal that he makes more disturbance than he quiets. His frown is terrible, and I was glad not to be in the place of the young man beside me who dropped asleep and awoke in surprise to find the bailiff twisting his ear and glaring down upon him with that solitary eye.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

No trace has yet been discovered of Samuel Dunn, the missing engineer, to whose carelessness is attributed the Webster-street disaster on the narrow gauge railroad, May 30. No one has yet been found who is willing to swear to a complaint against the engineer, accusing him of manslaughter, and it is probable that if Dunn should surrender nothing would be done to him.

The Christian church at Fortuna in Humboldt county was burned by an incendiary June 8.—The total rainfall at Boulder Creek for the past season is given at 124 inches, something over ten feet.—Two doctors of Reno, Nev., have just set the broken neck of Charles Ferrel, who was injured by falling from a buggy, and the man is all right.—Buckley, the Democratic boss of San Francisco, is now in the East. He is spoken of as a possible leader of Tammany Hall, New York.—Dr. Burtzell, the priest who supported Dr. McGlynn, is under censure of the Catholic authorities of Rome. Some time ago he was removed from his office of defender of the marriage tie.

The Rev. J. C. Carter, editor of the "Methodist Advocate" at Chattanooga, Tenn., is defendant in a church trial. The bill of complaint alleges that "while attending a district conference at Pleasant Grove church, Marion county, in June, 1887, and while walking in company with Mary Ann Ramsey, now known as Mary Ann Nelson, after the close of the night service, put his arms around her, embraced her, expressed great admiration and affection for her and solicited her to permit him to visit her in her room." It is further alleged in this specification that the Nelson woman accepted his proposition, and that he left his room late at night and visited her room. The trial is now on.—Some Washington women, under the leadership of Miss Susan B. Anthony, have formed an organization called the "Wimodaughsis." The object of the society is to educate women in political science, art, literature, and physical culture.—Miss Gwendoline Caldwell, the founder of the Catholic University at Washington, who went to Paris a while ago to marry Prince Murat, has returned a maid. The price of the prince was higher than she was willing to pay.—Some women who played ball at Danville, Ind., last Sunday were arrested for disturbing the peace.—The Rev. Mr. Boyd is defendant in a libel suit at Newark, N. J., having cast aspersions upon the birth of John D. Peddie, whose father founded the Peddie Memorial church, where Mr. Boyd preaches.

A Buddhist conference is soon to be held in Paris. Many Europeans are followers of the Buddhist fad.—While a religious procession was in progress on June 5 at San Jose, Costa Rica, a platform fell, killing four persons.—A woman has carried off the honors of Cambridge University, England.

JESUS AS GOD.

If we accept the alleged miracles of Jesus, difficulties still confront us. We may admit that he walked upon the sea; that he healed Peter's mother-in-law of a great fever; that he fed five thousand hungry people with five loaves and two fishes, and that more fragments were taken up after the repast than would have reconstituted the loaves and fishes several times over; that he cured somebody of leprosy; made the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and the blind to see; and then we may ask how it was that a being who was capable of performing such wonders impressed his own disciples so little that in the hour of trouble they all forsook him and fled (Mark xiv, 50)? It was just as though he were some poor charlatan, who had no moral hold on his followers. If Jesus were God, it is strange that, when he encountered the devil, who asked him for proof of his divinity, he allowed his distinguished critic to go away unconvinced? Strange, too, that, when Jesus came to die, he prayed, "Oh, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me" (Mat. xxvi, 39). If Jesus were God, he must have known that to let the cup pass was at one stroke to send the whole of mankind to eternal perdition. Moreover, he surely knew his own mind, and was not likely, by a prayer to himself, to change his own immutable will. But all these difficulties shrink to comparatively small proportions beside that which is involved in his exclamation in the last agony of all, as he hung stretched upon the cross: "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?"—"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" If Jesus were God, in what sense could it be that he had forsaken himself? If he had come to die, to save the world, was this extraordinary utterance indicative of grief at having to undergo such a trying ordeal? Besides, as God, Jesus must have known that he could not die—that an eternal being could not pass through the agony of death; or, at worst, that, if he died, his invisible spirit possessed the power at any moment to resurrect his visible body, and thus triumph over his persecutors and murderers. The gospels offer no explanation of these enigmas. The clergy are profuse with apologies; but they have no satisfactory answer to such heretical questions.—From The Bible and Evolution, by Arthur B. Moss.

"CHURCH TAXATION."

Our pamphlet on "Church Taxation" has, to use a familiar expression, "just boomed." The first edition of a thousand was exhausted long before our own members at the x-y-z end of the alphabet were supplied. Strangers—Liberals and Illiberals—have written for a copy; and having read, have written for more. Blue Presbyterians have nearly tumbled over themselves to praise it to us, even if they do as quickly bob up to their old prim attitude at the mention of secularizing the public schools. However, we are preparing a neat little tract for these last, which we hope to issue in midsummer—if—if—if our friends will please help us out financially.

For, with it all, the receipts for these pamphlets have not been as enormous as they should have been. Our little scheme for raising money by charging a nominal sum for them has not been a success. Some eight hundred and fifty of the thousand have been given away free, for we have not gone into the publishing business yet. And, as we should probably give away a still larger proportion of the forthcoming second edition, we have concluded to say so, and to print on the cover "For free distribution." We trust that our friends will, therefore, see the need of furnishing the wherewithal to help along the "free distribution" of this very effective pamphlet.

Through the generosity of a few of our members we have now in the treasury just about enough to cover last month's deficit, to pay this month's running expenses, and the bill for printing the forthcoming second thousand of "Church Taxation." It is doubtful if we shall have enough left over to pay even for the envelopes and postage necessary to send out this edition.

This second edition has been enlarged by the following addendum by Dr. Westbrook, which explains itself:

After the circulation of an edition of one thousand copies of this pamphlet, an article in favor of the exemption of church property from taxation has appeared in the "Magazine of Christian Literature," and has been copied in "Current Comment and Legal Miscellany," a law magazine published in Philadelphia. The article was written by the Rev. Henry C. Vedder, one of the editors of the "Baptist Examiner."

It is to be regretted that he could not discuss this subject without calling those who differ with him "fanatics and visionaries," and that he should so freely use the words "enthusiasts," "nonsensical," and "absurd," and accuse all who would tax church property in common with other property with "oppressing religion."

I. Mr. Vedder urges that no government taxes all property, and illustrates it by the fact that there are certain articles on the free-list in our tariff schedules; and he thence concludes that churches should be free from tax! This is such a perfect non sequitur that it needs only to be stated to be refuted. A few articles, because we cannot produce them, or for other reasons, are admitted duty free; and therefore church property—bona fide real estate—should not be taxed! The two things have nothing in common, as there is a great difference between tea, which we must import, and real estate, of which the churches generally get the choice corner lots.

II. The writer says no unproductive property should be taxed; that it would be "overburdensome;" and he contends that church property is "essentially unproductive." He at the same time admits that in the province of Quebec from $100,000,000 to $120,000,000 of church property is entirely free from taxation, and that the estimated annual income is $10,000,000.

But is church property unproductive? How about Plymouth church, which, in Mr. Beecher's time, rented its pews for about $50,000 per annum? How about many other churches, the pews of which rent annually for from $5,000 to $50,000? Then, too, the pews in many churches are sold, and the title passes with the estate of the holder, and is estimated as so much money. Besides, the churches tax these pews themselves. The great majority of churches, from a business standpoint, are mere mutual club-houses, kept up for the delectation of rich men and their families. It is common to speak of "how many millions" such, and such churches "represent." These churches would not be "overburdened" by paying just taxes. Ministers are "hired;" and those who can "draw" best get the most salary. But suppose, for the sake of the argument, that churches are essentially unproductive in an economic sense. What then? Houses occupied by their owners produce no income of money. Vacant lots are unproductive. Should these be exempt from taxation? Then look at the millions of acres of "unseated lands," producing not a dime of income. Should these lands be exempt from taxation? But it is said that they pay to hold, because they increase in value. And does not church property increase in value also? But there are cheap houses of worship, like the Friends' meeting-houses and the mission churches. Well, then, the taxes would be low, and could be paid as other expenses are paid.

In some parts of the United States an attempt has been made to compromise this matter of unjust exemption by taxing all churches estimated above a certain value. Of course, this puts a premium upon fraudulent assessments. In the state of Washington no churches are taxed unless they are worth at least $5,000; and the result, as we are informed, is that no churches are estimated at more than $4,000. A similar dishonesty in the assessment of churches prevails in California.

Few, if any, church buildings are exclusively devoted to religious worship. Pews are owned and rented, and are as really individual property as are dwelling-houses which are rented. Concerts are advertised, and a money admission is demanded and received. Oyster suppers and strawberry festivals are held, and refreshments generally are sold. Bazaars are conducted, and quasi-gambling is often practiced at church fairs.

Any church which rents a pew or takes a collection is not strictly a public charity; and it should be required to pay the ordinary tax. Exemption from taxation is a kind of deadheadism, of which honorable men should be ashamed. It is of the same incongruous character as is the custom of full-grown ministers traveling on the half-fare tickets of young children, and expecting a discount on everything they purchase, because they are ministers. Such things have a very stultifying influence upon all concerned. The church is rich, and becoming more and more extravagant; and it ought to pay its way in the matter of taxes.

III. But Mr. Vedder urges that building a church increases the value of adjoining lots, and that, therefore, the church should pay no taxes. Sometimes the price of property advances near the location of a church, but not always. The building of a church sometimes depreciates adjoining property. The ringing of bells, the collection of undesirable people, the holding of meetings every night in the week, make the adjoining lots undesirable. But the erection of a fine private dwelling always increases the price of adjoining lots. Shall we exempt from taxation all who make improvements and thus increase values? The building of a factory or the opening of a mine always advances the price of property for miles around. Shall their enterprising owners be exempt from taxation in consequence?

IV. But the most plausible argument made by Mr. Vedder is that churches promote morality, and that therefore they should be exempt from taxation.

The general influence of the churches, in the main, is good. Some persons, it is true, very much doubt whether certain theological dogmas taught both in Catholic and Protestant churches tend to a true morality. But it is not necessary to discuss this question here and now. It cannot be denied, however, that a large majority of the most atrocious defalcations of the day are committed by church-members, or by those who attend church. The morality of church members, evidently, is not higher than that of the world in general. Church membership gives no credit in bank; and many persons who never attend church are known as models of integrity and uprightness. But it does not follow that, because the influence of the church is in favor of morality, it should not share in bearing the expense of maintaining good government. A pure morality should favor honest taxation. It should not shirk its share of the public burden on the ground that it labors to promote public morality. Many other corporations do the same, and do not ask to be paid for it. Why should not the public press claim exemption from taxation on the ground that it advocates morality, and that its influence tends to elevate the people? Dr. Wayland was right in the opinion that the church has no claim on the state for the incidental moral influence which it may exert.

In the state of Maryland, at the present time, the Jesuits and ultra-orthodox Protestants are working hard to secure a constitutional amendment in favor of church exemption. This will lift the matter out of the reach of ordinary legislation, and will be a serious blow to the cause for which we are working—total separation of church and state. Ten thousand copies of "Church Taxation" ought to be distributed throughout Maryland as soon as possible. It would open the eyes of many now indifferent or opposed to church taxation; and the circulation of this little pamphlet might entirely change the result of the battle and score a victory for us.

A New York friend writes that a copy ought to get into the hands of every member of Congress and of the state legislatures. But, dear friends, these things all cost money; and how can we do the work of the American Secular Union without funds?

Liberals, you have long been anxious to strike an effective blow at the union of church and state, and right here is your chance. Here is a society—the American Secular Union—organized and ready for effective work. It has already made a favorable impression on just the class of allies that we need—the Liberal conservatives. It will shortly lay before the world a book which will show how morality can be taught in the public schools without religious dogma. It has now before the public a tract on "Church Taxation" which is acceptable even to many of extreme orthodox, and which wins converts and causes discussion wherever it goes. It is also preparing a tract on "The Bible in the Public Schools," which we have reason to believe will produce an equally telling effect on conservatives. And yet the very people for whom the American Secular Union is working are starving it out by withholding supplies!

American Secular Unionists, here is an opportunity for practical work in behalf of our cause. We need money for the "Church Taxation" pamphlets, and we need it quickly. Who will help?

IDA C. CRADDOCK, Cor. Sec. A. S. U.

Philadelphia, May 29, 1890.

GOD AS A PERSONALITY.

Face.—"For I have seen God's face" (Genesis xxxii, 30, Deut. xxxi, 18; Jer. xxxi, 10, xvi, 17; Chron. vii, 15.)

Mouth.—"For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it" (Isaiah lviii, 14.)

Eyes.—"I will set mine eyes upon them for evil" (Amos ix, 4, Zac. iv, 10.)

Teeth.—"He hath broken my teeth with gravelstones" (Lam. iii, 16.)

Ears.—"And my cry did enter his ear" (Samuel xxii, 7, 2, Cor. xiii, 20.)

Arms.—"Oh! arms of the Lord" (Jer. xxxii, 21, Isaiah v, 19.)

Hands.—"I took the cup at the Lord's hands, and made all the nations drunk" (Jer. xxv, 11, xxxii, 21, Ezek. xxi, 7, Isaiah li, 22, v, 1.)

Feet.—"And his feet shall stand in that day" (Zac. xiv, 4, Nahum i, 3.)

Wings.—"He shall fly and spread his wings" (Jer. xlix, 22, Psalms xci, 4.)

Feathers.—"He shall cover thee with his feathers" (Psalms xci, 4.)

Hair.—"The hair of his feet" (Isaiah vii, 20.)

Talked.—"The Lord said; The man has become as one us" (Genesis iii, 22.)

The Lord had sons.—"The sons of God saw that the daughters of men were fair" (Genesis vi, 2.)

God had grandchildren.—"The daughters of men had children by the sons of God" (Genesis vi, 4.)

Got weary and rested.—"The Lord rested on the seventh day" (Genesis ii, 2.)

Was a planter.—"The Lord planted a garden" (Genesis ii, 8.)

Was a tailor.—"The Lord made coats of skin" (Genesis iii, 12.)

Was an engraver.—"I will engrave the engravings thereof, saith the Lord" (Zac. iii, 2.)

Was a barber.—"In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor" (Isaiah vii, 20.)

A warrior.—"Saith the Lord, I will appoint the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy" (Jer. xv, 3, Deut. xxxii, 41, Ezek. xvi, 3.)

Bow, quiver, and arrows.—"He hath bent his bow. He has caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins" (Lamentations iii, 12, 13, Chron. xv, 13, Isaiah xxxiv, 6.)

Plurality of Gods.—"Thou shalt not revile the Gods" (Exodus xxii, 28, Gen. i, 26, vi, 2, Job ii, 1.)

Cry and roar.—"The like as the young lion roareth on his prey" (Isaiah xxxi, 4, xlii, 16, Amos i, 2, Joel iii, 16, Hosea, xi, 12.)

Tread and trample.—"I will tread them in anger, and trample in my fury" (Isaiah lxiii, 3.)

A druggist.—"I took the Lord's cup at the Lord's hands and made all the nations drunk" (Jer. xxv, 11.)

Fierce anger.—"The Lord slew seventy thousand men because David numbered the people" (2 Samuel xxiv, 15, 2 Chron. xviii, 22, Prov. xv, 11, Isaiah xliii, 9, iii, 42, Lamentations ii, 4.)

God's vengeance.—"In the days of God's vengeance the streams shall be turned into pitch, the dust into brimstone, and the land shall become burning pitch" (Isaiah xxxiv, 8, 9, 1 Kings xxii, 22, Samuel xviii, 10.)

The Lord swears.—"I swear by myself" (Jer. xxii, 5.)

Fierce anger.—"And the peaceable habitations are cut down because of the fierce anger of the Lord" (Jer. xxv, 31, xlii, 27, li, 27, Lamentations xii, 4, ii, 6, v, 11, Ezek. ix, 6, ix, 10.)

Furious.—"I will gather you in my anger, and in my fury melt you" (Ezek. xxii, 20, xxv, 15, xxxviii, 22, Hosea, xiii, 7, xiii, 8, Jonah ii, 2, ii, 10, Zach. ix, 14, xiv, 3, Malakai i, 4, ii, 3.)

The Lord's furnace.—"The Lord whose fire is in Zion, and whose furnace is in Jerusalem" (Isaiah xxxi, 9.)

Images.—"You shall make of your emeralds images, and images of your mice, and give glory to the God of Israel" (1 Samuel vi, 4, vi, 5, vi, 11, Judges xv, 15.)

Human sacrifices.—"And did according to the vow we had made, and it was custom in Israel" (Judges xi, 39). "I will offer it up for a burnt offering" (Judges xi, 29, 30, 31).—Agnostic Journal.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Grey's River	June 11 to 18	Baker City	July 27, 28, 29
Portland	June 22	Union	July 30
Cascades, Wash.	June 24, 25	New Bridge	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Fossil, Or.	June 29	Summerville	Aug. 5, 6, 7
Lost Valley	July 1	Dayton	Aug. 10, 11
Wagner	July 2, 3, 4	Rosalia	Aug. 13
Mitchell	July 5, 6	Plaza	Aug. 14
Prineville and vicinity	July 8 to 16	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
Monument	July 18	Spokane Falls	Aug. 17
Hamilton	July 19	Davenport	Aug. 18, 19
Fox	July 20, 21, 22	Buckley	Aug. 21, 22, 23
John Day	July 24	Tacoma	Aug. 25
Prairie City	July 25	Port Townsend	Aug. 31

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XIII.

ENTITLED JUSTIFICATION.

The City of Justification.—Dissension in the City.—Simon prepares to cross the Moat.—Simon discovered amongst the Yellow Metal.

1. And in the valley of superstition was a certain city called the city of Justification, the foundations whereof were a certain offensive substance called Presumption.

2. And the walls of the city were built of a very light sand called Assumption, and this sand called Assumption was of the purest of its kind, and it was bound together by brazen girths, called Assertions, and some of these girths were very strong.

3. But the sand was light and was continually being blown away, and the guides and the men of the city, thinking to keep it in its place, had taken great abundance of the ropes called Sophistries, and had fastened to the ends of the ropes some of the stones called Arguments, and others called Facts, and had slung the ropes over the walls to keep down the sand.

4. But the stones called Arguments and Facts did no good but rather harm to the walls, for they ground away the sand on every side, so that it was blown away more than before. And the people were compelled to bring more sand continually. Yea, verily.

5. Day by day did they laboriously bring more and more sand, and girth it with the brazen Assertions, with infinite and increasing pains, and sang joyful hosannas over every basketful; and even while they were yet rejoicing together and saying to each other, This is a sufficient, behold it was all gone and more with it.

6. And round about the city was a very thick and muddy moat. And the guides swore by the hour that this moat, the name whereof was Mystery, could not be fathomed, though the line was never so long. But as was their wont, they lied hideously, for the bottom was easy to be seen, and was of a yellow metal.

7. And over the moat, leading to the gate, was a bridge called Works, and a boat called Belief. And the bridge was made of filthy rags, and the boat of whales' throattles cemented together by mothers-milk.

8. And the moat was full of all manner of unspeakable rottenness, and the pilgrims passing over by the bridge, and by the boat, were continually falling in, and without doubt would have been drowned, but that their heads were light and caused them to float, even as an empty bladder causeth a man to float.

9. And Simon, after he was unspitted from off the claws of the Imp, did pursue his way through the valley of Superstition, and wallowed greedily in the gutter.

10. And the whole valley was full of dead men's bones, even the bones of such as were killed in the ceaseless wars of the Beast and his servants; for they were continually fighting with such as refused to go by their roadway, and persecuting them with all manner of persecution and torment.

11. For the Beast was arrogant, and full of malice, haughty beyond measure, and filled to the very brim with intolerance; and the guides, his servants, were like unto him, and they were stirring up strife perpetually, and inciting contention.

12. And not only did they persecute such as refused to go by their roadway, but they that entered the city of Conversion by one gate, persecuted those that entered by the others; and the guides stirred up the enmity of the pilgrims against each other, and set them by the ears, and made them slay and destroy each other by myriads.

13. Yea, they burnt each other alive, and charitably slit each other's throats, and sang innumerable hosannas to their King whilst they did it.

14. But their power for evil was decreasing day by day, and the power of the Giants was increasing.

15. Yea, day by day did the Giants gather strength, and did encroach upon the territory of the Beast and of his servants, and cast down their strongholds and bulwarks.

16. And the Beast was no longer able to persecute as was his wont.

17. And Simon pursued his journey and came to the city, even the city of Justification, and stood on the edge of the moat.

18. And there came out to him two woefully mildewed men, ancient and hoary of aspect, and the name of one was Paul and of the other James.

19. And Paul desired Simon to pass over by means of the boat, and the other desired him to come over by the bridge.

20. And Simon knew not what to do, and did it not. And the mildewed men drew near and gobbled vehemently, and promised that Simon should have his share in the cauldron of fire except he came over the moat, the one saying by the boat and the other by the bridge.

21. And Simon gaped amain.

22. And some came with the nets of dust, and others with the baskets of brimstone and fire,* and they fell upon Simon like famished wolves, and they with the smoke censers assisted in the fray, and the hag Credulity came up, and laid on gloriously with her staff, and beat him on the head and immolated the crawlers.

23. And they all laid on heartily, and brought down the nets of dust upon him like flails, and poured out the baskets of brimstone and fire upon him with untiring benevolence, and of the censer smoke they made swaddling clothes, and swathed him withal.

24. And there was the noise of a mighty clapper-clawing, and of a hideous uproar, and the earth rang again with the noise and clamor; and the air shook with affright; and the mountains could no longer retain their shape, but melted away, even as butter melteth in the sun, and spread themselves out on the plains; and the rocks, leaping into the air, were pulverized with fear, and fell down in showers of sand; and the trees shed their moisture in a full stream, and dried up, and became rotten in an hour.

25. And Simon made unutterable haste and put one foot upon the bridge and the other in the boat, and the mildewed men tugged away unmercifully, and the others grew fiercer and fiercer, and laid on mighty thwacks, and dealt out thumpings unsparingly.

26. And suddenly there was an horrified crashing heard, and an appalling rending of rags, and Simon's foot went through the bridge and tore away the lashings thereof, and he fell down into the boat.

27. Now the boat-builders had not reckoned upon so great a strain, and Simon's foot went through the boat also, as it had done the bridge.

28. And when Simon saw it he drew it back with so vehement a tug that the other foot went through also, and when he drew that back the other went through a second time; then did he draw both out together, and fell down.

29. And as he fell, one of the whale's throattles, of which the boat was built, opened its mouth, for it must needs laugh or perish, and Simon fell into the mouth, and slid down to a very great depth, even as an arrow shooteth from the bow, so did he shoot down the whale's throttle.

30. And when the guides saw that Simon was gone they were astonished and dismayed, and gathered a great company together and held a council.

31. And one of them whose name was Godlyguts said, I will go in after him; so he went him, and one whose name was Gospelsides held him by one of his feet lest he should fall in and disappear like unto Simon; and when Godlyguts could not find Simon, Gospelsides said, Let some one hold my foot, and I will go in after Godlyguts, and perchance he will find him.

32. So Gospelsides went in after Godlyguts, holding him by his foot, and one whose name was Fiddlemug held Gospelsides by the foot.

33. And Fiddlemug went in and Swallowmuch held him.

34. And Swallowmuch went in, and Swallowmore held him.

35. And Swallowmore went in, and Swallowanything held him.

36. And Swallowanything went in, and Swalloweverything held him.

37. And many more went in to the number of threescore, and twenty, and seven, and upwards, each holding by the foot the one who went before him, and being himself held by the one that was behind.

38. And they all went in, yea verily, they all went in. Selah.

39. And what they did, and how they fared, and the mighty

* See chapter vi, verse 14.

deeds they performed, and the summers the swallows made there, behold, is it not written in the book of the omnivorous prophet Lunaticums Neveradoubt?

40. Go and look. Selah.

41. And the sun journeyed to and fro in the heavens, as was his custom in those days, and sang resonant madrigals when the weather did permit him.

42. And the wicked moon jiggered behind the hills, and stayed out anights; and white-robed winter pursued the yellow-garbed summer wherever she did went.

43. Season followed season, until spices more than abounded, and seed-time trod on the heels of harvest, and rank-smelling men were abundant; and the ears of corn gathered together in yellow sheaves, and laughed when the sun shone, but when the rain descended they fell on each other's necks and wept.

44. And after this Simon lay at the bottom of the moat, having his hands full of the yellow metal, and the guides saw him and rejoiced.

45. He that hath understanding let him understand. Let him that is able pluck the garlic. Selah.

46. And Godlyguts took a pole having at the end thereof a sharp hook, and he plunged the hook into the southwest corner of Simon, where the fat was, and drew him ashore.

47. And Simon made haste, yea, he made haste very exceedingly, and delivered himself of many reverberant howlings.

48. And Simon sent out messengers and gathered himself together; and when he was duly assembled he took courage and counsel and his hook,* and went into the city.

To be Continued.

PIOUS TRAMPS FROM BIBLE LANDS.

The foreign population in the lower part of New York city, says the "Times," has of late years been increased by the Arabic-speaking element from Lebanon, in Syria. In clannishness and outlandish manners these people resemble the Chinese and what are called the Diego Italians. Nearly all of them are Maronites and in many respects they are inferior to the Chinese and Italians, who do possess a certain amount of self-respect, and are willing to work honestly and work hard for a living.

The Maronites are the followers of Maron, a supposed saint who lived in the fifth century, and they settled in Lebanon in the early part of the eighth century. Later on they recognized the authority of the pope and entered into a formal act of union with Rome. They are, however, allowed to use the Arabic language in their prayers, and married men may join their clergy and still retain their wives. The Jesuits managed to secure a strong hold upon the Maronites. They have a Jesuit college at Antura in the Lebanon, and have so imbued their disciples with Jesuitical doctrines and teachings that all, or nearly all, the Maronites may be said to be lay members of the order founded by Loyola.

The Maronites first began coming to this country ten or twelve years ago in the garb of mendicants, for which profession they have ever since shown a preference. They generally landed in New York at Castle Garden, where they could be recognized by their dress, consisting of a red fez, a short, open jacket, short, baggy, and blue trousers that descended to the calves, leaving the remainder of the legs bare, while their feet were thrust into ill-shaped shoes.

No sooner had these people passed through the gates of Castle Garden and emerged into the city than they at once began to ply their trade of begging. Thrusting a hand under a citizen's nose, they would cross themselves with the other and mutter, "Christian, poor." Such a wretched and forlorn expression of countenance could these people assume that their appeals were generally successful, and at the end of his first day in America the whining Maronite would have added at least $5 to his hoard, while the Irish or German immigrant would be hustling around trying to find work to enable him to earn a dollar.

The immigration regulations were pretty lax then, and these mendicants found no trouble in passing through Castle Garden. They are a hardy people, brought up in the mountains, and are capable of enduring a wonderful amount of fatigue. They belong to the peasantry of the Lebanon, and can go about in summer and winter with bare breasts with impunity. In this they resemble other natives of Lebanon, but the teachings that are instilled into them in childhood seem to encourage their natural laziness; which a sense of self-respect and independence enables their fellow-countrymen, the Druses, Mohammedans, and Greeks, to overcome.

According to their own admissions they are taught by their Jesuit instructors that it is commendable in a man to emulate Jesus Christ in his public life. During Christ's public life for three years, they say, he did not work for himself, and taught that man should not worry about the morrow, and he subsisted on the gifts of kind-hearted people and prayed. What doctrine could be more welcome to people naturally indolent and not endowed by nature with any breadth of intellect? Prayer to them, consisting of the repetitions of certain formulas and crossings, was easy. To live as a parasite on others in this world, and then to enjoy eternal bliss among the angels in heaven as a reward for such a life below, was preferable to the Mohammedan doctrine that the way to paradise lies under the shadow of swords. And so the Maronite takes kindly to this doctrine, as a frog takes to a pond.

Other maxims of scripture are also observed by the Maronites, in so far as they can be made applicable to their trade. Such are: "I will make you fishers of men," "Be cunning as serpents," and "Be ye all things unto all men." The Maronite Arab tramps have their own interpretations of these passages from holy writ, and regulate their conduct accordingly. A misinterpretation of the first two passages by these sanctified tramps can easily be guessed; the third is taken by them to mean that they are at liberty to pretend belief in the faith of anybody of whom they may be expecting favors, and in the presence of their benefactor to denounce his enemies and flatter him. And yet the Maronite tramp is a praying man. Every night before going to sleep he will take out the cloth charm that he wears around his neck, kiss it, and implore all the saints and angels to give him luck.

Sunday in the country is a very profitable day to the Maronite tramps. They flock to the doors of the churches just about noon when services end and the worshipers come out of church with softened feelings, upon which the professional beggar knows how to play. Sometimes the beggar will put on scanty clothes in winter and bare his breast to excite pity.

The headquarters of these Maronite Arabs in New York are in the lower part of Washington and Greenwich streets and the streets that cross those named. Some of their lodging-houses are filthy in the extreme. Many of them pay as low as five cents for a night's lodging, and as many as ten and twelve men and women have been known to sleep on the floor in a single room. Early in the morning the tramps, each equipped with a basket containing rosaries and knickknacks, start out on a tour of begging and peddling. There are a few respectable Arab merchants here, and these are heartily ashamed of their countrymen and countrywomen.

The number of Maronites in this country at present is estimated at 8000.

FREETHOUGHT IN POLITICS.

The disciple of Freethought is the same in politics as in religion. He is for the utmost freedom for all, and the greatest advantage for our entire race. He is the one essential republican; equal rights for all; exclusive privileges for none; each to seek his own happiness, regarding always the same right in others; each to enjoy his own, and use it at his own will; government to suppress crime, secure peace, insure contracts, and prevent undue advantages; to suppress all injurious combinations; to secure all inalienable rights; to guard from all oppression the young and aged, the feeble of mind and body, the sick, insane, and helpless; to discourage all tendency to vice, to encourage virtue and progress; to preserve liberty and the republic; to enforce justice for all; to protect from invasion; to give example to the world.

The disciple of Freethought will forever bring his free mind to the ballot-box ready to support all of these things with his best judgment. He will listen to no pope, bishop, pastor, or master, but votes as a free American for the best interest of mankind, the republic, his state, city, or township, and himself. He will see that no class, sect, persuasion, or denomination of men obtain any undue control of the government for their own purposes to the detriment of the commonwealth. We know well that aristocrats, priests, plutocrats, land-grabbers, corporations, and other combinations are forever eager to seek something for themselves at the public expense; that there is no end to their exactions when once in power, except correction from the outside. They themselves never surrender an advantage. It has to be torn from them. Aristocrats indulged once run to empire and despotism like Russia. There is no limit till resistance tears it down. It has no conscience. Domestic service runs to abject slavery till checked from without. The slave-owner never reforms of his own motion. The priest, once in power, goes on from bad to worse till he is pope and all the same as God. The land-grabber and millionaire are just the same. Give them an inch, and they take a yard, till you have to knock their brains out to make them let go. The politician develops the same tendency. More taxes, more salaries, more offices, more corruption, bribery, and malfeasance, till the people kick and correct.

* What hook?—TRANSLATORS.

Let the people sleep, and we would soon have a czar, a pope, an army of Pinkerton assassins, a Siberia for exiles, an Inquisition for heretics, the republic a failure, and our children born slaves.

Human nature needs all these checks and balances. The virtues themselves become vices when carried a little too far. A sharp, thrifty, enterprising, saving, and scheming man is a good citizen till he becomes rich and runs these virtues into vices. Then he is the usurer, monopolist, oppressor, and general nuisance. We need such men. We should be a very poor people indeed if we had none such. But when they overleap the bounds of virtue and tread the ragged edge of vice we must have laws to check their mad career and save them from themselves. Our Senator Stanford is a fair specimen of virtues become vices by public allowance till his mind has lost sight of all the dividing lines. We did not punish him for lying, so he proceeded to breach of trust. That allowed, embezzlement of millions followed. Then perjury to obtain the Mussel slough lands; bribery of Congress to get the second-mortgage steal; bribery of the legislature, railroad commission, courts, judges, attorneys, all in his way. Then eviction and murder at Mussel slough. Now a false petition in bankruptcy, that he may evade his debts and keep $50,000,000 of stolen money. And at last this scheme to loan land-holders money at two per cent, to cover his criminal career with the smoke and dust of a seeming good. It all shows that vice and crime know no moderation and no stopping-place till its career is cut short from the outside.

The Freethought voter is ever ready to check these tendencies in either priest, king, or plutocrat. These men are all of one stamp in effect. Stanford has all the look and aptitude for a most infernal despot, a malignant pope, or an Irish landlord; and he will never amend or turn back till the people stop his mad career. And the republic, with its leniency and respect for wrong, has nursed ten thousand just such snakes as Stanford, and is on the verge of Anarchy and ruin.

Freethought will find the remedy and apply it. It will restore the land to the people, where it belongs, to every babe born in the republic, a fair share of the rental value. It will suppress all trusts and combinations for public robbery. It will insist on the education of children for liberty, for the republic, with no pope presuming to be God, no pastor, and no master. It will demand for woman all that belongs to her as a member of the republic; that all laws be just and equal. It will insist that crime shall be punished in the president as in the beggar; and more, that he knows better. It will secure to labor its just reward in some practical way, and to the whole race all the advantages of science and machinery. It will secure to all the mere comforts of life before any shall decorate their foolish and empty heads with diamonds and feathers bought with the price of flesh and blood and human misery. It will so legislate as to make on earth the nearest possible imitation of the fabled Eden, not for the few only, but for all. It will not, as church religion does, give the joys of earth to a favored few and direct the many to look for a heaven hereafter, but secure for all their just rights here, with an equal chance in the lottery of hereafter also. H. L. KNIGHT.

BOOK NOTICES.

THE two best papers published in New York: "The Truth Seeker" and the "Twentieth Century."

Arthur B. Moss, of London, has sent us for review his latest work, "The Bible and Evolution." It is a book of 128 pages, gotten up in the best manner mechanically, and filled from cover to cover with instructive and entertaining matter. We shall take the liberty to publish occasional extracts from the work, which is one of the best of its kind.

A most able work is C. L. Abbott's "Evolution: True or False?" a 54-page pamphlet published by J. D. Shaw, Waco, Texas. Mr. Abbott has given the facts and arguments in the case of Evolution versus Creation, and renders the verdict for evolution in the words of the leading scientists of the world. The price of the pamphlet is 25 cents.

A new edition of "The Bible: Whence and What," by Dr. R. B. Westbrook, LL.D., president of the American Secular Union, has just been issued by the Lippincotts of Philadelphia. The work has now been before the public eight years and is still in demand, necessitating this the third edition. The author rejects the Bible as infallibly inspired, but announces his belief in God; a future life, and future rewards and punishments. His retention of these doctrines after having rejected their source is doubtless achieved by what Prof. John Fiske defines as a supreme act of faith. $1.

We have received the "Constitution and Laws" of the Assembly of Progress formed this year at Los Angeles. The objects of the order are of a fraternal and benevolent character. Article X. of the Constitution reads as follows:

Prayers or invocations to any assumed deity, or religious observances or religious ceremonies of any kind or character in the order, are hereby positively forbidden in the Grand and subordinate assemblies; and this section shall not be altered or amended so as to destroy its objects, purpose, or meaning.

The names of J. M. Voss, Charles French, J. E. Clark, and C. Severance among the officers of the order leave no doubt as to the origin of the above judicious Article.

David Whitmer, who died at Richmond, Ray county, Mo., January 25, 1888, had in his possession one of the most interesting and valuable manuscripts in the world, the original manuscript of the "Book of Mormon." Some time before his death the Salt Lake hierarchy, through Orson Pratt and others, offered Mr. Whitmer $100,000 for his treasure, which he promptly refused. It is believed that $500,000 would have been given by the interested parties, but the owner told them that "all the gold in the world would not tempt him to part with it." The table upon which it was written, an invaluable relic of itself, is now the property of George Schweich, of Richmond. J. D., a son of David Whitmer, has custody of the manuscript.

Recently the "Twentieth Century" began to publish weekly a series of articles, among which are the following: "Why I am a Protectionist," by Van Buren Denslow; "Why I am a Free-Trader," by Prof. W. G. Sumner; "Why I am a Single Taxer," by Wm. Lloyd Garrison; "Why I am a Socialist," by Laurence Gronland; "Why I am a Nationalist," by Burnette G. Haskell; "Why I am a Communist," by John Most; "Why I am an Anarchist," by Benj. R. Tucker; "Why I am an Individualist," by Frank Q. Stuart; "Why I am an Opportunist," by J. W. Sullivan. The "Twentieth Century" offers these eight numbers to readers of FREETHOUGHT for 25 cents. Address Twentieth Century Publishing Company, 4 Warren st., New York, N. Y.

THERE is no shrewder advertiser in the world than George W. Childs of the Philadelphia Ledger. He is something of a Barnum, with the difference that while Barnum advertises a circus, Childs advertises himself. His latest advertising dodge is an undersized book entitled "Recollections of General Grant." It is a work of 104 small pages, sixty-six of which are about evenly divided between Grant and Childs; the thirty-eight others mention Grant incidentally, while Childs appears a dozen times on every page. Childs will be remembered as the pious editor who never permits any allusion to Colonel Ingersoll to appear in his paper. His book has no literary merit whatever, and no object except to advertise G. W. Childs at the expense of General Grant and a few other eminent men toward whom his wealth enabled Childs to occupy the position of flunkey.

"Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion" is another attempt to apologize and find a place for the ignorance of mankind which has been called the religious nature. Gabriel Z. Wacht is responsible for it. Mr. Wacht's booklet is a work of something more than one hundred pages, very neatly printed and bound by the Pacific Union Publishing Company. "Briefly stated," says the author, "the object of this catechism is to explain how every human desire or want can become fully and satisfactorily supplied." Following are the closing questions and answers in the book:

Q.—What is the full name and present address of the author of this catechism? A.—Gabriel Zacharias Wacht, 12 Laskie st., San Francisco, California.

Q.—When and where was he born? A.—In the city of Norkoping, in Sweden, the 24th of March, 1833.

Q.—What time is it now? A.—Nine o'clock A.M., May 26, 1890.

A question and answer as to the price of the work would have enabled us to give all further necessary information about the catechism.

Mrs. Waisbrooker's Work.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just returned from a two months' trip in Washington, lecturing, selling books, etc., according to my ability. There are many Liberals in Washington, but the number of church buildings going up shows the activity of the church leaders.

At eighteen mills upon the dollar, the government, state and national, gave the church organizations in the form of remitted taxes, $25,000,000 during the past year; and that sum expended upon the building of churches, places of worship, is sufficient for the erection of twenty-five hundred at a cost of $10,000 each, and still injustice continues.

I say the church leaders are busy, and it is the leaders, those whose place and power depend upon the perpetuation and prosperity of church organizations, who are the active perpetrators of much of the wrong done in the name of and as the natural result of the special claims of Christianity.

Did the members of churches, as a whole, really see into what their leaders are taking them, did they really understand one-half the duplicity, the underhand trickery that is practiced, one-half of them would leave the church at once, or would, at least, reject those who so misrepresented in action that which they advocate in theory.

In proof of this, I will relate, as it was told to me, the course taken by the pastor of the Presbyterian church, at Puyallup, Washington, and the prompt action of his church when they learned the fact.

A Liberal lady, at least she was not a church member, was named for the post-office. A saloon keeper said that she had been heard to express great admiration for Robert Ingersoll; "and our government offices should not be given to such people," he said, and the minister wrote a slanderous letter to the post-office department, thinking, no doubt, that Brother Wanamaker would promptly reject Mrs. D'Arcy, but the letter fell into the hands of Congressman Wilson, the whole matter was made public, Mr. Lackey was deposed from his charge, and the lady got the appointment.

In this instance, the members of the church declined to longer listen to the ministrations of one who was so zealous as to lie for Christ's sake.

I see by a recent FREETHOUGHT, a letter from Mr. Schroeder, of Coos county, Oregon, in which he states that a minister has made a man's private opinion a reason for urging Christians to vote against him. If the professing Christians of that county would take as prompt condemnatory action of his course as did the church in Puyallup, of what their minister did, they would gain more respect for their cause than they could by sustaining him.

And now just a word to Friend Severance. He says no one is under moral obligation to become a martyr.

Who said any one was? What would Mr. Severance think of a mother who toiled and suffered for her children from a sense of obligation instead of from the promptings of a love that never once thought of obligation? Mr. Severance does not in the least seem to understand the feeling that prompts to heroic action in the face of all possible consequences to one's self. He says the country was ripe for action, or words to that effect, before John Brown attacked Harper's Ferry.

Not quite. John Brown's acts, coupled with his mental magnetic force, finished up the ripening, but men had been imprisoned, had died there, had met martyrdom in their efforts for the slave, had been mobbed, rotten-egged, tarred and feathered, etc., to prepare the way which culminated in the destruction of slavery, and other forms of slavery will have their martyrs, and the force that takes them to their fate will come from within, and not from a sense of outward obligation.

I see that the Golden Gate declares the Word ought to be suppressed, thinks you may not be informed as to its character. The question is not what ought to be done, but who shall decide? Shall the one man-power prevail, or shall the civil authorities look into the matter and judge as to the questions at issue?

This continued usurpation of personal authority, personal judgment deciding public matters, would shut the Golden Gate from the mails if the postmaster-general should so choose, and think it wise.

In the case of the Chicago Anarchists, so far as I am able to judge, the police were the only ones who broke the law of the land, previous to the throwing of the bomb. They had no right to disperse a peaceable meeting, no matter what the language used, so far as disaffection, threats, etc., were concerned. If unlawful language was used, it was the work of the civil authorities to arrest and try, but, until there was actual violence, the police had no business to interfere. I am not now making a plea for Mr. Heywood, nor for the Anarchists, but for legally appointed authority against official usurpation. The chief of the police also went to newspaper offices in Chicago, at that time, and drew his blue pencil across what he said should not be published. Who gave Chief Ebersole the right to exercise censorship over the press?

Personal feeling against another's course should not make us blind to such violations of the safe-guards of liberty. LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Was Lillian Mistaken?

To the Editors of Freethought:

If a new edition of Miss Leland's "Around the World" is gotten out, I would advise that the view of Mt. Ararat from Jaffa be expunged. It is over seven hundred miles distant. Travelers don't all see things the same, but none can stretch their vision seven hundred miles. I find much foreign correspondence misleading, some absolutely untrue, especially when writing up protection. I trust our suggestion to Miss Leland will be received in kindly spirit. We having been there, and favored by clear weather and good opportunities, I feel sure that the historical mountain can't be seen. There have been big stories enough told about the holy land, both in the Testament and out of it, by Christians, without Infidels adding any more. Yours, etc., W. F. FREEMAN.

Stockton, Cal.

A MAN down South suspected his wife of being interested in another man, and so he watched her and him. By and by he discovered what he was looking for. He found them together. Then, like a dime novel hero, he bounced into the room and shot them both, and his fellow townsmen applauded him for thus vindicating his honor (?) What a sad and silly performance. If he wanted to retain his wife's love he should have begun to court her just as he did before they were married. And if he could not succeed in winning her love, if she really loved the other man better than she loved him, and the other man loved her, he should have gone away like a gentleman and not interfered any further with what was none of his business. Wouldn't that have been more honorable, better morals, than it was to stain his hands with the blood of two human beings?—Twentieth Century.

SEND your orders for printing to the FREETHOUGHT office. Country orders solicited.

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office-109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heck, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.
Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayés st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.
Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment
Cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.
The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.
Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy, $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer, $1

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina, Ills.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

He'd Had No Show.

Joe Beall 'ud set upon a keg
Down to the grocery store, an' throw
One leg right over t'other leg,
An' swear he'd never had no show.

"Oh, no," said Joe,
"Hain't hed no show."

Then shift his quid to 'tother jaw,
An' chaw, an' chaw, an' chaw, an' chaw.

He said he'd got no start in life,
Didn't get no money from his dad,
The washin' took in by his wife
Earned all the funds he ever had.

"Oh, no," said Joe,
"Hain't hed no show."

An' then he'd look up at the clock,
An' talk, an' talk, an' talk, an' talk.

"I've waited twenty year—let's see—
Yes twenty-four, an' never struck,
Although I've sot roun' patiently,
The fust tarnation streak of luck.

"Oh, no," said Joe,
"Hain't hed no show."

Then stuck like mucilage to the spot,
An' sot, an' sot, an' sot, an' sot.

"I've come down regeler ever' day
For twenty years to Piper's store;
I've sot here in a patient way,
"Say, hain't I, Piper?" Piper swore,
"I tell ye, Joe,

Yer hain't no show;
Yer too dern patient"—ther hull raft
Jest luffed, an' luffed, an' luffed, an luffed.
—S. W. Foss, in Yankee Blade.

Under the Rope.

Wife—What is the news?
Husband—I was just reading about our Minister at Copenhagen.

Wife—Yes, I noticed at the sociable the other night that our minister was very fond of the game.

An Easy Victim.

A young man in corduroy pantaloons, and with the bloom of a foreign country still lingering on his cheek, told the following story at police headquarters recently:

"You see, I was waitin' in a daypot, as you folks call it, down 'ere in a town called Toledo, when a bloomin' young gal comes hup to me hand says:

"'Could I hax a great favor of you, young man?"

"'You could,' says I.

"'Hare you a fighter?' says she.

"'Sunthink of one,' says I, 'aving taken twenty-four lessons in boxin' of the Liverpool Kid, and 'aving put up me dukes along with several good uns.'

"'Then sit beside me, young man, hand protect me from a duffer who is takin' hadvantage of the fact that I ham hall alone 'ere in this daypot,'

"'I'll do it,' says I, 'hand hif he dares to wink at you hagain I'll bust the bloomin' 'ead of himself wide hopen.'

"'Hand I sat. Hand she sat. Hand haf an 'our without no bloomin' duffer showin' hup, I took the train for this town, hand arrived 'ere to find that I 'ad neither watch nor wallet. That bloomin' young gal 'ad despoiled me.'

"Well?"

"Well that's hall, hexcept that I should like to strike a job, and that hereafter the bloomin' young women hof America will not pull wool hover the heyes hof yours truly."

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma , cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY
Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against
LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.

BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

- Letter-heads,
- Bill-heads,
- Programmes,
- Envelopes,
- Business Cards,
- Postal Cards,
- Tickets,
- Placards,
- Receipts,
- Posters,
- Dodgers,
- Circulars,
- Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

- The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."
- The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."
- Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.
- Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.
- What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.
- The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
- Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.
- Ingersoll Catechised: "His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan." 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.
- Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.
- A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.
- Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.
- Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Heave Ho!

Now is the season of the year
When pastors fat begin to fear
Their health is sadly failing;
And so across the briny deep,
With naught to do but eat and sleep,
They'll soon be gayly sailing.

Political Science.

Professor—Are you one of us?
Philanthropist—I am. My branch is Love of our Species. And yours?
Prof.—Advanced Political Economy.
Phil.—I greet you with effusion. You are going to abolish poverty.
Prof.—Right. I begin by abolishing property.
Phil.—I am dumfounded. Will not all then be poor?
Prof.—No; all will then be rich.
Phil.—The thought is profound—abyssal. My brain reels on the brink of it.
Prof.—Lend your brain this staff: Property is not things; property is somebody's things. If everybody take of somebody's things what he himself needs, is he not rich?
Phil.—He is then rich.
Prof.—Therefore let each man take only what he can consume, and he has all he needs, and is rich.
Phil.—But the stock of things will give out.
Prof.—It must be renewed by work.
Phil.—How if a man will not work?
Prof.—Club him.
Phil.—And if that does no good?
Prof.—Club him some more. Keep on clubbing him.

Phil.—What will we professors do?
Prof.—I shall expound the doctrine of the Sanctity of Property.

Phil.—And I?
Prof.—You will expose the Fallacies of Philanthropy. For six thousand years, learned brother, the world has not withheld its support from purveyors of doctrines. It is not going to begin by neglecting us.

Constitutional Loafers.

Of prayers in Congress, the Christian Statesman remarks:
"If the silence of the national Constitution as to religion is to be construed as a deliberate and intentional renunciation of all religion by the American nation, then such prayers, or any prayers, in Congress, or in any state legislature, are an impertinence and an anachronism, and ought to be abolished."

That deduction is perfectly logical, and the logic ought to be turned into a fact. Chaplaincies in Congress, in state legislatures, in the army, etc., are an impertinence and an anachronism. They are a relic of the hierarchal rule of the middle ages, and ought to be abolished. Legally, chaplains are unconstitutional loafers; physically, however, they are strictly constitutional loafers.—American Sentinel.

The Clergyman's Son.

Rev. Mr. Grimes (to Judge Tort)—Yes; and when you have a particularly bad boy before you what is the first question you ask him?
Judge Tort—I ask him, "Where does your father preach?"

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.
Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,
Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
938 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

- The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.
- Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.
- Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.
- Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.
- Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.
- The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.
- Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

FREETHOUGHT, THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Samuel P. Putnam, Lecturer and Editorial Correspondent. | Geo. E. Macdonald, Editor and Business Manager.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

Freethought Publishing Co

This journal is devoted, religiously, to the eradication of all forms of superstition, Christian or otherwise; and politically, to the advocacy of those principles inculcated by the

Nine Demands of Secularism.

FREETHOUGHT is not committed to any of the current methods of social reform, but its columns are open to the discussion of all of them. It welcomes agitation and discussion of all subjects, religious, political, ethical, and social.

Its Correspondents are all who have anything valuable to say on the above questions; who know how to express their thoughts in readable English, and who desire for an audience several thousand of the most intelligent people of the country.

FREETHOUGHT has no set list of contributors of articles written to order. It aims to give the news of the Liberal movement everywhere. It believes that the seeds of Freethought have been planted, and that the great work now before us is to cultivate their growth.

The paper circulates from Florida to Alaska, and from this coast to Maine.

ADVERTISERS

who wish to reach large numbers in all parts of the Pacific Slope will find space in its columns a remunerative investment.

EVERY LIBERAL THINKER

should read FREETHOUGHT. They will find it lively and at the same time in dead earnest; plain and direct, without being offensive.

Subscriptions—One year, $2; Six months $1. Four new subscriptions in one remittance, $5.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Beville on the Conflict between Genesis & Geology
Price, 50 cents.

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; 7 ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness, as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm (large profits, quick sale). SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address: FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

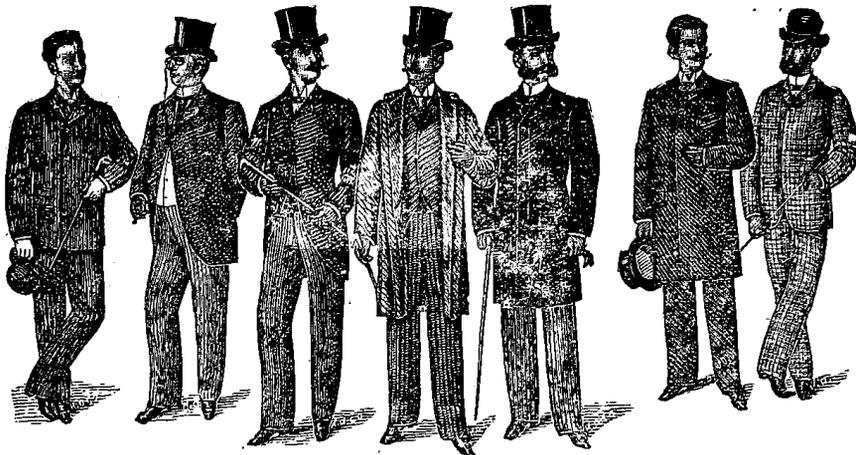

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin, 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation, 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy, 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
 The Moon.....2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology, 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75
- MISCELLANEOUS.
- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology, 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made ferried who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.
 TAILOR,
 —101 FIFTH STREET 101—

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleve. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.
 Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.
 Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
 By W. R. GREG.
 Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
 10 karat Gold, sma' size Badge Pin.....2 0
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
 14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00
- *This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
 Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
P. PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!
 Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY
F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.
 OFFICE:
 429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
 12 mo.; 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

A Profane Senator.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, in charge of Indian schools, is a very dignified old gentleman. He hails from Massachusetts, possesses culture, but is only by degrees acquiring familiarity with the breezy West. The successive surprises which Dr. Dorchester encounters afford his intimate friend, Senator Dawes, much amusement. The latest experience of the doctor relates to a conversation between him and a certain Western Senator. The latter was arguing some Indian school proposition with off-hand earnestness. But the reverend gentleman couldn't see it as the Senator did.

"Why, — it, man," said the Senator, "we must—"

There he was checked. Dr. Dorchester drew himself up with freezing dignity, and in a tone of crushing reproof said:

"What business have you, sir, to utter profanity in my presence?"

The Senator stared at the doctor for a few seconds, and then broke out with:

"— you, sir, if you'd swear once in awhile yourself you'd be a more reasonable man."

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,

Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica, Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all Kidney, Liver, and Stomach Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C.H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, No. 40 O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H. Webb's Hæmony.

- Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S.F.
- Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres. Sather Banking Co. S.F.
- Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
- S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco
- Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S.F.
- John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S.F.
- James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1, Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
- Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed and shipped by Express to all parts of the world. Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells, Fargo & Co.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
7. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
8. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches.
39. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History.
45. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. Illusions.
57. James Sully.
58. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, I.L.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
75. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
76. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
77. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
78. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
79. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
80. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
81. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
82. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
83. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
84. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
85. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
86. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
87. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
88. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
89. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

90. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 20 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
91. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
92. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
93. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
94. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
95. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
96. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
97. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
98. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
99. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
100. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
101. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
102. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haeckel.
103. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
104. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black
105. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
106. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
107. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
108. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
109. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
110. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
111. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
112. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
113. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
114. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Jaing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
115. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
116. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
117. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
118. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
119. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whympfer, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
120. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
121. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
122. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ
INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF
THE WALTZ SAFE
Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HENCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,
Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 25.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 21, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Thursday, June 5, I am on my way in the sunny afternoon to Coburg with uncle John Diamond, who always makes it his especial care to see that the pilgrim is not lost in wide wanderings. Far off over the wooded hills shines Diamond's peak in snowy lustre, and on top of this peak is Uncle John's farm. Nearly forty years ago, the first white man, and first man of all, I guess, Diamond planted his staff upon this mighty pinnacle, and no one has ever yet jumped that claim, and long as the world stands the Diamond on that lofty pyramid of ice will face the summer's sun.

We arrive in Coburg in time for the evening meal at the hospitable home of the Delaneys, who, if they are Christians at all, are Christians after such a fashion as always to give welcome to the unsectarian traveler. It needs the magic of no name to open their hearts to humanity. William Delaney has played his part amidst the scenes of early Oregon, and can shoot the rifle with the best of the hunters of the land. After supper the Hon. E. P. Coleman came to our camping-ground, honorable this time with a fresh lustre, for he has just been elected to the legislature on the Democratic ticket, overcoming in his district a majority of two hundred and fifty on the Republican side. Coleman has always stood by the Freethought colors. By his unflinching maintenance of principle Bible-reading is prohibited in the public school at Coburg. Notwithstanding this, the people, without regard to politics or religion, elected him as an honest man "who would not give up to party what was meant for mankind."

I see J. D. Garfield, of Coos county, has also won in spite of the attacks of ecclesiastical bigots and is a member of the same legislature with Coleman. Freethought has also quite a number of staunch representatives on the Republican side of the house. The Oregon election has been a puzzler to the ordinary politician. Hermann, Republican, for Congress, went in by about nine thousand majority, while Pennoyer, Democrat, for governor, went in by nearly as large a count. This shows that the Oregon voters are a mighty independent set of people, and party lines become obliterated. I don't believe there ever was an election where so many Democrats voted for a Republican and so many Republicans voted for a Democrat. This is a good sign of the times.

I call Mr. Coleman "Hon.," but there is not a man who cares less for titles or office simply as decorations than he does. He is a worker, and the office seeks him because nothing could tempt him to abandon a principle.

The lecture was very well attended. The people of Coburg like to hear both sides of a question, and the Christians generally have come to the conclusion that the Freethinker has something of value to say, and they are willing to listen and candidly judge. Coburg is one of the pleasantest places along the route, not only for its staunch supporters of Secularism, but for the atmosphere of Liberalism among all classes.

I was to lecture on Friday evening, but a school exhibition being on hand and as what pertains to the school is for the advantage of the republic, it was decided to have no lecture, and no diversion on a matter of universal interest.

Therefore, we Liberals—a few of us—decided to have a holiday. A good Friday on our own account. Early in the morning, which was as beautiful as heart could wish, Coleman drove me over to his ranch, to the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. John Long and their bright little daughter, who was born to do good, no matter if grandmother Eve did eat the apple, and give the devil a chance to stir up things. There couldn't be a more lovely place on a hot summer's day than this rural retreat of over three thousand acres of hill and dale and spreading field, where the cattle and the sheep enjoy the glowing hours, and nearly three hundred chickens flutter in gay carnival, and the dog drowzes in the bright shadows, and we sit on the long porch, embowered with trees, upon whose green canopy, from cloudless skies, the sparkling sunshine quivers, and it seems as if jewels were falling at your very feet from the dancing branches. The morning and the afternoon hours roll along, and as every one is left to do exactly as he pleases to do, of course we have a very delightful time, and we can mark the day with a white line as a day to be remembered for simple and absolute enjoyment. It was a sun's day and so it shall be named in the pages of memory.

Coming home in the evening, I drop into the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Murch, and partake of a few delicious cherries such as Oregon takes pride in producing. These friends include the spiritual realm in their philosophy, but they don't forget the heaven that lies round about us here, and are always ready for the duties of this life. We are traveling the same road, be it longer or shorter as the everlasting fates may determine.

P. J. Blakiston, who has sailed the seas with many a storm and sun, spent the evening with us at Delaney's. Comrade Kruse is on the list still. Some have gone away, but are doing good work elsewhere. Coburg looks ahead and bids fair with the country about it to be one of the flourishing places of Oregon.

Saturday morning, I am en route to Brownsville. My friend, John Diamond, goes with me to see that I am properly transferred to this new field of labor. Brownsville is a pretty place and is growing, but the churches do overshadow it tremendously. I lectured Saturday and Sunday. I had small audiences, but I don't feel like giving up Brownsville. It has good material and a few of the best of Liberals. B. S. Martin and his brothers are as true as steel, and not afraid of pioneer work when the "mid-night darkness is turning into gray." His father is a Christian clergyman, but the mother's blood is Liberal from long ancestry, and the seven sons don't follow in the paths of the ancient faith. C. E. Rockwell is another "stand-by" who wouldn't desert the guns even in a Waterloo defeat. D. C. Cushman is also on the list, and J. K. McCormick, who will keep the fires on the outer line. B. F. Fields, lately of Prineville, is now located at this point, and he has the heart and intellect of the true Liberal. McDowell, L. Tyler, W. Standish, Henry Archbald, and others can be counted on. John Cushman was away, but in the ranks a soldier still. We trust to the future. There are six churches in Brownsville, and they are a cordon for the old faith, and the sheep are closely watched. Many Liberals are afraid and indifferent. The flag, however, won't be hauled down. There are enough to furnish ammunition for a longer campaign. There may be occasionally a "flash in the pan," but some shots will tell. Coburg and Brownsville are on for the fall campaign.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

WHAT CATHOLICS ARE EXPECTED TO BELIEVE.

The Roman Catholic "Monitor," a weekly paper published in San Francisco, copies from the "Universe," and indorses as true, a story that would have added to Munchhausen's reputation as a liar. The object of the yarn is to show the miraculous power of the Catholic fetich known as the scapular, which consists of a piece of cloth with the name of the Virgin Mary embroidered upon it. The principal personages in the narrative are one Finnell, a laborer who was cut in two by a railway train, and Priest Conway, now of Painesville, Ohio. This is the account given of the miraculous power of the scapular:

One Saturday, about noon, in June (or possibly July), Finnell's nephew came rushing in hot haste to Father Conway. Finnell had seen a man fall off the construction train; had rushed back to aid—taking the parallel track of the Lake Shore railroad; had been run down by a train; was dying.

The distance to be covered was a good half mile, and Father Conway and his companion made it in their best time. Arrived at the place of the accident, the priest found from thirty to forty men standing around—what shall we say? the remains of poor Finnell on the track. He had been cut in two by the cars. The trunk of the body lay at least eighteen inches from the abdomen and lower limbs.

Father Conway turned to the nephew; "The sacraments are for the living, not for the dead. I can do nothing here." Then, after a mental prayer for the deceased and some words of commiseration, the priest prepared to go, when a by-stander remarked that the doctor was coming, and Father Conway, through an impulse of curiosity, waited as a locomotive came thundering along, bearing Dr. William Ames, a leading practitioner of Ashtabula. [The doctor is since dead; the present Dr. Ames of that city is his son.]

The doctor and the priest had often met at sick calls. Dr. Ames saluted Father Conway; picked up one of the organs of poor Finnell from where it lay detached on the ground, then stooped over, placed his hand on Finnell's breast, and removing from it a scapular of Mt. Carmel, held it up, saying; "Father Conway, what's this?"

The priest cared to make no further explanation under the circumstances than that it was a Catholic article of devotion. And then Dr. Ames, kneeling, placed his ear over Finnell's heart, looked up quickly, and said: "Why, Father Conway, the heart is beating!"

"Impossible, doctor," was Father Conway's instant reply. "That man has been cut into halves for three-quarters of an hour."

The doctor bent and again applied his ear. "Father Conway, the heart is beating."

"Impossible, doctor," was again the involuntary reply of the priest.

D. Ames was a man of great dignity and force of character (though unhappily an Infidel), resented this remark, and answered with some asperity: "I'll count the beats for you, sir. . . . One, two, three, four, five—"

"Enough, doctor," said Father Conway, hastily, "I'll anoint that man."

Instantly all heads were uncovered as Father Conway donned his stole and proceeded to absolve and anoint the dying Finnell.

The heart that was true to Mary had not ceased to beat until that was consummated which every faithful Catholic prays for—the priest and the sacraments at the last moment of life.

It will be noted that the doctor is dead, which removes the only reliable witness to the case. Such is always the fact—none but Catholics are ever on hand to testify to Catholic miracles. But this is a meagre miracle at best. To make the story a good one, the power of the Virgin should have drawn the sundered halves of Finnell together, adjusted the severed bones, ligatures, veins, and arteries, and raised him up a whole man. Then his heart might have continued to beat to some purpose. But this would have involved the sponsor for the story in difficulties. The skeptical would have said to him: "If you have faith in the Virgin to do these things, permit us to place you before a train of cars and let it run across your body. Then your survival will convince us all; and like those in the side of Christ your wounds will testify to the truth of your claim." Here would have been a genuine test, a thing that believers in the supernatural always avoid.

Beyond doubt, nine Catholics out of ten who have read Priest Conway's story believe it, for the reason that they are too ignorant or too superstitious to differentiate the natural from the miraculous. They are like persons who regard the fabric of dreams as a part of the actual occurrences of life, and with thousands of priests devoting themselves to the perpetuation of the delusion, the progress of enlightenment is slow. We hope that the next generation will not be as superstitious as this one.

THE LAND LOAN BILL.

The dispatches sent West by the Associated Press failed to give a clear idea of the actual provisions of the bill introduced in the Senate by Leland Stanford, entitled "A bill to provide for making loans by the government and securing the same by liens upon land." So far as the said provisions have been set forth by the press, the bill limited the issue to one hundred millions of dollars, an amount scarcely sufficient to pay the interest for one year on the mortgages of an average state. We are now in receipt of the bill itself as printed by the government at Washington. Section 4 provides:

"That the treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to be caused to be printed, signed, and ready for issue, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, circulating notes of the United States of the denominations of five dollars, ten dollars, twenty dollars, fifty dollars, one hundred dollars, five hundred dollars, and one thousand dollars, to the amount of one hundred million of dollars, and such additional amounts from time to time as shall be necessary to meet the requirements of this act."

Admitting the practicability of the scheme, the clause above italicized makes it adequate to the purpose for which it is drawn. If the treasurer will issue such additional amounts from time to time as shall be necessary to free farmers from the burden of high-interest mortgages, which is the chief requirement of the act, nothing more can be asked.

But why is not our senator in Washington pushing his bill? While he is enjoying himself in Europe, the interest on mortgages is piling up at the rate of millions per day.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, June 22, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Mr. John M. Days; subject, "The Eight Hour Question."

THE Hon. Joseph E. Washington, a representative to Congress from Tennessee, appears to be an Hon. Jackass. The constitution of Tennessee excludes from public offices all men who deny "God or a future state of rewards and punishments," and in discussing the subject with an opponent lately Mr. Washington said:

"Surely the gentleman cannot object to that clause of our constitution which excludes from civil office the Infidel who denies the existence of a God! How, forsooth, could such a person take an oath to support the constitution? Upon whom would or could he call to witness the solemnity of his obligation? He could not swear by the earth, for it is God's footstool. He could not swear by any created thing, for it is less than the creator, whose very existence he denies."

And such men as the Hon. Joseph E. Washington are in Congress legislating upon the liberties of citizens. Down in Tennessee, running a Sunday-school, he would doubtless be a great man; therefore he ought to stay there.

ONE of the designs submitted for the Lick statuary in the new City Hall park has a shaft around which runs this inscription:

"Therefore God gave thee of the dew of heaven and the fatness of the earth and plenty of corn and wine."

Mr. Lick did not leave his money for the purpose of decorating the city with religious mottoes, and that one should be discarded. We move that the following be substituted:

"To plow is to pray; to plant is to prophesy, and the harvest answers and fulfils."

Ingersoll wrote it; it contains more truth and more poetry than anything to be found in the Bible, and it will not offend the Prohibitionists by public congratulation over the fact that California has a large wine industry.

THERE are two factions of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the partisan and the non-partisan. The former desires to affiliate with one of the political parties or to run a third party—the Prohibition—while the latter simply go in for temperance with a "Christian" prefix. Mrs. Mary F. Lathrop, non-partisan, now on this coast, lately spoke in Oakland, and there read a letter which she had received while in the East from one of our local ministers. In the letter the preacher said to her:

"Don't you dare to come to California, you scarlet woman of Babylon, you hand-painted Jezebel!"

From which it is to be inferred that though a man may be a preacher he is not necessarily a gentleman or an embodiment of decent manners.

WHEN the pope gets angry, he can rail like Malachi. Referring to the refusal of the Italian government to grant him temporal sovereignty over Rome, he thus breaks out: "The Lord will come no longer with a sweet, peaceful face, but with an angry one to strike and purify his church. The sea of evil is about to beat against the rock on which the church is founded, and will leave nothing to be seen of the horizon but the threat of an angry God. Prayer will not suffice to appease the Almighty." We recently had on this coast a man who talked as the pope does. His name was Erickson, and he is now in the asylum for lunatics.

A WOMAN in this city gave Dr. Louis Schlesinger, manager of the "Carrier Dove," $250 for services as a medium and to aid the cause of Spiritualism. Subsequently she wanted her money returned, and brought suit in Justice Stafford's court for its recovery. The court gave a verdict in her favor, and Dr. Schlesinger must refund. Whether the decision is just or unjust we do not know; but supposing the woman had given the same money to a priest to pay for masses for her dead husband, and had afterwards regretted it; is there any process of law known to the courts of this state whereby the church could have been made to disgorge? If there is we never heard of its being successfully tried.

SENATOR EDMUNDS has sprung on Congress a bill proposing to devote the proceeds of confiscated Mormon church property to educational purposes. The cause of education is a good one, the noblest in the world, but it does not justify unfair discrimination; and to use Mormon money, taken from its owners by compulsion, to pay the tuition of Catholics, Protestants, or Free-thinkers is a bad precedent, likely to lead in time to the confiscation of all property belonging to unpopular sects.

THE Rev. C. D. Barrows, pastor of one of the most prominent and wealthy churches of San Francisco, has fled and resigned his pastorate on account of charges reflecting upon his reputation for morality. An innocent man would have demanded an investigation, while a braver man would have declared that the public could have no interest in his private affairs. But Dr. Barrows shows no evidence of being either innocent or courageous.

DR. JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE, faith-healer, says that Mrs. Ana J. Johnson, also a faith-healer, is an impostor, a Jezebel, and unchaste. Mrs. Johnson, in rebuttal, says that the Rev. Dr. John Alexander is a beast, a devil, a liar, and so forth, and she has sued him for fifty thousand dollars for defaming her character. It appears that faith-healing does not include the healing of discord between the faithful.

IN saying that over-education is the cause of the political discontent in Russia and Germany, Bismarck tells a plain truth; but education should not be restricted, as he suggests, for that reason. Enlightened disaffection is preferable to ignorant content. The one is mankind struggling to better their condition; the other, a lazy animal sleeping in the sun, happy but not intelligent enough to know it.

THE "Weekly Star" has to make this correction:

"The intelligent compositor made us say, in last week's 'Star,' 'the monster of religion,' for 'the minister of religion.'"

We are glad to see this evidence that the influence of Voltaire is not lost upon the "Star's" compositors. "Ecrasez l'infame!"

IT is worth while to be a priest. Cardinal Manning has just been presented with a check for about $18,000 on the occasion of his silver jubilee. There is a passage of scripture that sets forth the difficulty of a rich man getting into heaven, but Cardinal Manning and the rest of the clerics are willing to take the risk.

By a full vote of the city trustees, Oceanside, in San Diego county, has abolished the Sunday-closing law. The citizens held a well-timed jollification on June 14 to celebrate the restoration of Sunday to the use and purposes to which other days are devoted.

OBSERVATIONS.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society last Sunday night was a most pleasant affair, including an address and a presentation. The hall was filled with an intelligent audience; Prof. W. S. Bell was the orator of the evening, and "Popular Objections to Freethought" was the theme of his discourse. Mr. Bell said that he had often been asked how it happened that Free-thinkers knew so much more than the great and wise men of the past who had accepted Christianity. He replied that these great and wise men did not know everything. They were often mistaken. Many of them believed in witchcraft, in dreams, fortune-telling, a flat and stationary earth, in six days of creation six thousand years ago, and in a personal devil. These were all errors, and the judgment of men who accepted them was open to suspicion. The wise and the unwise alike have been deluded, and we are at liberty to reject what we now know to have been their mistakes. One reason why the wise men of the past accepted Christianity was because they had to. They were forced into a position of acceptance by the rack, the thumbscrew, and the Inquisition. There was a time when those called the wisest believed that stealing a sheep was a capital offense, and the same men who reject their belief on that subject still accept them as authority in matters of religion.

Professor Bell reviewed the other objections to Freethought, including the claim that it is demoralizing, which he refuted by logical argument and by citations from history.

During the lecture Mr. Schou occupied a front seat. He was loaded with a handsome cane, which he desired to present to Professor Bell, and with a speech for the audience. As soon as opportunity was offered he delivered both. Taking the floor Mr. Schou held up the cane and proceeded to describe it. The wood, he said, came from Palestine, and was therefore holy. The head of the cane was of horn, and, having a hole through it, could be similarly described. As for the band covering the joint of the stick and the horn, that was of coin silver, one of the gods of the American people, and therefore holy. On behalf of the Freethought Society and of the Liberals of San Francisco, Mr. Schou would present this cane to Professor Bell as a token of their esteem and a pledge of their admiration and good will.

There was great enthusiasm. Mr. Bell accepted the gift with thanks, but failed to show sufficient emotion to justify the customary statement that he was deeply moved. On the contrary, he was quite cheerful. He looked at the cane a moment reflectively, and then remarked that it was Cain who killed Abel. History repeated itself, and here we had once more the conjunction of cane and a Bell, though without fatal results. Mr. Bell made other jokes of equal atrocity, and then, speaking more sanely, thanked the donors for this evidence of their kindly remembrance, and retired amid a salvo of applause. As previously stated, it was a most pleasant affair.

The Chair invited discussion of the lecture. There was no immediate response, and adjournment was suggested, but Mr. P. Healy felt called upon to say something and took the floor, although the writer moved the previous question. Mr. Healy defended the justness of hanging men for stealing sheep, and maintained that the best way to secure religious harmony was to appoint some man like the pope to settle all disputes. The habit of indulging in independent thought was quite pernicious, and should be done away with.

Mr. Pingree, following, proved himself a surprisingly good speaker and made remarks of much value.

Professor Bell closed the debate, replying to Mr. Healy, as he said, more through courtesy toward the man than out of respect for his arguments.

"The Eight Hour Question" is up for discussion next Sunday night, John M. Days being the speaker, who will doubtless demonstrate the merit of eight-hour Days.

I suppose I owe Dr. D. C. Moore an apology for attributing to other causes than the right ones his absence from the Freethought meeting on the evening set for his lecture. He has written an explanation, which I will here introduce. The apology due may be collected next steamer day:

ROOM 6, FLOOD BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 17, 1890.

To Freethought, Paper, Society, or Whom it May Concern: A word of explanation. The Liberal journal, Vol. III., No. 24, of 14th inst., is before me. On page 372, under "Observations," my name appears, which, owing to excessive toil, struggle for existence against abnormal environment, I had not before noticed.

Now, in justice, equity, and morality, which I conclude is the object of your paper and society, I desire you to publish this brief explanation. When Mr. Faust spoke to me about speaking to your society, I told him I had some notes, jotted down from time to time, that I might overhaul and make a lecture; hence the arrangement with Mr. Eastman.

In the course of a few days my wife, Dr. Ellen D. Moore, and family returned, sooner than expected, from Oregon, thus making it necessary to get a house furnished, etc. My time was so completely occupied with this and my business, two million-dollar redwood sales, one of a quarter-million; one mining transaction of a — also, and many other smaller deals, including two law-suits—the Bodwell liquid fuel swindle and a suit for commissions, over $2000, for sale of Saratoga Hall—altogether making the most intensely active, aggravating, and distracting period of my existence, that I left the lecture to consider and prepare on Sunday. I found a lecture from the notes I had prepared, to do justice to myself, the theme, and the society, would require two hours at least to deliver. The "better half" insisted that it was too intensely ultra and radical for even the most advanced Freethought—that is, so caustic and cutting on all classes of poor deluded humanity that it would only give offense, etc.; hence I myself concluded it should have more of the spirit of Christ, or if you please, charity and love. Hence I rushed over to see if I could find the committee and get more time. I could not learn from the directory or any other source where any of them lived. I went to the Howard-street office and found it closed; then to the hall that was advertised and found it occupied by others, and no sign of any Freethought people around, at 7:45 P. M.; and as I had promised to be at home on the 8 o'clock boat, Dr. E. D. being tired out and needing treatment, rest, and sleep, I gave a note to the janitor for Mr. Eastman or the committee and left, feeling almost distracted that I had got into such a predicament. To tell the absolute truth, and that is after all the best policy, I was so wrought up over an attempt during the week to swindle me out about $1000, prospective, that I was, with all the other circumstances, not in my right mind, or I should have remained and made my explanation in person, and then taken the 8:30 boat.

Whatever my disease, distress, or suffering, which was intense, may be called, it certainly was not "orthodox paralysis." The reason I "notified the secretary" not to publish my name, was the fear that it would keep people away, as I am so unpopular with the medical despotism—the power of darkness, of poison mongery—being their victim of a twenty-years conspiracy, the most hellish ever conceived of in all history, which I referred to in my notes, and to which my wife objected so strongly.

I ask no excuse, nor will I permit any reference to my want of "courage of my convictions." I make the modest claim to be the most daring Freethinker of all the ages. I was the chief organizer of the first society of advanced and untrammelled minds west of the Alleghanies, in the most radical town on the continent, Salem, Ohio. If you want proof of my courage, get me an audience in a respectable and good-sized hall seating at least one thousand people. Yours truly,

D. C. MOORE.

Dr. Moore's letter lacks nothing necessary to a vindication, and I do not see how more particulars could very well have been added. There is not the slightest doubt that the lecture would have proved interesting, and if it consumed two hours in its delivery no one could complain that it was too short.

I will add that I have met Dr. Moore personally. He is a gentleman and a scholar, and as radical as a stump-puller.

A young lady in Kansas writes:

You see more good in John Thomas than we do, evidently. But wouldn't it have done just as well if you had credited his article in FREETHOUGHT, May 31, to the "Rostrum," May 15? Inquisitively,

Nay, daughter, not so. Mr. John Thomas forwarded his "Rule of Right Conduct" as an original contribution to FREETHOUGHT, and it was printed as such. That he sent it also to the "Rostrum" does not affect the matter. Moreover, fair prairie blossom, Mr. John Thomas is a brick. He hath subscribed for this journal and pungled the shekels; he hath taken and paid for many copies for gratuitous distribution; and yet again hath he sent us the names of four new subscribers and cash for the same. Good in John Thomas? Verily he is the salt of the earth.

A prolific source of poverty is the amount of money spent for intoxicating liquors by the poor. The reason why so much is spent is because liquor is so high priced. The cause of this high price is tax and license, which constitute two-thirds of the cost. Remove the tax, reduce the price, and less money will be wasted. The moderate drinker will drink no more than now, but the confirmed sot will end his useless days sooner. Give men a fair field to fight the evils that curse the earth, and when the victory is won it will be decisive.

In response to a cordial copper-plate invitation from Mr. de Young, I attended the reception at the new Chronicle building last Monday evening. The card accompanying the invitation admitting the editor of FREETHOUGHT to the premises, entitled him to apply at the cashier's window for a souvenir, but it did not promise him the privilege of being galloped over and jabbed in the ribs by a rushing, surging throng. The Chronicle building is quite tall, and from a distance seems to throw the rest of the city out of proportion. It has marble halls, as fine as any I ever dreamt that I dwelt in. The first thing that strikes the eye upon entering is the ferruled end of a walking-stick carried under the arm of some enemy of his race. I ascended to the tower in an elevator which goes up like a rocket, and gives the ascendant the feeling that his legs are being driven far into his body by the upward force of the floor. Going down is simply a drop, accompanied by a distinct knowledge that the elevator is trying to get there first. If it went any faster the passenger would fall upward against the roof like a fly inside an umbrella. From a ground view the tower of the Chronicle building does not appear much larger than the pilot house on a ferryboat, but in reality it is more commodious than the average Alameda residence. The tower contains a clock whose works are actuated by a large iron weight, though that is not the reason the works are said to be actuweighted. The dial of the clock is of such dimensions that the end of the minute hand travels about forty feet per hour. A fine view is commanded from this eminence, objects many thousands of miles distant being distinctly visible. Among the most conspicuous of these is the moon, pale empress of the night.

The printing-office, situated below the tower, is well appointed, everything being new and clean up to date. Some three-score compositors were here working their hands and great brains getting type ready for the rattled maker-up to pi under the scrutinizing gaze of many visitors.

Mr. de Young's private office on the floor below attracted marked attention on account of its walls of carved oak and embossed leather. A lavatory adjoins, and being of cast steel cemented into the brickwork, and having a strong lock, will prevent the compositors from using Mr. de Young's towel. A fine varnished desk with a pistol pocket adds to the convenience and safety of the private office.

Other portions of the building deserve notice, which will be inserted at our regular rates. Fireworks were inaugurated at 8 o'clock and kept up until a late hour.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Complete returns from the census enumeration of San Francisco are promised this week—Many Chinese, landed at Guaymas, are being smuggled over the border into California.—Prentice Mulford, the journalist, who has been on the coast for several months, has returned to the East. His parting advice to San Francisco is to introduce one and two cent pieces.—June 17 was the 115th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. The day was appropriately celebrated in this city.—Thirteen more Eastern ironmolders arrived here last Sunday. They will take the places of the striking molders if allowed to do so.—The single tax has become an issue in British Columbia. All the opposition candidates for the legislative assembly in Victoria are practically pledged to it, and at least one of the government candidates has promised to give it favorable consideration.—The Native Sons of the Golden West are preparing to celebrate Admission Day, Sept. 9, in fine style.—Senator and Mrs. Leland Stanford, of California, spent a few days in Paris last week and left for Kissengen.—Samuel Carson & Co., the second largest book dealers of San Francisco, have gone into insolvency. General demoralization of the trade and numerous failures are the causes.—A prize-fight between two unskilled men in one of San Francisco's "athletic" clubs last week resulted fatally to one of the contestants. Charges of murder are laid against all concerned, and several parties, including the principal, are in jail.

The Nationalists of New York will hold a conference on July 2 to decide whether they will go into politics. If they enter the field they will doubtless have the support of the Socialistic element, which in New York city is very large.—A young woman has won the Sargent prize for poetry at Harvard college.—The heaviest rainfalls ever known have deluged the cities of Joliet and Rockford in Illinois. Much damage resulted to property.—The church committee has vindicated the Rev. T. C. Carter, editor of the Chattanooga Christian Advocate, of the charges of slander.—Chicago people are credited with using every effort to make the world's fair a big success.—A nunnery was burnt at Davenport, Iowa, June 12, and one woman perished.

There are fears that the construction of the underground railroad in London may weaken the foundations of St. Paul's cathedral.—Cholera has appeared in Spain, and many fatalities have resulted.—A Presbyterian minister named Imbrie was recently assaulted by Japanese students at Tokio, Japan. The clergyman entered the ball grounds by a rear way, and was "slugged" for beating his way in. Of course Japanese doing the same thing in this country would not be molested!—Ex-President Garcia of Mexico has been excommunicated by the archbishop at the City of Mexico for declaring that the masses of the people are not Catholics.—The English clergy are to make a concerted attack on gambling and betting. They must be doing something to draw attention to themselves.—The first convention of Woman Suffragists met at Toronto June 13.

HOW MOSES HARMAN IS FARING.

KANSAS PENITENTIARY, FIFTH DIVISION, CELL, No. 27. }
Sunday, June 1, 1890. }

Dear Friends, Relatives, Fellow-workers, and Readers All: My first month of convict life having expired, I am permitted to send you another friendly greeting. Am very glad to be able to report myself well and in usual spirits. That is to say, my health is no worse than it has been for several months past. I am glad to be able to say that I have found my surroundings, thus far, less annoying and more endurable than I expected to find them. For two weeks or more I have been employed in the kitchen—officer's kitchen. My work there is not hard, and the fare better adapted to the wants of chronic dyspeptic. My chief cause of mental worry now is the knowledge of the fact that my friends and relatives are worrying about me. One writes, "Is there anything I can do for you? I have supposed that owing to your age and infirmities you would not be put to hard labor, or that an equivalent in money would be accepted by the officials instead of such labor. Hard work would soon kill you. Will they allow you to eat such food as your friends may send you?" Another writes urging me to order the discontinuance of Lucifer and advises the signing of a pledge on my part, never to engage in the publication of a similar paper again. By so doing he thinks the judge, the prosecuting attorney, and in fact all who know anything of the case, would sign a petition to President Harrison, asking for my release from prison. This plan he thinks the only hope. The present sentence of five years, with another indictment hanging over me, he says, simply means, in my case, imprisonment for life. He then adds: "You can help no one by dying in the penitentiary. Your being where you are is causing your dearest friends the deepest sorrow of their lives. Were you dead they would know you were out of misery, but to know every day that you are suffering mentally and perhaps physically is simply madness. I cannot rest knowing you are where you are and that I cannot help you. I don't believe you can know how I suffered when I saw you disappear through that door, Saturday evening, with that gang of low, depraved criminals."

That these letters and others of similar tone have moved me deeply, that they have brought my heart into my throat, so to speak, and caused unmanly tears to flow, I will not pretend to deny. But while sincerely thanking all who have thus spoken for their sympathetic interest in my welfare I wish to say very briefly in reply: First—Do not lose any sleep or rest because you think me "suffering physically or mentally," for such—except to a very limited extent—is not the case. True, there are many privations, discomforts, annoyances, and chagrins incident to and inseparable from prison life that are not usually met with elsewhere, but I have long since learned that to "devour the chagrins of one's lot" is the true philosophy of life. I do not mean to say that I am able, by a single effort, to gulp down the chagrins of my lot and think no more of them. I mean rather that by my persistent effort I am generally able, as in the present instance, to rise superior to my surroundings, and to enjoy the calm satisfaction and peace of mind that is not born of circumstance, and that is largely, if not wholly, independent of circumstance.

Second—I wish to say in regard to making pledges for the future in order to secure release, that while I cannot foresee what I may be willing to do a year or two from now, for the present I must regretfully decline to comply with the well-meant proposal of my friend quoted above. While estimating freedom of the body at its full value, I prize mental or intellectual freedom still more highly. If ever these prison doors open to let me out I want to walk forth a free man! Not hampered or handicapped with embarrassing pledges or promises. Just now I feel much as I suppose Emerson felt when he wrote: "Let it not be recorded in our own memories, that in this moment of the eternity, when we who were named by our names, flitted across the light, we were afraid of any fact, or disgraced the fair day by a pusillanimous preference of our bread to our freedom" (Vol. 1, p. 158).

My single sheet is about full. I wish, in closing, to return heartfelt thanks to all who have written me here, and to say to all who may intend to write: Please be careful what you write, if you do not wish me to be deprived of the privilege of receiving letters from the outside; and to all who, whether writing or not, believe that "thoughts are things" I would say, please send some of your best thoughts hitherward; and for mottoes or targets upon which to focalize those hitherward thoughts, I suggest the following words: Patience, endurance, self-control, cheerfulness, hopefulness, aspiration, and inspiration. Yours for truth, right, and justice,

MOSES HARMAN.

LABOR UNION TYRANNY.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of May 31 I find a criticism by J. C. Weybright on my letter published in FREETHOUGHT on May 10. Mr. Weybright seems to concede that the statements I made are true in fact, but he thinks they are bitter, and claims that those who work for the improvement of the human race in a mistaken way are not dreamers.

We all know that dreams are representations which never had a reality. We likewise know that many of the representations of so-called reformers never were, and never will be, realized. Why then is it wrong to call those dreamers who deal in fancies rather than facts?

No doubt Mr. Weybright's aim and mine are identical; we simply differ in method. I, like him, believe that co-operation is the only way by which the laboring classes can obtain the full fruit of their labor. But how can mechanics, who often strike for eight hours, associate themselves with farmers who have to work fourteen hours a day to keep the wolf from the door? Is a mechanic so much higher in the scale of development that eight hours' work of a mechanic is equal to fourteen hours' work of a farmer? I have not found it so, and I am a mechanic by trade and a farmer by occupation. I have no objection to eight hours' labor as a day's work, provided all laborers shall work eight hours only; the farmers included, and not only the chosen few.

Mr. Weybright seems to have great confidence in unions. If he will look at all our trades unions without prejudice he will find that they all stand on solid selfishness. When a number of men combine together for self-improvement, for mutual assistance, or for any purpose whatever to promote their interest without encroaching upon the rights of their fellow beings, their object is laudable. But when men form unions for the sake of trampling under foot the rights of their fellow men, they deserve the condemnation of every well-meaning man. What right has any union to tell an outsider how long he shall work, how much he shall charge for a day's work, and how much he shall do, or whom they will allow to learn the trade and whom they will exclude? No tyranny can be worse.

Mr. Weybright says: "Shall we do as Germany has done to be wise?" I say yes. The conditions of the laboring classes have improved enormously in Germany within the last fifty years, while in the United States they have been at a standstill, if they have not gone backward.

Let the laboring classes combine so as to reap the full benefit of their labor, and not oppress their fellow laborers as they now do. We cannot improve the human race by making slaves of them. Let mankind be free. That is to say, let them be free to do what their physical and mental developments have fitted them for, so long as they do not encroach upon the rights of their fellow men.

Mr. Weybright's plea for women is well put in, but out of place, since I have as much sympathy for them as he possibly can have.

The comparison between Mr. Ingersoll's ideas and my own lacks the reflection Mr. Weybright ought to have given it. We all are creatures of circumstances. Our thoughts are formed from the impressions left upon our brain; and men who have grown up under different circumstances must necessarily have different ideas and come to different conclusions. Yet in no instance can we form a correct judgment in regard to anything we are not familiar with, and right here is the difference between Mr. Ingersoll and myself. Mr. Ingersoll, likely, never did a day's bodily labor in his life. He has known luxury from childhood, but not want; he has never mingled with the laboring classes, never was one of them. This incapacitates him to a great extent to speak intelligently on the labor question. Had he been turned out to root for himself as early as I was, and been among strangers without a cent in his pockets as often as I have been, his ideas would be different, and on the labor question much more correct.

ROBERT GUNTHER.

Eureka, June 8, 20.

SECULARISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

It would not be possible to frame a constitution more essentially secular than that of the United States and most of the states as they exist to-day. Our fathers were Secularists in the broadest sense of that term, and they did all that could be done in their day. In fact, they did more than would have been accepted but for one fact.

The religious world was divided. The Christians accepted this Freethought constitution, each sect, rather than one that would put one sect in the ascendant and give it the power to persecute them. They preferred Freethought principle to Christian practice. But the constitution was far ahead of the nation, and the law they made far better than the people were prepared for.

So in each state, county, city, and locality the prevailing religion held its own in spite of the constitution, just as slavery did in the teeth of the declaration that all men are born free and equal. Wherever religion had a majority it pursued its old methods, regardless of the constitution, and Freethought rights were only respected where the enemy were divided among themselves.

At last heresy or unbelief has taken such a shape that all the creeds are inclined to do battle against it. It questions the whole Christian faith. It assails every article of the creed. It has be come a huge army—in our cities three-fourths, in the villages one-half, in the nation a powerful majority. It is stronger in numbers than any one sect. It is abler in argument than all of them. It challenges to debate their ablest champions. It will win the field; if it has not already done so, for absolute Free-thought and perfect secularization if some grand effort be not made against it.

And there are signs that that effort is to be made. The entire Christian army is negotiating for a union and a crusade against the common enemy, the heretic and Infidel.

The holy Roman Catholic church unbends. It declares its allegiance to the republic, speaks of itself as Christian, and of this as a Christian country. The sects are feeling for the Roman Catholic Alliance, and willing to accept it for a victory over religious liberty. Even that old fogey, Dr. Stebbins, called pastor of the Unitarian church here, recognizes the grand old church as the mother of the faith, and says he would be a Catholic, were he not a well-paid pastor of the other end of the track.

All this portends a gathering storm for Secularism. They will begin where they can all agree, and end, if successful, in the extirpation of religious freedom. That is the end and aim.

God in the constitution and a sacred and compulsory Sabbath will be the first step. We all like God! will be the war cry. And the workingman will be persuaded that the Sabbath is to be a day of rest for him. Oh, yes, the church is suddenly concerned for the workers. It wants their votes. And it may get them. There is a danger here. They may be deceived, and they are a great power.

But let them understand this, that a day of rest, to do as you please, is not a Sabbath, and not what the church wants. The day of rest is all right. It might even be two, instead of one, in every seven. But the church wants a sacred day, not to rest, not to do as you please, but to go to church and support the priest, and be forbidden to do ought else. Beware of that kind of a wolf that comes in sheep's clothing.

And God in the Constitution is not a harmless thing, either. It means the repeal of the constitution of our fathers. It means that government shall favor some religion. It means that Free-thought will no more be allowed on that question. The nation has declared for a God, and no man must deny it.

And it will soon mean more. They will proceed to define God. A God of truth, justice, mercy, and goodness would not do them. As one of our papers says, "that is not the God that is in the churches." That God would do no harm. But they would have the God of the Bible, who appoints priests, clothes them with powers, and damns eternally all who do not believe them. That accomplished, all liberty is lost. Heresy is a crime, the scientist must find only religious truth in nature, and the press and all others speak respectfully of the anointed priesthood.

All the rest would soon follow. The church has never been known to yield a point it had the power to make or keep. The United States would soon have a grand Ecumenical council, of which Cardinal Gibbons would be president and Pastor Stebbins the grand secretary; and the council would decree as follows:

"Our fathers were great fools and not instructed in the ways of God; men have no inalienable rights; men are not by nature free or equal; no man should think for himself; the people have no right to rule; the priests should dictate policy; the Christian religion is true; it must be believed as we say, on pain of death and hell. Amen."

This is the programme in short for us. This is the dose the American people are expected to swallow if they will. And there will be no honor, no scruple in accomplishing that end, if it may be achieved. Priests have never shown either when it stood in the way of their ambition.

Our only safety lies in setting the current the other way—to not to an utter defeat of the constitution, but to a general observance and enforcement. In all things let us be worthy of our fathers and preserve all the rights they declared ours. H. L. K.

THE Socialistic Labor party, which cast a large vote for Henry George in New York a few years ago, is no longer in friendly relations with the great apostle of the Single Tax. Mr. George's paper, the Standard, says: "So far as the Socialistic Labor party is concerned, it can be depended upon to oppose any rational scheme of political action, and to do so in utter disregard of good faith and common sense."

THE BROTHERHOOD OF MORALISTS.

SECRETARY'S REPORT FOR MAY.

During the month thirty-six membership certificates were issued, making the total enrollment to May 31 1043 members. The new members are from New York, 1; Illinois, 1; Missouri, 1; Texas, 4; Montana, 1; Alabama, 6; Ohio, 4; Michigan, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Ontario, 2; Colorado, 13. F. H. RAU, Sec.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from April	$10 75
J. T. Allison, Texas	40
F. Shodl, Col.	1 00
Wm. Perkins, Mo.	50
Harmon Wettstein, Ill.	1 00
Wm. Horsfall, N. Y.	25
		13 90
	Expended	3 20
		10 70
Hannibal, Mo.		A. R. AVRES, Treas.

A CONVENTION OF TEXAS LIBERALS.

To the Liberals of Texas: After considerable discussion through the columns of the Independent Pulpit and an extensive correspondence with Liberals in this state it has been determined to hold a general meeting in Waco, Texas, July 15, 16, and 17, 1890; to which all who have at heart, and hold dear, that absolute freedom of thought and expression, in the search for truth, which is the natural right of every rational being, are cordially invited.

The object for holding such a meeting is to inaugurate a system of positive, tolerant thought, ethical culture, and practical benevolence, in which all liberal minded people can unite and work in harmony for the moral elevation, intellectual improvement, physical amelioration, social well-being and consequent happiness of the human race. Therefore, the following subjects will no doubt be discussed in such order as may be agreed upon by those in attendance:

1. Is an organization practicable?
2. On what basis shall it be established?
3. What particular aims are to be attained by it?
4. What methods of work will be most effective in the attainment of its aims?

With an object so laudable for an incentive, and with subjects so important for discussion, it is expected that the occasion will be one of unusual interest to all morally disposed, freethinking people, and a large attendance is solicited. Very truly,
Waco, Texas. J. D. SHAW.

THE Australian ballot system has been adopted in Tennessee, and as it excludes illiterates, the politicians have inaugurated night schools wherein negroes may be taught to read.

IN Professor Huxley's last contribution to the "Nineteenth Century" the editor of "Liberty" finds evidence that the writer has a leaning toward philosophical Anarchy.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Grey's River	June 11 to 18	Baker City	July 27, 28, 29
Portland	June 22	Union	July 30
Cascades, Wash.	June 24, 25	New Bridge	Aug. 1, 2, 3
Fossil, Or.	June 29	Summerville	Aug. 5, 6, 7
Lost Valley	July 1	Dayton	Aug. 10, 11
Wagner	July 2, 3, 4	Rosalia	Aug. 13
Mitchell	July 5, 6	Plaza	Aug. 14
Prineville and vicinity	July 8 to 16	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
Monument	July 18	Spokane Falls	Aug. 17
Hamilton	July 19	Davenport	Aug. 18, 19
Fox	July 20, 21, 22	Buckley	Aug. 21, 22, 23
John Day	July 24	Tacoma	Aug. 25
Prairie City	July 25	Port Townsend	Aug. 31

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XIV.

ENTITLED PARABLES.

Simon is Armed, and Continues his Journey.—Meeting with Blunt.—Comes to Grief.

1. Who is this that cometh with lordly steps? That paweth the air like the impatient ass? Who is he that cometh with his garments dyed? His garments are dyed with blood, and smeared with pellucid mire.

2. He cometh with the aspect of a king, and prancing like unto a war-horse. Declare to us his name, that we may greet him with due reverence.

3. Blow the loud trumpets, and waken the timbrels. Aha, thou proud charger, why dost thou bray? Why arch thy soft neck?

4. Whoa! Whoa!

5. And it came to pass, that when Simon was duly welcomed, his bones were sore. And the city was illuminated by much moonshine, and the trumpeting began.

6. Yea, the trumpeting began, and it was a jubilant trumpeting, and the city shook again. And the guides shouted with a great shout, and took the yellow metal from him.

7. Then did they take Simon to a certain smith's and having put an halter upon him, they tied him fast to a stall, and the smith came and lifted up one of Simon's feet and took off his shoe, and in its place nailed on another called gospel, and when he had shod him on the one, he did likewise to the other.

8. And after this they took a helmet made of green paper, in the shape of a cone, and put it upon his head, and put a sword in his hand. And the name of the helmet was Deafears, and the name of the sword Intolerance.

9. But the armory of the city was in a woeful plight, for the Giants did continually break into it, and break the swords in pieces, so that the pilgrims were unable to arm themselves as of yore.

10. And they put upon him a cloak called Righteousness, made of linen, but exceedingly transparent and rotten withal, so that it was soon in rags. And people saw through it, and that under it was much filthiness.

11. Now they who were masters of the gate called Katholikos, which goeth into the city of Conversion, boasted that they could cleanse this cloak by means of a certain soap called Confession, and make it smooth and straight by means of a mangle called Penance.

12. But they of the gates by which Simon entered had neither soap nor mangle.*

13. Then they put Simon into a press, and pressed his face until it was of sufficient length, and when they had done that he was ready to go on his way.

14. And Godlyguts blessed Simon, and he was blest indeed. And he went on his way singing—King, Lamb, and Ghost, ye glorious host. I sing your praises. But for ye three, I should, I see, have gone to blazes. But here I am, in blood of Lamb, I've had a wash. Yet I deserve, without reserve, immortal smash. Good Godlyguts, his hand he puts, upon my head. And well I'm blest, and from my breast, all fears are fled.

15. And having sung and recovered from his labor, he set himself to his journey afresh, and having traveled but a little way he fell in with the man whose name was Blunt.

16. And Simon was very valiant, and feared not any, for said he, I am armed with armor that is able to overcome even Ahri-manes. So he talked with Blunt.

17. And Blunt said, Come now and I will speak a parable unto thee.

18. A certain man had many children, and he made himself a garden, and sent his children into it to play.

19. Now in the middle of the garden he had dug a great pit, and at the bottom of the pit he placed a great number of very sharp thorns, so that should any fall in, they should be grievously hurt and wounded thereby; and he concealed the whereabouts of the pit.

20. And he spake unto his children, saying, Ye shall not go near the middle of the garden, for thereabouts I have dug a pit, into which if ye fall I will assuredly burn you alive.

21. And Simon was wroth, and said, What sayest thou? Did he lay snares for his children, knowing they would fall into them, and when they fell into them burn them alive?

22. And Blunt answered and said, Yea, and had a very great fire in readiness. Moreover there went a man to the children and persuaded them vehemently to go into the middle of the garden for that all the choice fruits were there, and that there was not any pit. And the father of the children knew that this man would persuade them, and that his persuasions would prevail, and he could have hindered the man from persuading them and would not.

23. And Simon said, Then the father desired to burn his children alive, and with much care sought occasion and excuse to do it. Surely no man is so vile. Surely there is no man so unjust, nor any so full of malice and cruelty?

24. And Blunt went on saying, And the children were persuaded, and went into the middle of the garden and fell into the pit, and were grievously wounded.

25. And the fire which the father had made surrounded the garden on every side, and grew nearer and nearer.

26. And the father to justify himself said, I have prepared a way of escape for them; there is a pathway under the ground by which they may come out. But the children knew not where the entrance to the pathway was, and though they strove hard to find it they could not.

27. And the father hid himself from his children and would not tell them where the entrance was.

28. And many men went and said to the children, Your father hath sent me to point out to you the entrance.

29. And one of the men said, It is here, and another said, It is there, and another said, It is yonder; some say, It lieth this way, and some said, It lieth that way; and thus were the children mocked, and knew not which way to go.

30. And the father knew the true way and could have shown it them, and have hindered the men from deceiving the children, and he would not.

31. And he justified himself by saying, One of the men knoweth the true way, and will lead them to it, if they will but give heed to him.

32. And he would not hinder the other men from deceiving the children, and thus the most part of them were caught in the flames, for they knew not which of the men to follow, for they all alike said, We are sent by your father.

33. And Simon was very wroth at the father of the children, and said, Truly he was the vilest of men, and unspeakably wicked, and deserved to be torn to pieces by the dogs; nay, that no punishment could be devised great enough to sufficiently punish him.

34. And Blunt went on saying, And the children not only were caught in the fire, but the father had cunningly devised that the fire should not slay them outright, but on the contrary keep them alive, and torture them horribly, not only for days and months, but for many, very many years.

35. Then said Simon, He was not a man, but some accursed demon, and he cursed him very bitterly, and Blunt joined in the curses very heavily.

36. And Simon said, Tell me I beseech thee who he is, that I may curse him by name.

37. And Blunt with a deep voice cried out, Thou hast adjudged him. Oh Simon, he is thy king, even the King Jah.

38. Hereabouts some one fell down in a swoon, and when I looked to see who it was, I saw it was Simon.

39. And presently there came up innumerable hobgoblins, and many horrific creatures, and tore Simon out of the gutter and made much sport of him, tossing him from one to another, and kicking him hither and thither, and bemauling and bespattering

* It is singular that popular cries should so long outlive all recollection of their original meaning. Here we have undoubtedly the origin of the cries, "How are you off for soap?" And "Has your mother sold her mangle?" so common in our streets, and the meaning of which not even the most ingenious dealer in folk-lore has been able to discover. Nay, the cries in question may have been usually supposed to have no meaning whatever, and yet how pithy and apt they become when viewed in the light our invaluable MS. throws upon them.—Trs.

him without pity, and his new cloak and his armor came hideously to grief.

40. And many days afterwards the guide whose name was Godlyguts was prowling about, when he stumbled over a mud heap.

41. And the mud heap moaned pitifully, for it was no other than Simon, and Godlyguts ran to the city and returned, bringing with him some of the other guides; and they brought vessels of water and threw them upon Simon, and when they had sufficiently cleaned him, they took him and drew him into the moat called Mystery.

42. And when they had rinsed him, they threw him out and having dried him in the moonshine by which the city was illuminated, they took him into the city and armed and clothed him afresh.

43. And Simon revived and was more valiant than before, and addressed himself to his journey anew.

To be Continued.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

To the Editors of Fr. ethought:

In your issue of May 24 you slightly criticise Mr. Stanford's land-loan scheme. In my opinion, the great defect of that bill is that it proposes to use the credit of the government for the benefit of a class. It is a mere extension of the same privilege now enjoyed by the bond-holding national banks to another class. The only difference is that the bankers are taxed one per cent. on their circulation guaranteed by the government, and thus resting on the credit system, while the owners of land are to be charged two per cent. instead of one, and it is to be called interest instead of a tax.

And, remember, it is not farmers as a class who are to be benefited, but land-owners. A farmer is a man who farms, not one who merely owns land. Let us suppose, on one hand, a land-owner who leases his land to tenants, and on the other one of his tenant farmers. Which of the two would get the benefit of this bill? Plainly the landlord, not the farmer. Those farmers who own land would get a small share of the pie, but they would get it as land-owners, not as farmers.

What is needed is not an extension of privileges now enjoyed by certain classes to others, but the abolition of all privileges and the establishment of equal rights. The national banks now enjoy this privilege of using the people's credit, which enables them to obtain double interest on the same money—once on the bonds, and again on the money issued on the security of the bonds. Instead of extending similar valuable privileges to land-owners, we should immediately do away with the privilege held by the banks by substituting currency issued directly by the government for the national bank notes.

Another objection to Mr. Stanford's bill is that it would encourage land speculation and discourage improvement. The money is to be loaned on land values alone, exclusive of improvements. Now suppose a man owning an unimproved piece of land worth $10,000 borrows $5000 on it. If he spends the money in making improvements he can get no more, but if he buys more land with it he can get another $2500. It would be a fine thing for the railroad companies and others who hold vast tracts of unimproved land, but how would it affect the poor man who wants land for a farm? One great trouble is now that so much land is held in idleness by speculators that it is difficult for those who would put it to a useful purpose to obtain it. Would not the passage of this bill of Mr. Stanford's cause speculators to still more firmly hold their land on account of the valuable privilege its ownership would carry with it of obtaining the use of Uncle Sam's credit at a low rate of interest?

The farmers are not paupers. They can take care of themselves. The only "relief" they need is relief from unjust taxation. Let the government stop picking their pockets for the benefit of a variety of privileged classes—blood-suckers on the body politic—and they will be all right. Stop taxing them on their stock, on their tools and machinery, on their household furniture, their trees, their fences and other improvements, on all the products of their labor, and take off the exorbitant import duties on the goods received in exchange for their exported products, and you will benefit the actual farmer and the industrious and enterprising of every other class, without injustice to any.

But if the government is going to loan money to farmers, let it loan it as the farmers themselves proposed at the Alliance convention held last fall in St. Louis—not upon land, but upon farm produce held in store in government warehouses as security. This would leave the mere land speculator out in the cold, and give at least a portion of the benefit to the actual producing farmer. Yours,

W. G. SELLERS.

San Francisco, June 11, 1890.

WORTH CONSIDERING.

The Single Tax Society of this city has addressed the following circular to the citizens of San Francisco:

The past winter has been a hard one upon both business and laboring men. Unemployed labor means dull times for business, but the rent collector makes his unfailling monthly round, and gas and water bills must be met, rain or shine. To aggravate matters, the assessor now calls upon every citizen for a statement of his property, that a percentage of its value may be taken for public use.

Has a lot-owner erected a building, thus giving employment to labor and creating business? The city and state will punish him by taxing the value so created.

Has a merchant a large stock of goods on hand, the production of which has given employment to labor? The state must have a share of their value also.

Even the household furniture of men forced to accept work in the Park at low wages at the hands of so-called charity, will be taxed by the sovereign people.

Is this just? Is it sensible? To tax improvements is to discourage the employment of labor. Taxing goods has the same effect. Taxing the poor man's furniture is no better than highway robbery.

Our manufacturers say they cannot compete with the East on account of high wages. Their employees say that wages must be kept up to meet the high cost of living. If we take the taxes off the manufacturer's plant and product, he can compete without reducing wages. If we will take the taxes off houses, goods, and furniture, the cost of living will be less.

Wages are the last thing that should be reduced, for good wages mean good times. Reduce the working man's ability to buy, and hard times are the necessary result. Then we hear the senseless cry of "over-production," at the very time when those whose labor produces all wealth are suffering from want of the things they have produced.

Ruinous taxation is set down by Labor Commissioner Tobin as one of the causes of the decay of wool-manufacturing in this state. He says that in many states manufactories are either partly or wholly exempt from taxation, while in California all their costly buildings and machinery are fully taxed. "The Pioneer Mills," he says, "had to pay last year $7000 for taxes."

High prices for water, fuel, and insurance he gives as other reasons why our mills cannot compete with those of the East. All these items are increased by our system of taxation. The result has been the closing of the Pioneer Mills, "throwing 700 employees out of work." Mills in Oakland, Los Angeles, Santa Rosa, Stockton, and Woodland are closed down, depriving many more of employment.

Do we want a boom in San Francisco? Not a boom in sand lots, but a boom in business; in building and manufacturing and legitimate enterprise of every kind? If we do—if we want to make work plenty and business brisk, and place our city on a solid basis of prosperity—let us abandon the stupid plan of taxing industry and enterprise.

We have great natural advantages that should give us a foremost rank in many branches of manufacture. Work can be performed to advantage every day in the year. It is never too hot, never too cold. Our noble harbor faces the grandest ocean in the world, surrounded by populous nations with whom to exchange our products. Our iron shipbuilders have shown what they can do in competition with those on the Delaware—the home in America of that industry. All that they, and many other industries, need is that we shall cease to hamper and discourage them by unwise, unjust, and ruinous taxation.

Now the taxes are necessary, and if justly laid and honestly expended, a benefit, not an injury. It pays to have effective fire and police departments, good sewers, and well paved and lighted streets. Then why do we grumble at paying for them? The principal reason is that those who pay the taxes do not get their just proportion of the benefits. Some pay heavily who get but little benefit, while others who are greatly benefited pay little or nothing.

Who pays them? The man who is industrious and enterprising; the man who builds a house, or a factory, or a business block. Such a man increases the value of every foot of land in the city, and we discourage him by fining him for every nail he drives and every brick he lays. Is it any wonder that he grumbles when we tax him for giving employment to labor? Is it any wonder that men are out of work, when we punish others for employing them? We have adopted the Turkish method of taxation: "When you see anything, grab it." It is a great injustice to tax one man for the benefit of others, when he has already increased the value of their property by his improvements. The burden of taxation falls mainly on the man who improves, while those who stand in the way of improvements are let off with a nominal tax. This is not equitable. Those who receive the benefit of taxes spent, should pay them. This is but simple justice, and the only question should be

Who reaps the benefit?

Do public improvements increase the value of buildings? No; but they do increase the value of land. Therefore, if we wish to tax the man who receives the benefit, we must tax the value of land only.

It may be said that the rate would have to be raised. Well, supposing it were; what difference would it make whether a man paid $50 a year on his house and lot, or $50 a year on his lot alone? Not any; but it would make a great difference to the speculator, who blocks improvement by asking big prices for vacant land. A table has been prepared showing that if all the taxable land in this city were assessed at its full value, and all other property exempted, it would not be necessary to raise the rate in order to obtain the full amount of taxes now levied.

If we want our city to prosper, let us endeavor to have a change made in our constitution and laws that will enable us to adopt the common-sense plan of exempting the products of industry and enterprise, and taxing nothing but land values. Land values are created by the community, and it is nothing but plain and simple justice that they alone should be taxed to pay the necessary expenses of the community.

Is it wise to use the taxing power to enrich owners of vacant land and to diminish the profits of productive enterprises, when by exempting improvements we would encourage land-owners to improve their property?

If capital invested in business and manufacturing is taxed, is it not equivalent to a license fee for the privilege of doing business and employing labor?

Take taxes off improvements, and every workingman will pay less taxes on his home; every merchant can sell cheaper; every manufacturer can increase the wages of his employees.

Taxes on goods, on buildings and machinery, and license taxes as well, must all be paid in the end by the purchaser of the goods. All such taxes increase the cost of living. Why should we increase the cost of living by taxation? Why should we use the taxing power to discourage our citizens from engaging in business?

NATIONALISM VERSUS PROHIBITION.

The February "Nationalist" contains an article entitled "A Liquor-Solution Precipitated," raising a question which, it appears to me, should be settled by Nationalists at the outset and once for all.

That question is embodied in the somewhat startling proposition that Nationalists should unite with the Prohibitionists to "close the saloon." In other words it is proposed that Nationalism form the tail to the kite of Prohibition.

I shall refrain from dwelling at any length on the merits or demerits of the Prohibition movement, except as to its economic side; I do not consider this magazine the proper ground for such foreign discussions. I shall refrain from referring to the various vices, such as the opium habit, covered with the mantle of Prohibition; I will not enlarge upon the comparative growth of inebriety in sections where prohibition prevails, the fear of detection adding hypocrisy to the evil; I shall not present the argument of the moderate drinker, nor advert to the comparative decorum and sobriety existing in countries where prohibitive measures would be laughed to scorn and where innocent enjoyment and decency are insured for the music—and beer—garden by the universal patronage of women in company with their fathers, husbands, and brothers; I shall but suggest the fact that the remedy offered by the Prohibitionists proposes to put in place of the evil of occasional intemperance the wrong of universal coercion and tyranny, such as might indeed have won the public mind in the days of Blue-Laws and Scotch Calvinism, but which is sadly out of place when all tends to the goal of perfect personal liberty.

But what I do desire to develop in this article is the pivotal fact that the philosophy and policy of these two movements are so utterly irreconcilable that it would be suicidal for Nationalists to entertain any thought of affiliating politically with Prohibitionists.

We Nationalists believe, supported by a vast array of facts, that man tends to develop into more exalted conceptions and practices of morality as his environments become more just and tolerable, and that, therefore, it is necessary to ameliorate these before the former can effectually be improved. We have made it a policy, therefore, that no purely ethical, religious, or, least of all, sumptuary discussions should be entertained by us as Nationalists.

The Prohibitionist, on the other hand, is pledged to the extremely narrow view that by withdrawing the possibility of obtaining drink (if that were possible) man will be made better in spite of himself and that, hence (here he makes an enormous jump in his argument) he will become prosperous. He is absolutely blind and deaf to any other view than that liquor is the sole cause to which can be traced all the evils of society.

These antipodal theories should make it conclusive that there is absolutely no common ground whereon Nationalists and Prohibitionists can meet. To my mind it is incomprehensible how the latter can consistently become identified with Nationalism, how one who, with the author of the article under discussion, exclaims that "no other question (referring to the liquor problem) is so deeply allied with the labor and industrial problem" can indorse the Nationalist programme, which affirms distinctly that "as long as competition continues to be the ruling factor in our industrial system the highest development of the individual cannot be reached," and that "those who seek the welfare of man must endeavor to suppress the system based on the brute principle of competition," and which in no way alludes to the influences of the liquor traffic.

It is stated in the article by Mr. Kempton that "the liquor traffic robs labor not only of the ability and power to produce earth products and manufactured goods, but also of the power and privilege of purchasing and enjoying the average consumer's share of said goods and products. Let $10,000,000 be expended annually for better food, more clothing, furniture, and home comforts, and the manufacturers' cry of 'overproduction' and their demands for a reduction in wages would cease. Underconsumption is one great cause of our business disturbances, and this comes chiefly through the liquor saloons which are permitted to exist and the drinking habits of the people." This view is so utterly at variance with the position of Nationalists that I cannot forego pointing out its errors.

Under the present system of production and distribution, it is not true that by temperance the wage-earner would be enabled to enjoy more of the "earth's products and manufactured goods." Quite the reverse is true. If universal sobriety prevailed among workingmen, the consequence, under the present absurd system, would be that the employer would get more work out of him and that, his wants being reduced, his wages would sink; the share he would get in the product of his labor would be decreased not only by the amount formerly expended in drink, but also by the additional work the employer would be able to extract from him, until the overworked and underfed human machine collapsed.

In this respect the position of Prohibitionists is on a par with that of "philanthropists" of the Atkinson type, who devise all sorts of schemes, such as fuel-saving stoves, cheap food, etc., for the benefit of the workman. Cheap food and penurious economy, the curses of Ireland and India, when modern industry could empty the horn of plenty over every human being! What a satire upon human understanding! Has Mr. Kempton ever considered that India has a population practicing universal abstinence from liquor? And is he not also aware that misery reached its climax among that unfortunate population?

Again referring to the above extract, Mr. Kempton forgets that, were the liquor traffic abolished to-day, a vast army of wage-earners would be thrown out of employ; untold misery and privation would be added to the present almost intolerable lot of the workman. Moreover, since as production has already to-day glutted the market, and since the tendency with every successful effort at consolidation of capital, every labor-saving invention, is to retrench, to throw wage-earners out of employment, it is not seen where these would be able to apply their undoubted "ability and power to produce." They would simply swell the numbers of the already stupendous army of unemployed and tramps, or by their competition in the crowded labor-market they would aid in depressing wages still further, and thus the sum total of misery and destitution would be enormously increased.

By the way, what is set up on page 110, to wit: "Capital robs labor more or less in various ways, but none more so than the $118,037,729 engaged in the liquor business in 1880, which paid labor only $15,978,579; while the same amount of capital in legitimate, useful industries, employed five times the number of men and paid in wages $60,314,000," is not calculated to fortify Mr. Kempton's position, for it appears from the figures there quoted that the average wage paid to the individual wage-worker by the liquor industries in 1880 was more than 1 1-4 (one and one-fourth) times that paid by the "legitimate and useful industries."

Prohibitionists differ from Nationalists in this that they fail to recognize the fact that the prevalence of drunkenness is among the two extremes of society.

The one class, the underpaid and overworked pariah, careworn and neglected, with no avenue of rational enjoyment, having neither time nor means nor energy left to allow the intellectual being to grow, no hope of ever escaping from his wretched condition, readily resorts to almost the only means of enjoyment, of covering wretchedness for a time with oblivion, the rum bottle.

The other class, the worthless idler, living on the work of others, the scion of aristocracy and plutocracy, satiated with enjoyment, steeped in pleasures, without the wholesome and tempering influence of useful work, seeks to drown moral prostration and degout in debauchery and excess.

Both these classes will disappear upon the advent of a just distribution of wealth, upon the destruction of competition, and with them, so Nationalists hold, the evils of intemperance.

Nationalists also hold that in the physical exhaustion resultant from the poor and insufficient food the wage-worker in many trades is able to buy and the intensity of his labor, he would simply break down much earlier than otherwise if he did not resort to stimulants, and that in such cases it would be cruel restraint to deny him the support in the weary golgotha of his life.

But I do not intend to enlarge further on these facts self-evident to Nationalists. All I desire to inculcate is that there exists so fundamental a difference between the two movements that it is futile to speak of a common cause. The one involves the philosophy of ascetism, the other claims the right of enjoyment for all. It holds that enjoyment for all is rational and conducive to the weal of society, and, therefore, moral; it holds ascetism to be either morbid or hypocritical.

While I have no hesitancy in believing that advocates of temperance and total abstinence may, and undoubtedly have, become valuable promoters of Nationalism, still it must not be forgotten that, most likely, the bulk of Nationalists believe otherwise. As to those who believe in prohibition, the enactment of sumptuary laws, the interference with the private affairs of the individual, a position deprecated by many total abstainers, they cannot in my judgment become allied with our movement.—MAX GEORGH, in the Nationalist.

A SECULAR VICTORY IN WASHINGTON.

The school board at Lynden, Whatcom county, Washington, finding the law unmistakably against them, reconsidered their recent defiance, and have instructed the teachers to discontinue all religious worship, exercise, or instruction in the public schools. Having justice, reason, and all the law on our side, the directors of the Washington Secular Union have pursued the most patient and conservative course, studiously avoiding anything like dictation, or offensive or hasty action.

Vice-president Tobiassen, our executive officer for Lynden, first obtained evidence that the public school was opened with reading the Bible, repeating the Lord's prayer, and singing gospel hymns. He then waited on the members of the school board, called their attention to the requirements of the Constitution, and kindly requested them to instruct the teachers to obey the law. They asked time to consider the matter, which was granted them; after nearly three weeks, they inform him of their determination to continue religious exercises and instruction in the schools and defied the Liberals to stop it.

Under advisement of our president, R. Winsor—one of the most acute and able lawyers of the state—we sent letters to the state board of education, calling their attention to the facts, and asking them to take action in the matter (see FREETHOUGHT, June 7, 1890). Determined, if possible, to avoid litigation, and the fierce, religious hate and bitter dissension it would engender, I went to Lynden, and at the Opera House there delivered two lectures, calling attention to the law and proving that it was equally to the interest of the most devout Christian, as to the Liberal, that the wise provision of the Constitution (Art. I. Sec. 2) should be enforced.

The following extract from a letter of Vice-president Tobiassen, of Lynden, dated June 8, 1890, will be read with interest.

Last Tuesday, E. O'Neil and Wm. Lauckhart, two of our most influential citizens (both members of the W. S. U. and of the Lynden Secular Union), visited the public school. Soon as school was called to order, the principal announced to the school that he had received orders from the school board to henceforth discontinue all religious exercise or instruction in the school. One of the pupils asked if they could sing a gospel hymn. The principal answered, "No!" An item in the last Lynden Press states that our public schools are now opened without prayer, scripture reading, or singing, greatly to the disgust of many of the pupils.

Beyond doubt, the Lynden school board did not revoke their first decision, especially in view of the excitement on the part of the religionists, until after consultation and advice from the state superintendent of public instruction. If so, thus ends all religious worship, exercise, or instruction in any public school in the state of Washington. Glory to organized effort!

All funds contributed for the purpose of making an appeal to the courts will be at once returned to the generous donors.

Our next struggle will be to enforce obedience to the law in regard to taxation of all church property at its full valuation.

Once again I call on every genuine Liberal of this state, in any precinct where it has not already been done, to send in their names as members of the Washington Secular Union, and induce all Liberals in their neighborhood to do likewise, and soon as this is done, elect from their own number a vice-president of the state society, who shall be the executive officer of the Washington Secular Union for that precinct, so that by right of office, and in performance of duty as the authorized officer of the united Liberals of the state, the assessment rolls may be examined, and when church property is not assessed at full valuation as the law requires (Art. I. Sec. 2, of the Constitution and H. B. 179, by Hughes, of King county), demand compliance, and in any case of refusal report to me as secretary of Washington Secular Union that I lay the matter before the board of directors for prompt action.

C. B. REYNOLDS, Sec. Washington Secular Union.
2104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

Be happy and you will be virtuous.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater.
C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas. F. Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.
Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy, $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer, $1

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache.

By M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina, Ills.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F. R. C. S., 30 cents

What We Want.

All hail the dawn of a new day breaking,
When a strong-armed nation shall take away
The weary burdens from backs that are aching
With maximum labor and minimum pay;
When no man is honored who hoards his millions;
When no man feasts on another's toil,
And God's poor suffering, striving billions
Shall share his riches of sun and toil.

There is gold for all in the earth's broad bosom,
There is food for all in the land's great store,
Enough is provided if rightly divided;
Let each man take what he needs—no more
Shame on the miser with unused riches,
Who robs the toiler to swell his hoard,
Who beats down the wage of the digger of ditches
And steals the bread from the poor man's board.

Shame on the owner of mines whose cruel
And selfish measures have brought him wealth,
While the ragged wretches who dig his fuel
Are robbed of comfort and hope and health.
Shame on the ruler who rides in his carriage
Bought with the labor of half-paid men—
Men who are shut out of home and marriage
And are herded like sheep in a hovel pen.

Let the clarion voice of the nation wake him
To broader vision and fairer play,
Or let the hand of a just law shake him
Till his ill-gained dollars shall roll away.
Let no man dwell under a mountain of plunder,
Let no man suffer with want and cold;
We want right living, not mere almsgiving,
We want just dividing of labor and gold.
—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, in the New York World.

Knew Her Man.

She stood at the writing desk in the postoffice corridor with a sheet of paper and an envelope before her, and as a man approached with a postal card she queried:

"Might I ask you to write a few lines for me to my husband?"

"Certainly," he replied.

"Well, date it; begin: 'My dear husband,' and then I'll tell you what to say."

"All right, go ahead, ma'am."

"Now say: 'Wood is out—flour is out—meat is out—money is out and rent is due, and I want $20 p. d. q.'"

"Exactly. You know what the letters stand for, I suppose?"

"Certainly."

"And—and aren't they a little strong?"

"No, sir—not for my old man. I've lived with him for twenty-five years and know him like a book."

"All right—you know best."

"And you may add, 'if it don't come by Saturday I'll raise —!'"

"Certainly."

"Now I'll sign 'Your Dear Mary,' and it will be all ready to go, and I bet you five to one I get the twenty inside of three days. Strong! Why, man, I can't even get him to bring home a bit of butter or a package of sugar without threatening to knock his head off if he forgets it. Thanks, you have done me a great favor."

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE, Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

By EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

- Letter-heads,
- Bill-heads,
- Programmes,
- Envelopes,
- Business Cards,
- Postal Cards,
- Tickets,
- Placards,
- Receipts,
- Posters,
- Dodgers,
- Circulars,
- Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

- The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."
- The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."
- Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 25.
- Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1 25.
- What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.
- The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
- Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents, $1 per dozen, postpaid.
- Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.
- Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.
- A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.
- Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.
- Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

The Church and Labor.

Every observing man has noticed that since the formation of the powerful monopolies of the present day, and the accumulation of vast fortunes by individuals, the poor man is gradually pushed out of church, and his place is being occupied by the modern plutocrat, who, if the teachings of Christianity are true, should only be admitted as a penitent to return his ill-gotten wealth to those whom he has robbed of it, every dollar of which represents the wail of a child, the tears of a woman, or the groans of some overworked, underfed, underpaid human being.

Go to the churches throughout this land and whom do you find there? Men who listen to the beautiful words of Christ: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," and then grind out the very life and souls of little children in hot, dusty, ill-ventilated factories for fourteen hours daily, and worse than all an immoral atmosphere, to add to their too often great wealth, that they be enabled to subscribe with more ostentation to the next contribution to convert the heathen. When a workingman sees a hypocrite like this in church and often honored in high places, who can blame him if he becomes skeptical?

The Vanderbilts, Astors, Goulds, and other millionaires who, by the laws, are permitted to deprive the producers of the results of their toil, are all members in good standing in some of our churches. When workingmen see the church receive with adulation and honor men who represent all that is opposite to the teachings of Christ, they rightfully begin to doubt the sincerity of the church. The men who fill the pulpits are but human, and will not run the risk of losing their fat berths by telling the truth. The exceptions that have and do tell the truth have invariably been thrust out of their pulpits and denounced as heretics because they dared take up the cause of the weak against the strong.

Were Christ to come upon earth on any Sunday morning, he would find that in spite of two thousand years of Christianity, the church is no more Christian now than it was then, and he would have to commence his task over again, only he would need a heavier scourge to drive the money-changers out of the temple of God.

The church's attitude towards labor has invariably been hostile. The fact is so well known among labor organizations that whenever the church finds it necessary to employ labor, no effort is made on the part of organized labor to secure the employment. The exception is to do so, and the rule just the contrary.

Almost every paper published in the cause of Christianity is printed in a "scab shop." At nearly every entertainment given for the benefit of the church, where music or other labor is necessary, the lowest dregs are given the preference, because it is cheaper. All that is noble in labor is by the church systematically ignored, and preference given to those wretches whose chief aim in life is to pull down and keep down their fellow-men. Is it any wonder that the intelligent workingmen have left the church and that but little labor is left except the fawning sycophants who accept in humility the crumbs thrown to them in a patronizing way by the divines who fill our churches? These may be bitter words, but they are true.—St. Louis Free Press.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.
Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
838 Howard St., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

- The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.
- Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.
- Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper
- Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.
- Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.
- The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.
- Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

They Grasped the Illustration.

Missionary (lecturing in Kentucky)—Yes, my friends, the people are responding nobly. Why, just think of it, we raised last year, $119,050! Enough to buy 100,000 suits of clothes! (No applause).

Missionary—Yes, my friends, 100,000 suits of clothes! (Waits for applause, but none comes).

Missionary (desperately)—Or 1,190,500 glasses of whisky. (Audience, to a man, rises to its feet and shrieks with excitement).

He Went to Church.

Mother—"John, you went to church as usual to-day?"

Son—"Yes, mother."

Mother—"What was the text?"

Son—"Well, er—you see I didn't get there in time to hear the text."

Mother—"What was the gist of the sermon?"

Son—"I can't tell. You see, mother, I came out just before he got to the gist."

Heroism Rewarded.

Railway official—Is this the man that has just saved the train from destruction?

Several bystanders—Yes, this is the man.

Railway official [with emotion]—My friend, you have saved a hundred human lives and many thousand dollars worth of property. I will see that you are rewarded. [To subordinate]: Wilkins, take up a collection among the passengers.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,
A Discussion between Huxley, Huxley, Muller, and Beville on the Conflict between Geology and Theology.
Price, 50 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; 7 ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60, $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so good and ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per dozen, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle-aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreluctant practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,
Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm, large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

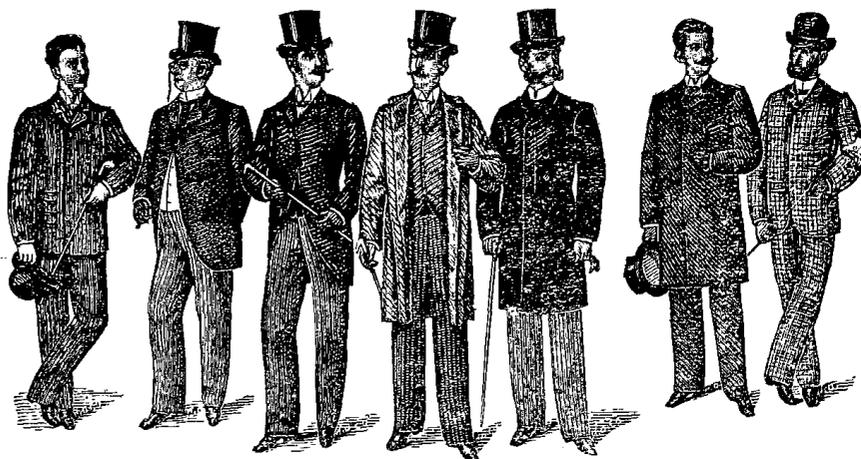

Standard Scientific Works

Works by Alexander Bain.
English Composition and Rhetoric.....	$1.75
Education as a Science.....	1.75
Works by Charles Darwin.
Origin of Species, 2 vols.....	$4.00
Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....	2.00
Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....	4.50
Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....	2.00
Works by J. W. Draper.
History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....	$1.75
Works by Ernst Haeckel.
The History of Creation. 2 vols.....	$5.00
Works by Huxley.
Lay Sermons.....	$1.75
The Advance of Science.....	.25
American Addresses.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin.....	.50
The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.00
Works by John Stewart Mill.
Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....	$4.00
On Liberty.....	1.25
Works by Richard A. Proctor.
Other Worlds than Ours.....	$1.75
Our Place among Infinities.....	1.75
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.75
The Moon.....	2.00
Works by Herbert Spencer.
Studies of Sociology.....	$1.50
Man versus the State.....	.30
First Principles.....	2.00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.00
Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....	2.00
Education.....	1.25
Organic Evolution.....	.75
Works by Andrew D. White.
Paper-Money Inflation in France.....	$.50
The Warfare of Science.....	1.00
Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
Body and Mind.....	$1.50
Responsibility in Mental Disease.....	1.50
Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
Handbook of Household Science.....	$1.75
Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....	1.75
MISCELLANEOUS.
By Carl Marx.
Capital.....	$3.00
By Asa Gray.
Darwiniana.....	$2.00
By L. L. McLaughlin.
Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....	$3.50
By John B. Henck.
Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....	$2.50
By C. Marcel.
Study of Languages.....	$1.25
By Lester F. Ward.
Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....	$5.00
By Frederick Overman.
A Treatise on Metallurgy.....	$5.00
B. F. G. Fairfield.
Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....	$1.25
By W. B. Carpenter.
Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....	$1.25
By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
Evolution.....	$1.50
By Sir John Lubbock.
Origin of Civilization.....	$5.00
By Charles A. Abbott.
A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....	$1.50
By Garrett P. Serviss.
Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....	$1.50
By Nathan Sheppard.
Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....	$1.50
English as She is Spoke.....	.30
English as She is Wrote.....	.30
Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories.....	.30
Comedies for Amateur Acting.....	.30
The Distracted Young Preacher.....	.25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR..... $25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
The Girard College Theft. FROM FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK

OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 0
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 0
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " " Diamond*.....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....	$1.50
Six Months.....	.75
Three Months.....	.50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
7. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
8. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
12. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
13. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
14. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
15. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
16. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
17. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated; John Tyndall.
18. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
19. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
20. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
21. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
22. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apses, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
23. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
24. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
25. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
26. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
27. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
28. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
29. The Study of Words. Richard Chenevix Trench.
30. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
31. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
32. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
33. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
34. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
35. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
36. Geological Sketches. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
37. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
38. Current Discussions in Science. W. M. Williams.
39. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
40. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
41. The Dawn of History. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
42. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
43. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
44. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
45. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
46. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
47. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
48. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
49. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
50. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
51. Illusions. James Sully.
52. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
53. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
54. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
55. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
56. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
57. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
58. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
59. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
60. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
61. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
62. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
63. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30c.
64. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
65. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
66. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
67. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
68. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
69. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
70. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
71. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
72. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
73. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
74. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
75. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
76. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
77. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
78. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
79. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
80. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
81. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
82. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
83. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croon Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffie.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap. ■

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.

OLIVER HUNCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Tory Scheme.

Englishman—Patrick, what do you think of emigration as a cure for the ills of Ireland?

Patrick—Emigration do be all roight, sor, but th' landlords must be th' wans to emigrate.

Truthful Willie.

"William," said the minister, "I saw your father coming from the depot with a string of fish last Monday morning. I hope he didn't catch those fish on Sunday."

"Well, he told ma he did, but between you an' me I think he bought 'em."

Courteous to Every One.

A story-telling friend is very particular in instructing his children to speak politely on all occasions. The result of his teachings is sometimes amusing. This was the case one day when he was putting the youngest of four through his preparatory course. The question was asked: "Who tempted Eve?"

The little fellow, after a moment's thought, with an air of confidence, replied: "It's the gentleman who lives in hell; I've forgotten his name."

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

—FOR—
RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,

Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica, Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all Kidney, Liver, and Stomach Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C.H.WEBB, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, No. 40 O'Farrell Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H. Webb's Hæmony.

Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S. F.
Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres. Sather Banking Co S. F.
Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco.
Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.
James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1.
Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose
Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed and shipped by Express to all parts of the world. Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells, Fargo & Co.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 26.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 28, 1890.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Byron says "there is a pleasure in the pathless woods," and surrounded by these big woods of Oregon and Washington, with the "big waters" also rolling away in splendor and variety, one can enjoy the fleeting days, be it rain or shine. Here are the delights of solitude. We are outside of the world, and nature rules in her wild magnificence. But the world is pressing on even into these vast wildernesses and the flags of commerce from all parts of the world are streaming over the river and the sea. The Columbia, a majestic flood, twelve miles wide, sweeps by Astoria into the mighty ocean. Round about are the wooded shores stretching back into the precipitous hills and mountains, the latter with snowy caps shining above the blue ridges which encircle the horizon with changeful forms, while to the west the immense Pacific glitters with dancing billows. In this framework of beauty and sublimity, where nature's serenest haunts vibrate with the breath of civilization, and the vanishing spirits of the old come face to face with the new ere they flit forever into oblivion, thought has ample room for flight, and the poetic muse can weave its brightest pictures, for where nature is old and civilization is new, there the heart and brain can revel in exuberance of life. Confronting the gigantic forests, along whose vivid green tower the ghostly monuments of uncounted ages, where the wild beast still wanders and mingles his fiery glance with the puff of the engine; and the little cabin and flower garden seem dropped as if by magic in the midst of untraveled scenes, only an hour's journey from the splendid steamships, which make music on the watery path, the dreamer finds a mingling of repose and activity that is simply enchanting. The very beginning of the world is here, and the pulse of yesterday beats in the long shadows of the primeval arches. The shores of Columbia are destined one day to be a great centre of human industry. With a dozen railroads piercing the mountains and piling the wealth of millions of acres upon the wharves of Astoria and Frankfort to be borne by great ships to every part of the globe, these rivers and bays and harbors and rolling ocean will present a gorgeous picture of man's achievements where in the long ago the gods of land first won their victory over the deities of the sea.

Thursday morning, June 12, I was on board the steamer Rival, which outrivals every steamer on the river with the tardiness of its motion. However, I was in no hurry, and while the steamer slowly puffed its way to Grey's River I could dreamily enjoy the magnificent scenery of the brilliant dawn. Hundreds of sails could be seen glinting in the sunrise. The river itself was like a vast ocean as it swept to the sea, and from the boundless sea the eye could wander to the encircling mountains, whose lofty summits, like grand sentinels, sent the first smiles of the sun to the breast of the Pacific. After tumbling along for two or three hours we finally rounded Rocky point and came in view of Stark's point, and while uncertain as to what my course might be for the rest of the day, John Nelson, of Deep River, hove alongside and I was transferred bag and baggage to his skiff in order that by a more expeditious conveyance than the steamer I might reach my destination for the evening. Rounding Stark's point, we plowed our way over Deep river, which is so deep that no plummet has ever sounded its bottom, and nobody knows where it is. It may be that if one should try to find the bottom he would land in sheol. Not desirous of plunging into such theological mysteries, we landed safe at the home of Nelson with John Anderson and family, and there we stayed until evening, when the clans of Freethought began to gather—and some Christians with them—and I gave a lecture on "The Evolutions of a Century." That night I went home with O. Nelson and his family to Crooked Creek, where the "watch-dog's honest bark" always greets the midnight wanderer. It was after twelve o'clock when I got to bed, but the next day I had a long rest, for there was no lecture on Friday night.

On Saturday we went over the bay in the sunny afternoon to Frankfort. Last year this had the humble name of Barney's Point, but that name is not good enough for it now. The boom is come. Our friend W. W. Butts has been burned out, and has sold out. A syndicate is now running the affair, and the future metropolis of Frankfort is laid out with all the magnificence that paper maps can give. Streets are constructed on blue paper through unbroken forest. Three buildings are already under way—Mr. Butts's new hotel and hall, the post-office, and the headquarters of the company. I lectured in the latter, through the kindness of Mr. Thorburn, the agent of the company, Mr. Butts's building not being completed. A pretty good number were present. Of course Frankfort is all in the "mind's eye." It has a good harbor—the best, they say, from Portland to Astoria. If the railroads now planned from Port Townsend and Olympia are ever built, undoubtedly Frankfort will be a splendid business point and the dreams of its projectors will be fulfilled.

I was sorry to find Mr. Butts an invalid, but I trust the bracing atmosphere of the Columbia will bring health again. I hope that with the growth of Frankfort the colors of Freethought will not be lost. As the first discourse ever given in the new city was for liberty, may it not be the last, when the engine and the steamship shall give to its barren heights the splendor of wealth.

Sunday morning, bright and early, on the flowing tide we take our way—all of us—to Anderson's, up Grey's river, where the hospitable board is spread for dinner. After dinner, nearly a score, by boat, proceed four miles further up stream to Walker's, where, after landing, we walk about a mile to the school-house. Last year the Christians attended the lectures in good numbers, but this year hardly one was to be seen. I lectured on "Freethought and Morality." After the lecture, I returned to Anderson's and lectured on Monday evening in the school-house near by, on "Evolution and Creation." The attendance of Liberals was quite encouraging. They came from far and near. Traveling in this country is not very luxurious. There are no roads, and horses and carriages are useless. We must go by boat, or by trail on foot, and the trails are not easily found in the depths of the forest. Friends came dozens of miles by boats to attend the lectures, and thus manifested a deep interest in the cause, which to the lecturer is most inspiring.

In all, four lectures were given, and the world moves here as elsewhere.

A little Freethinker, about two months old, I guess, by this time, has joined the ranks of the Ahlberg's, and means to have a mind of its own. I was glad to see these Liberal friends again.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Foster and Mr. James, who were at Crooked Creek last year, have changed residence, and are now on Grey's river. A new house is in course of construction. At present, they live in a tent on the banks of the river. I have a cordial invitation to the new house which I hope to accept in the future. These friends would as soon think of going without a dinner as not to attend a Freethought lecture when there is opportunity.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Anderson and the little girl Lena make their home a most hospitable fireside for the Pilgrim. Rain or shine the hours flow by without dullness. Friends come and go, and the laden table is always ready. There is plenty to talk about and day and evening blend with "a feast of reason and a flow of soul."

To-day, June 18, I am at my old camping-place, O. Nelson's on Crooked Creek, where the bees are humming, and the honey is plenteous, and the strawberries are big; the ranks of the forest stand in green and gray, and the winding creek swells and recedes as the tides sweep in and out. It is a little cosy corner of the world; in this June season, as lovely a place as one could find, with glimpses of the bay and ocean through shifting trees, the verdant expanses flecked with flowers of red and white and golden hue. Miss Ella's dolls, now seventeen in number, are quite cosmopolitan in aspect. The Japanese, the celestial, the Ethiopian, and the fair-haired Caucasian, find a home in these Liberal ranks. Over them, on the walls, are the portraits of Ingersoll, Bennett, and Paine; and Freethought books, freighted with the poetry and philosophy of every age, meet the eye and charm the imagination. The days of work mingle with days of play, and the week becomes a kind of festival era for those who believe in a good time coming.

The Freethinkers about Grey's river are true to their flag, but the Christians seem to be afraid to show themselves. They have found out, probably, that they have no particular reason for the faith that is in them, and they don't want it disturbed by any radical inquiries, and they have concluded to stay at home.

Among our friends who have joined in this campaign with those already mentioned, are Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Miller, who for years have been identified with Freethought, John Anderson, of Deep River, Peter Nelson, James Hanson, Wm. Feustel, Thos. Jensen, the Whitford brothers, Harry Hill, John Lind, etc.

Lewis Olson was not able to be at the lectures on account of hard work on the Columbia after the salmon, but he never fails to lend a hand.

Feustal was with me on the steamer coming back, the fated Rival, for which I waited three hours amidst the weltering waters ere it put in an appearance. Feustal was on his way to meet Mrs. Feustal at Astoria to see his baby, just twelve days old, which I also had the pleasure of seeing on Friday morning, before it took its first journey to Grey's river. It weighed eleven pounds at birth—good pioneer weight. It is a boy, and will, no doubt, hold its own for Freethought. All hail to the new arrival.

At Astoria, I meet Wm. Chance, Utzinger, and others who keep this post ready for future work whenever the fates shall be kindly enough disposed to give an opportunity. Astoria is growing fast and has great promise; $200,000 has been raised for a railroad and it is expected to be built this summer.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

AN INJUSTICE POINTED OUT.

Last Monday's "Chronicle" contains a notice of the Freethought Society's meeting on the previous evening, in which these words occur:

"At the meeting of the Freethought Society at Union Square Hall last night a petition to the president of the United States for the pardon of Moses Harman was circulated. Harman was publisher of 'Lucifer,' a Kansas Freethought paper. In addition to Freethought he went into freedom largely in various other directions. Among other things he published a communication on love which was very free with certain terms commonly considered unfit for polite ears. He was convicted at the last April term of the United States District Court for sending improper matter through the mails, and was sentenced to five years' imprisonment with hard labor in the penitentiary."

It is quite true that copies of such a petition were circulated, and we hope they will be returned to the office of FREETHOUGHT with thousands of signatures appended. The "Chronicle's" reference to the matter is slightly flippant, but it could not have more truthfully stated the case, or put it in such a form that the enormity of the injustice involved would be more conspicuous. Moses Harman has been guilty of the offense of publishing a communication which was "very free" with certain terms commonly considered unfit for "polite ears!" That is his crime. His punishment is five years' imprisonment with hard labor. How many newspaper publishers would be out of jail if they got five years for every word considered unfit for polite ears? If that rule were enforced the editor of the "Chronicle" and nearly every other daily would be serving a sentence so long that they could not hope to live until its expiration. The press reports of scandals and police court examinations are as offensive to polite ears as the Markland letter, and a thousand times more demoralizing to those into whose hands they are likely to fall. Again, the "Chronicle's" advertisements (and the other dailies are tarred with the same stick) contribute directly to immorality. Papers that advertise the names, addresses, merits, and business of prostitutes, day after day for so much per line, are not in a position, before a fair-minded public, to cast either stones or slurs at Moses Harman.

But whose polite ear is it, anyway, that is used as a sort of moralometer whereby to test the mailability of literature? Where does the said polite ear reside? In slavery days it was a sufficient answer to the abolitionist to inquire if he desired that his daughter should marry a nigger. Later on the daughter appeared as a literary gauge, and the average intelligent jury would convict a man of obscenity if he had published or circulated anything not adapted to her maiden mind. "Is such matter fit for your innocent daughters' ears?" was the question by which the prosecuting attorney reached the sentiment of the jurors, first by assuming that the said jurors had daughters, secondly that such daughters were of course innocent, i.e., ignorant, and thirdly that, if not adapted to the necessities of immature girlies, the matter in question was beyond doubt unfit for publication. "Polite ears" at that time merely closed themselves, but now they have deposed the maiden censor, and to offend them is to incur a penalty of five years in the penitentiary. The time is near at hand, we are fully convinced, when there will come a rebellion not only against the supervision of youthful female experts, but also against polite ears acting in the same capacity. There is something wrong when scandal, slander, blackmail, lottery advertisements, and a Directory of the Demimonde will bring one man to a ten-story building and an embossed private office with his monogram in gilt on the walls, while working in the interests of abused wives will land another in the penitentiary. The injustice is so conspicuous that we wonder the proprietor of the daily paper does not protest against it himself.

THE TRUTH FROM A CLERGYMAN.

It is so seldom that a preacher is found who has the courage or the honesty to tell the exact truth about the Bible, that when such a one appears he deserves the greatest encouragement. This remark is called out now by the lecture of Dr. Harcourt at the Howard-street Methodist church last Sunday evening. The subject of the clergyman's discourse was "The Mistakes of Moses"—not an original phrase, but a suggestive one nevertheless. In the course of his lecture he said:

"There is no good to come to the world by studying the Bible with your eyes closed, no matter how pious the expression of your face. We live in a reading, thinking age, and few are willing to receive 'original packages,' even with the brand of the church upon them, without an explanation. I will say more. I do not believe that God, who inspired holy men of old to write the books and tracts which go to make up the Bible, ever meant that we should give our approval of all the doings therein recorded, nor do I believe it to be the duty or work of the ministers of the gospel to pass over, cover up, or whitewash the unsightly things that are found therein."

It is high time that Christians were apprised of the facts contained in Dr. Harcourt's words. They have been studying the Bible long enough with their eyes closed, or opened only to such portions as they wish to believe. It would perhaps be more appropriate to say that they have not "studied" it all; they have merely read and swallowed it. There may be some good in the Bible; there is said to be good in everything; but if such good exists there, it is so overshadowed by the bad that the beneficial effect is lost when both are taken together. If a thing appeals to reason, and upon examination is found to be true, it needs no authority and no inspiration to recommend it to sensible people. And if it have not these qualities, neither authority nor inspiration can help it.

Dr. Harcourt's statement that God inspired the "holy men of old to write the books and tracts which go to make up the Bible" is of course mere clerical assumption, from which the best of preachers are not wholly free. All clergymen have a habit of fortifying their own opinions by placing God on their side of the question. But if God inspired the writing of the Bible he either inspired the whole of it or only a part. He has not told us which part is inspired and which uninspired, and when ecclesiastics use their discrimination or prejudice in deciding that question they proceed exactly as they would with any other book. Their claim for the inspiration of the portions which they set apart as the word of God rests upon their own judgment and their sense of what ought to be true. Like every other work the Bible will be put to the test of experience and utility, and as much of it as is good will be preserved, not because it is inspired but because it is useful. That which is not good will be discarded whether it is inspired or not.

When the clergy generally adopt this view, which follows logically from the position of Dr. Harcourt, the Bible will be removed from its present position as a Christian fetish.

IT IS NOW READY.

After numerous delays which some how or other always interfere in the publication of any book, the pamphlet, previously announced, by Samuel P. Putnam is out and ready for mailing. The title is "My Religious Experience," and the work tells how the author became a Christian, how he entered the pulpit, and how, after many struggles and misgivings, he cut loose from the church, passed through the various intermediate stages, and finally became an unqualified Materialist. A more interesting and useful "confession" never came from the press. The typographical work is excellent, and the price, 25 cents, makes this pamphlet readily accessible. We hope to be compelled to issue a second edition within six weeks from date.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, Sunday evening, June 29, at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, will be addressed by Hon. F. B. Perkins, subject, "Morality and Religion—What Are They?"

FAIR WARNING!

This will be the last week for subscribers far in arrears unless they are heard from promptly. The virtue of patience has been exercised until it has become an expensive vice. Renew, or down comes the guillotine.

We call attention to Secretary McKenley's article in this week's FREETHOUGHT on the "Pacific Laborers' Union, No. 1." This is the largest union on the coast, and the quietest. There is no splurge about it. Its members and officers are laboring men. They are not looking for fat positions with a large salary, but for a chance to work with pick and shovel for two dollars a day. There is no politics or religion in the organization, no elaborate scheme for readjusting the relations of mankind in advance of the natural workings of evolution. What each member desires is a job, and when he gets it he will "hold it down" till the work is done. These men realize that under present conditions they have but one weapon in their hands for which the politicians have any respect, and that is the ballot. The wise politician, therefore, will not ignore the Laborers' Union, but will so frame his policy that the genuine hard-handed son of toil shall not be left unconsidered in the economy of municipal affairs,

Our judges are assuming extraordinary powers of jurisdiction in the matter of admitting foreigners to citizenship. This account is from a Sacramento paper:

Judge J. M. Walling, who is presiding in Judge Armstrong's court, certainly has the courage of his convictions. He is a temperance man, an advocate of temperance principles, and he don't care who knows it. Yesterday a German came up before him as an applicant for citizenship. The man admitted that he did not know who is governor of California, and in reply to a query as to who is president replied:

"Vell, I dink it is Harrison."

"Do you know who make our laws?" inquired the judge.

"I dinks it vas state officers," was the reply.

"What is your business?"

"I am a saloon-keeper."

"Do you belong to an organization known as the League of Freedom?"

"Yes."

"Is it not one of the objects of that organization to fight all laws distasteful to saloon-keepers?"

"Yes, if the laws do not suit 'em," was the reply.

"Well," said the judge, "I guess I will not admit you to citizenship." And he didn't.

A man who has never heard of Waterman, governor of California, is in an unenlightened state. One who thinks Harrison instead of John Wanamaker is our chief executive makes an egregious error. The individual who opposes all laws inimical to his business is justly chargeable with deep-seated self-interest. But the judge who refuses naturalization to a foreigner for either of the foregoing reasons is more discreditable to the country as an official than the applicant could be as a citizen.

COLONEL INGERSOLL condemns vivisection. "It is," he says, "the inquisition, the hell of science. All the cruelty which the human, or rather the inhuman, heart is capable of inflicting is in this one word. Below this there is no depth. This word lies like a coiled serpent at the bottom of the abyss. We can excuse in part the crimes of passion. We take into consideration the fact that when a man's brain is on fire the soul rushes to a crime, but what excuse can there be for a man who deliberately, with an unaccelerated pulse, with the calmness of John Calvin at the murder of Servetus, seeks with curious and cunning knives, in the living, quivering flesh of a dog, for all the throbbing nerves of pain?" There is certainly a cruelty about vivisection which the resultant benefits to mankind cannot justify. It is too much like vicarious atonement.

THE miracle of St. Patrick driving the snakes from Ireland is explained by Mr. C. A. Pieux, a linguist of Redwood, whose sanity is questioned, but whose genius is unmistakable. St. Patrick, he says, was not an Irishman, but a Frenchman, who was terribly addicted to "booze" while in France. After having reached the delirium tremens stage he was banished to Ireland, where he saw nothing but snakes on all sides, which he was kept busy fighting and driving out of the country. His forced abstinence in Ireland at that early stage of its history cured him of his malady, and with his convalescence he imagined he had driven out the snakes, and returned to France fully cured in mind and body, but firm in the hallucination of his great historical snake act. An explanation more lucid than this would be too reasonable to be credited.

THE Portland Oregonian, of June 23, reports: "Samuel P. Putnam, editor of FREETHOUGHT, and ex-president of the American Secular Union, addressed, last night, quite a large audience at the corner of First and Madison streets. The Liberals of this city and vicinity are growing in numbers, and will make their influence felt at the next session of the legislature. Mr. Putnam is an able speaker, and at times he is very eloquent. His plea for the total separation of church and state was strong and convincing. The Liberals of Oregon are already making preparations for a grand State Convention to be held here October next."

THE Portsmouth, Ohio, Secular Union has passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we as an auxiliary and part of the American Secular Union, plead for the session of the next annual congress in this, our native city."

Our Ohio friends evidently mean business. Secretary Will S. Andres writes to FREETHOUGHT: "As a Secular Union we are making a stir in this locality. We propose to be not only seen but heard." Perhaps Portsmouth would prove an excellent place for the next Congress of the national organization.

It is feared that the Nationalist club of San Francisco will hold no more receptions. At a business meeting last week a committee appointed to examine the books of the club reported a shortage in the accounts of the financial secretary and charged Mr. Haskell with embezzlement. The organization is deeply in debt, the president, Mrs. Addie L. Ballou, contemplates resigning, and scandalous revelations are foreshadowed. The business meeting broke up in a violent row.

THE indifference of some of our subscribers as regards the payment of their subscription is painful. We are reduced to the alternative of either assuming the expense of letting the paper run and waiting for them to experience a quickened conscience; or of removing their names from the list and losing both their dues and their good will. If delinquents will kindly favor us with advice in the matter we will act accordingly.

A PARTY of two hundred and fifty Scandinavian converts to Mormonism landed at New York last week. They were en route for Utah, and if upon arrival they find that the Mormons have no churches left, they can take advantage of the educational facilities afforded by the new Edmunds act, which confiscates Mormon church property for the benefit of public schools.

AT a recent Bible reading of Baptists at San Bernardino, Rev. Dr. Reed took the ground that the old Sabbath law of the Decalogue was abrogated. If it was still binding, he said, it was so as to the day named, the seventh, which is Saturday. Quite true, but where, then, is the authority for observing the first day of the week?

THE new Lick Academy of Sciences, in process of erection, is becoming one of the most conspicuous structures on Market street. It is now taller than the Flood Building. But the ridiculous abbreviation "Cal. Academy of Sciences" should be corrected. The building might as well be described as the gift of Jas.

ESMERALDA county, Nevada, has but one church edifice, and that is a Chinese joss house. There is no preacher of the Christian gospel in the county, and only one Sunday school, which is conducted by the district attorney. Missionary societies will please take notice.

A WOMAN was hanged for murder last week at Elko, Nevada.

It is a barbarous thing to hang a woman, but there is as much justification for it as there is for the hanging of a man. Her victim is as dead as though slain by one of the opposite sex.

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL is to give the Fourth of July oration at Myrtle Point, Coos county, Or., and will lecture in Coos county and the Willamette valley during July and August. Those desiring her service may address her in care of this office.

If any object in clerical clothes is seen rushing westward with the speed of a comet, and frightening the residents of the interior states, let no one be deceived. It is not the Rev. Dr. Barrows coming back to San Francisco to face his accusers.

ON account of pressing engagements, S. P. Putnam is obliged to change and postpone some of his appointments. Lectures will be given in Tacoma and other points later in the season.

OBSERVATIONS.

The San Francisco Freethought Society's meeting last Sunday night opened with a good audience and a piano solo by Miss Annie Lenont. Then Vice-President Eastman, in a neat speech adapted to the occasion, introduced Mr. John M. Days as the orator of the evening. Mr. Days spoke on the "Eight Hour Question," his address being more a history of the movement than an argument for the uses and benefits of short days. He said that the eight hour question sprang from the late Rebellion. The war drew from the producing forces of the country and stimulated invention, so that when the soldiers returned from the field they were met by labor-saving machinery whereby one man or even one child could do the work which formerly required several hands. In 1865 a convention of trades was held which declared for eight hours as a day's work. One Alexander Kennedy led a similar movement in California, and we had two trades, carpenters and masons, working eight hours. In 1868 the day was legally fixed by the state legislature at eight hours, but was soon disregarded. Mr. Days here called attention to the fact that the longest day's work is poorest paid, as observe the difference in the remuneration of bankers and farmers. Ralston, who built the Palace Hotel, was the first to break up the eight-hour day, and it has not been since resumed. So universal is the disregard of the law that even on the new city hall building it is not observed. Mr. Days recommended that the mayor, the auditor, and the city and county attorney be indicted as a test to see whether the law can be enforced.

The address was one of the ablest ever made before the Freethought Society. It was also one of the longest, showing that the legal restriction of time does not necessarily apply to those who labor otherwise than with their hands.

During the intermission the Chair presented the petition for the pardon of Moses Harman, copies of which were circulated among the audience, and made an excellent plea for signatures.

It is perhaps needless to say that Mr. P. Healy was the lecturer's protagonist. Mr. Healy argued that an eight-hour law was against freedom, and could not be enforced on Americans. The people rebel against that kind of restrictions. The eight-hour day might sometime be adopted, but not through statute law. It would come through co-operation among workers. If the legislature had the power to prescribe the length of a day's work, it could also fix the rate of wages. Mr. Healy objected to legal interference in the matter.

Mr. Nye followed, but I have forgotten what he said.

Mr. Days replied to Mr. Healy that all reduction in hours in England had been accomplished by legislation, and must take the same course in America.

Next Sunday evening, in a lecture under the title of "Morality and Religion—What Are They?" the Hon. F. B. Perkins will endeavor to point out that morality is in no sense dependent upon religion, or even related to it. This lecture will probably be the last of the course, as the society contemplates an adjournment over the summer months. I greatly regret this, because valuable material will thus be lost for my leading "Observation."

I PHILOSOPHIZE.

Every man should be able to give a reason for the hope that is in him, and should be prepared to explain his conduct when he does good as well as when he does evil. To do good for the sake of good, or to do right "because it is right," is not philosophical. Self-denial is unnatural, and therefore unwise unless some benefit results to the self-denier sufficient to pay for the inconvenience. Life, as far as I can see, has no object, but it may have its uses. Uses for what? To give the means of happiness to its possessor. One thing is not "higher" than another. A handful of mud from the bottom of the bay is as "high" as the brain of the philosopher. The latter is merely a more complex mass, and has attributes not belonging to mud. What we call intelligence, as I view it, is a result of complexity. Intelligence is not put into the brain, but is the recognizable manifestation of the working of the brain. There is no design in it, but a natural process. Therefore we are not required to indulge in sentimental admiration for genius. We need only to recognize it as a natural outcome of prior conditions.

Life having no object, and when rightly viewed no high aim or romance to the sane person, what shall he do with it? Spend it riotously? That will not pay, as witness the wrecks on the shores of dissipation. Shall we practice self-denial as regards the pleasures of the world? Yes, if it gives us happiness, in which case we have used life to the point of its highest productivity, and in denying ourselves one pleasure we have achieved a greater. The monk in his cell, the anchorite in his cave, the priest among lepers, contemplates his reward and is happier, or thinks he is, than he would be elsewhere. Otherwise he would not be there. Life has no virtues and no duties as generally understood. To do that which we call virtuous is to do what experience has taught us brings most happiness, and therefore pays us in the end. It is no more praiseworthy than the act of paying our board in advance when we have no credit. To practice what goes under the name of virtue is simply to prepare conditions for selfish benefits. The duty idea is a superstition. If a person would be happy otherwise than in the performance of what he terms his duty, he would not perform it. He has only followed his ruling inclination.

The question arises, What is life for? It is for nothing. We possess legs adapted to locomotion, and use them for that purpose. We have life adapted to the pursuit of happiness. Let us so employ it.

Gentle reader, do you ask what I am giving you? I answer: If I understand the subject it is the doctrine of Egoism, the philosophical side of Anarchism. It appears to me to be a valuable line of thought for those who desire to get at the main spring of human action, though at the end of the investigation they are likely to emerge from the same hole they went in at, and to find things the same as ever upon the surface.

The Nationalist badge-pin, a fac-simile of which has been forwarded to me from Los Angeles, has a device described as "a Dove, representing the Spirit of Love, descending from above, to announce a new Era of Peace." Mr. B. G. Haskell wore one the other night when he shied his hat violently across the hall and desired to thrash Otto Sinz for reporting a deficiency in his accounts. It is perhaps owing to the Era of Peace that Mr. Haskell did not attempt to realize his desires on the spot, but instead discharged the examining committee and appointed another with a blind man as a member. Sad it is to reflect that Mr. Haskell's club is not maturing according to its bloom.

From reading Putnam's "Religious Experience" I conclude that the Secular Pilgrim has a good claim for a full pension. While in the army he contracted religion in acute form, from which he had not previously suffered. The same afterwards became chronic, and so remained up to about the year 1878, during which period he was incapacitated for clear and rational thought. He is still afflicted with a recurrence of the title "Reverend," and some traces of the parsonitis are at present noticeable, it is said, in his style of oratory. He is also given, at times of excitement, to the use of ecclesiastical terms, such as "damn it," "god almighty," and other phrases evidently acquired at the theological seminary where the mental disabilities contracted landed him at the close of the war. If a grateful Republic pensions those who lost an arm or a leg, how can it overlook the claim of a man who lost his head for ten years? I pause for a reply.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

John Baptiste Villancour, a Roman Catholic priest, has been committed to the Stockton insane asylum from Los Angeles. —There were 132 deaths in San Francisco last week against 90 for the corresponding week of 1889. —Many bogus dollars are in circulation in this city. The counterfeit has the right feeling and a pronounced ring, but it falls below the standard weight. —The molders' strike is in its seventeenth week, with no prospect of settlement. Work at the foundries is seriously hampered. —About $160,000 has been subscribed by the citizens of San Francisco to be offered as an inducement to some railroad company to bring a competing transcontinental line into this city. —There are loud complaints that the census enumeration in San Francisco has been inefficient. Many other cities make the same charge. —Charles Dudley Warner, the well-known author, is in San Francisco. —The recent fatal fight at the Golden Gate Athletic Club has brought boxing matches into deserved dispute, and may result in their total suppression. —Hon. T. V. Cator, of the Nationalist Club, is to be San Francisco's next Fourth of July orator. —The suppression of gambling and lotteries in Chinatown is reported to have led to a general stagnation of trade in that quarter, but the games are being worked in other parts of the city. —J. D. McCombs, recently convicted of misappropriating a large amount of the Seattle relief fund while secretary of the relief committee, has been sentenced to five years in the penitentiary.

The president has appointed the following commissioners-at-large to the World's Fair at Chicago: Gaston W. Allen, of New York in place of Edwin H. Ammidown, declined, with Louis Fitzgerald, of New York, as alternate; William M. Lindsay of Kentucky, with Patrick J. Walsh, of Georgia, as alternate. —All the Omaha, Neb., papers last Sunday printed an address of the State Business Men's and Bankers' Association of Nebraska, in which it is declared that in view of the results apparent from the attempts heretofore made to enforce prohibition in neighboring states the incorporation of such an amendment in the Constitution of Nebraska will be inimical to the best interests of the people of the state and disastrous to business affairs. The address is signed by over one thousand bankers and business men in the principal towns of the state, but neither wholesale nor retail liquor dealers are included. —President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor, and Powderly, general master workman of the Knights of Labor, are having a wordy war. Gompers charges that Powderly is working in the interests of "scab" labor. —The Central Labor Union at New York has split, the Socialistic members being compelled to withdraw. —Miss Bessie G. Robertson of Aurora, Ill., is the champion census enumerator. Her average has been 262 names per day. This means that she has earned between $7 and $8 a day. —A Mormon missionary was severely whipped and then coated with tar at Warrentown, Ga., last week. —The Senate, on Saturday, June 21, passed the Edmunds bill providing that all funds and property belonging to the Mormon church shall be devoted to the use and benefit of the common schools of Utah. —The census returns show that New York has a population of about 1,800,000.

THE ninth of Dr. Andrew D. White's new chapters in the "Warfare of Science" will be published in the Popular Science Monthly for July. Its subject is "The Antiquity of Man and Prehistoric Archaeology," and it tells how step by step "thunderstones" or "heaven axes" came to be recognized as flint implements of human make, and how their discovery together with bones of men and of extinct animals in the drift established the very early appearance of man upon the earth.

PROGRESS OF THE WORK IN WASHINGTON.

The following extract from the editorial columns of the Lynden Pioneer Press is the best commentary on actual results accomplished by the Washington Secular Union.

A request has been made that the Press publish an article upon the subject, "What Religion Shall be Taught in our Public Schools?" It is not deemed advisable to open up such a field of controversy through a local paper. The Secular Union has succeeded in having the reading of scripture, prayer, and singing discontinued in our public schools, and the Press don't purpose to be drawn into the controversy at this stage either upon one side or the other.

In many public schools in the state, religious exercises and instruction are persisted in, in defiance of the law.

That trusty champion of Liberalism, Peter Selde, of Davenport, Lincoln county, protested against the teachers enforcing recitation by his children of the Lord's prayer, or the use of any prayers in the public schools, but the teacher persists, in defiance of remonstrance.

The average pious teacher seems to be of the opinion that so far as religious exercises are concerned, they will be sustained by the church in defying the law.

Our worthy president, R. Winsor, has made a brief, giving the law points, and sent it, accompanied with a most kindly letter, to that teacher, urging obedience to the Constitution, and avoidance of litigation, with its attendant heart-burnings and dissensions.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

I was about to return funds contributed to the "defense fund," when we received reliable information that the state university, in this city, has regular chapel services—Bible reading, prayer, sermons, hymns, etc.

Our president and some members of our board of directors will visit the university during its sessions, so as to proceed on sure evidence, and we will then enter protest, and furnish the faculty with brief, so they cannot plead their violation of the law is from lack of being notified of its requirements. An act in relation to the establishment and government of the University of the state of Washington (page 516 to 521, Session Laws, 1889-90), provides:

Section 15. The fund of the university shall be derived from the proceeds of sales of lands donated by the United States for the endowment of the university, and the admission and tuition fees of the students, and such appropriations as the legislature may make.

Section 21. The sum of ten thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, etc.

No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction, or the support of any religious establishment.—Constitution, Art. I. Sec. 2.

Doubtless we shall have a fierce contest, for the religionists will rally all their forces to defend chapel exercises in the university. But if a big fight, it will surely result in our obtaining a big victory, for reason, right, and all the law are all on our side.

OUR PRESSING, PRESENT NEED.

The one only great trouble is lack of funds; despite the most careful, rigid economy, we are miserably hindered for lack of means. I have hesitated to publish the list of contributions, because of dislike to expose how meager have been the receipts, and hoped each day the amount would be swelled to more creditable proportions. Publication cannot be delayed beyond next week.

The apathetic and careless will please take due notice, and govern themselves accordingly. Your contributions may necessarily be small, then the less reason for withholding them. If all will do the little they can without inconvenience or real self-sacrifice, they will save much anxiety, weary care, and cruel overburdening of the workers; and funds absolutely needed to insure successful prosecution of the work will be on hand.

TAXING CHURCH PROPERTY.

Church property throughout the state is not being assessed as the Constitution demands. I have prepared a letter to the governor urging his issuing special instructions to all auditors and assessors throughout the state, insisting on their performance of their duties in compliance with the requirements of the Constitution; but delayed forwarding it, under advice of our astute President R. Winsor, until we can accompany the letters with evidence that in many parts of the state the assessors are wilfully or ignorantly omitting to assess church property, thus occasioning loss to the revenues of the state, and increasing the burden of taxation on other property.

I have written to our vice-presidents to interview the assessors of their respective districts and write me the reasons given for such noncompliance with the law. I am embarrassed and hindered because in so many places Liberals have failed to enroll as members of the W. S. U., and no vice-president has been elected with whom correspondence can be maintained on this and many other important matters.

Let every Liberal in Washington who really desires the cessation of religious exercises and instruction in our public schools, the just taxation of all church property, and the abolition of compulsory Sunday laws (who has not already done so) give evidence of their sincerity by immediate enrollment in the ranks of the W. S. U. and election of a vice-president to be the executive officer of the state society for their precinct.

Is this asking too much? Why should not all share the burden, since all will be benefited by the results? Please answer at once.

C. B. REYNOLDS, Sec. W. S. U.

THE PACIFIC COAST LABORERS' UNION, NO. 1.

Born of a necessity, bred in the spirit of fellowship, growing in brotherly love and usefulness daily, is in brief the history of this body of our fellow citizens. How often the expression, "workingmen," is used in this particular instead of fellow citizen conveys the truth of the situation to-day; the workingman forgetting that he is a citizen too often and deeming himself of a class that has no responsibilities in citizenship. If there is one truth more potent than another, that it is the purpose of this Union to maintain and emphasize, it is the responsibility of citizenship; the fundamental basis of which is that men are associated together to secure and maintain that liberty of action which in a state of barbarism is unknown; by which all individuals will develop to their greatest capacity.

To this end was the struggle of 1776, expressed in the Declaration of Independence, which, like many other promises made on holidays, are broken on every other day in the year; and that Declaration in particular, because enough citizens do not awake to the full realization of the importance of citizenship; holding as it does within itself the possibilities of all the relief needed by the workingman to-day.

The necessity which officiated at the birth of this Union was the utter indifference of public officials to the pleadings of so many fellow citizens for those opportunities guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, which is made null and void by the various state constitutions, viz., The natural liberty to exercise their faculties for their development and existence, which is denied by denying the natural opportunity to labor that is necessary to all creatures to exist; without which, all prating about "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" is a farce, rendered so by the selfish relic of barbarism, crystallized into the state constitutions, which makes money and property of more value than human life—the ancient battle between conservatism and progress—the struggle between property and personality, a relic of the struggle, a phase only of which was settled in the late war, wherein personality conquered. As this crystallization of thought is manifest in our laws, the importance of decisive action on the part of those who believe in the sacredness of the person became necessary; consequently, the late results of combined action in demanding a measure of the liberties to be restored to the hungry multitude proved that only in combined and persistent effort in these demands could any success be expected. Therefore, on the seventh of March last, on the victorious field of the sand lot, where was won a victory for personality over property, seven hundred citizens assembled and enrolled themselves to stand by the truths above stated in a persistent effort to crystallize into law, statute, constitution, and rule of action, the fact that maintenance of human liberty is of more importance than property or than life itself; which can only be accomplished by the individual realizing the importance of citizenship, and his responsibilities in assuming its privileges.

To this end three months have seen a phenomenal growth in numbers. From seven hundred its roll has increased to nearly twenty-five hundred. The measures of benefit derived to humanity at large by reason of such support and adherence have been infinitely greater than any physical benefit to its immediate members by its action in securing observation of the Eight Hour law in all city departments; in the pending measures which it is pushing before Congress for the enlarging of the liberties of municipalities, whereby they may be freed from the shackles of the foreign bond holder by borrowing credit from the central government. These are among its many measures of progress.

The moral benefit to the community and its own members by the high stand it has taken on the disgraceful slogging matches, and against intemperance, is a matter of record. Its members, having heretofore formed the rank and file of the various precinct clubs and afforded power to the political bosses to make a showing of strength, concluded that they would act for themselves in formulating a basis of voting rules, and passed the following:

Resolved: "That no member of any political party club can be a member of the Union;" which means in substance that they are going to vote for themselves and what they want, and not for what some one else wants, and that in consequence of their wanting the mental, moral, and physical elevation of humanity, they believe that it will result in a different rule of action and a new constitution for our country, more in keeping with the national constitution. With this end in view, that never in the history of California may again be seen the sad, disgraceful spectacle of hungry men appealing for access to mother earth to maintain their existence from which they are now excluded by selfish property laws; in thus stepping out of the beaten path of trade organizations they believe they are only the vanguard of a large detachment which is soon to follow, and then, laborers, the vast majority of citizens, will not be pleading with a very small minority for the privilege of working only eight hours; but, rather, no licenses will be granted, to carry on business, that does not prohibit labor longer than is necessary to properly serve the public. Grasping, cut-throat competition will be given another blow, and other progressive moves, ad infinitum. May the army soon begin to march is the sincere wish of

Yours for humanity,

E. D. MCKENLEY.

A NEW SECT DISCOVERED.

A correspondent of the "Chronicle," under date of June 19, writes from Los Angeles that George P. Hinde, Walter Lockwood Thales, and William Weiderholtz were arraigned before United States Commissioner Van Dyke for refusing to answer the questions of a census enumerator. Their bail was fixed at $100, which they furnished. These three men are leaders of a sect which is located near Anaheim in Orange county. They are vegetarians and have some of the most peculiar and anomalous ideas.

It was about fifteen years ago that George P. Hinde, an Englishman by birth, located near Anaheim. He gave it out that he was desirous of demonstrating that man could live without animal food—that he could exist alone on nuts and vegetables. The result has been that he and Thales have gathered around them a colony of about fifteen, most of whom are men, although women are admitted to the faith. All property is held in common. It is vested in Thales, and upon the records he appears as owner of about ten acres of land which belongs to the sect.

They raise considerable produce, for which there is always a market, and in this way make their living. In the past they have lived quietly with and among themselves, and public attention has never been directed to them until now.

At present Walter Lockwood Thales appears as leader of these peculiar people. He is an Englishman, like Hinde. His phrenological development shows that his mental and moral faculties are deficient, while his animal faculties are largely developed. It is perhaps well that such men as he should live on a vegetable diet.

Thales was approached by a "Chronicle" correspondent, but was very loth to talk.

"What are the principles of your faith?" was asked.

"It is contrary to our principles to give any information of this kind. In fact, we are strictly forbidden from doing so. What would it profit to know our principles? They do not concern you. We are merely making experiments in matters of diet and life. As soon as these experiments have reached a state from which we can draw conclusions, you and the world shall be given the benefit of our experience."

"But if you do not let your experiments become known as they progress how do you acquire converts?"

"We do not want converts, or at least do not seek them. Those who come among us and accept our faith we sometimes take, but not always."

"It is charged that you do not respect the sanctity of the marriage tie and that you advocate free love."

"Whoever says that lies. We are pure, lead pure lives, and are learning lessons of purity. By our lives and our faith we are trying to show what a pure life, led and followed by pure motives, would result in. We ourselves do not know the end yet. As I said before, we are experimenters. As far as answering the questions of the census enumerator is concerned, it was merely a matter of conscience with us. What was asked of us was a personal matter which no one can demand of us except Jehovah. We are not citizens of the United States, but of the world. We do not and never have voted. We merely live in Southern California because the locality is specially adapted to our experiment. We recognize the right of no one to make laws for us except the great Jehovah. He did not place man on the earth to rule. What he intended was for every man to be governed through life by his own conscience, properly educated.

"We do not recognize the right of any king, emperor, priest, or leader to rule over us. Each man governs himself through the dictates of his own conscience. We are not like the Mormons. We do not make laws in defiance of the laws of your government, nor do we advise any one to break your laws. What we want is to be left to conduct our experiments in peace."

All three of the prisoners announce their determination not to answer the census questions. They will undoubtedly be held by the United States commissioner, and in the end receive the maximum punishment of the law at the hands of Judge Ross.

The statements made about this community are vague and contradictory. It is known that they are all vegetarians, and the extent to which they carry their fanaticism in this line can be estimated from the fact that some time ago they got into trouble through their burning a number of bee hives belonging to their neighbors. They regarded honey as an animal product and proposed to stop its manufacture by bees for the use of men.

It is said that their objection to the census is based on scriptural authority. In the twenty-fourth chapter of 2 Samuel an account is given of the taking of the census in Israel and Judea by David and the punishment which followed in the shape of a pestilence.

ADVICE TO THE W. C. T. U.

Among the resolutions adopted at the May convention of the San Diego W. C. T. U., held in Fallbrook, were the following:

Resolved, That whereas in view of the fact that in the schools of our country so much is read and talked that is impure, therefore,

Resolved, That we think it a necessity that more care should be taken in the selection of teachers, and we also advise that the board of education insist upon the religious principles of teachers as well as thoroughness of education.

The above morceau of female politics is taken from the San Diegan of the 12th inst.

It is to be regretted, Mr. Editor, that the ladies of the W. C. T. U. party had not studied the constitution of the United States before they went into politics. Without desiring to be intrusive or obtrusive, I beg leave to inform them that the fundamental law of the land is law. By reading the constitution above mentioned they will find the following unambiguous language: "No public money or property shall be appropriated or applied to any religious worship, exercise, or instruction."

Our public schools are sustained by public money. To insist that they shall become avenues of religious instruction is unconstitutional. To make religious belief a qualification for the office of teacher in these schools violates another part of the constitution which says that no one shall be disqualified for any office in the United States on account of religious belief.

Being a "woman's rights man," I am sorry to see the sisters making such blunders in their first efforts at running politics.

But this writing is for information as well as instruction. Will the ladies inform us when, where, and by whom "in the schools of our country so much is read and talked that is impure?" In what particular school did the impure reading or talking occur? Who did it? Who heard it? How did the W. C. T. U. find it out? What evidence have they that such "impure" reading and talking did occur, or has occurred as they have stated?

Before going into politics women must learn something of the rules of evidence governing testimony in courts of justice. Insinuations may do for sewing-societies, prayer-meetings, and afternoon teas, but something more substantial is required in a political campaign. Unless the charge of "so much impure" reading and talking "in the schools of our country" can be sustained by the facts, the case will go by default against the W. C. T. U. ladies as a political lie perpetrated for partisan purposes.

The distinctive feature of our constitution makes this a purely secular government. To endeavor to undermine this its fundamental principle is the work of traitors to our liberties.

San Diego, June 13.

MARY A. WHITE.

IS IT PROVED?

"A world appears with five continents. On each continent a man. They are thousands of miles apart, without means of communication. At last means are found. They come together and are of the same species. Alike in every particular that is essential. All talk and think of God, love alike, breed alike; in size, erect posture, age, all alike. . . . They meet and intermarry, all as one. In these races, and in all races, there seems to have been a special creation of first specimens, and no change and no other production, save from parents afterwards. This, we think, indicates the finger of God, and makes every hypothesis absurd." (H. L. Knight, in FREETHOUGHT of March 8, 1890.)

Where and when did a world appear with five continents and a man on each? Where was there ever a world with continents thousands of miles apart and no means of communication between them? Certainly this is not that kind of a world. Europe, Asia, and Africa contain the most distinctive races of men. Leander swam across from Europe to Asia to see his best girl, and he could have walked around the Black sea, only he was in a hurry. There is nothing to prevent people from walking from Asia into Africa except the Suez canal. It is only thirty-five miles, across Behring's straits, from Asia to America—half as far as across Lake Michigan; and people could always cross over by short canoe voyages from one to another of the Aleutian islands. So of the islands of Oceanica and their connection with Australia.

There is no more reason, on account of any difficulty of geographical distribution, for supposing special creations on the different continents than there is in supposing separate creations to people countries on either side of the Mississippi river. Why did not Mr. Knight observe that God created Mongolians to grade the two portions of the Oregon & California railroad, and that when they met in the Siskiyou mountains they were all very much alike? They must have been separate creations, because they were all men and could not have increased in the ordinary way.

Where are the continents with no means of communication between them? There has always been water, and a stretch of water with a uniform climate is not as much of an obstacle to migration as a range of mountains.

"At last means are found." What means? Water. When Europeans came over from the east they found the American continent covered with people who had come over from the west; and Mr. Knight infers that the ancestors of these natives were made to order.

Surely a god who could make a man and a woman full-grown and set them up in business, with an unacquired experience sufficient to enable them to take care of themselves and protect themselves from the ferocious beasts whose remains are found mingled with those of early man, could have constructed a canoe and endowed some of the descendants of those already made with sense enough to paddle it across. Is it not a fact that most people who have succeeded in getting there have either had to paddle their own canoe or persuade some simple-minded theists that God would be very much pleased to have them paddle it?

"They come together and are of the same species." Professor Agassiz said there are at least five distinct species of men so different that any theory that would account for the descent of one from the other would account for the descent of man from the anthropoid apes. Evidently the terms employed in ethnology do not signify anything to Mr. Knight. I am afraid his knowledge of the characteristic differences of the different species of men is rather superficial. His observation that men are all essentially alike is of the same kind, scientifically considered, as the profound philological observation of Nate Slocum. He says: "There is no use of having so many words in the English language. For instance, there are the different kinds of press. There are compress and depress and express and suppress and cheese-press. They all mean about the same thing."

The creation of a full-grown man with knowledge and experience sufficient to enable him to adjust himself to such a world as this is as absurd as the construction of a circular triangle. The boy that said God could not make a three-year-old steer in a minute knew what he was talking about; but Mr. Knight seems to think that God has been in the habit of making a pair of twenty-five-year-old humans, out of raw material, every now and then, apparently for fear that if any of those already made should cross a little water they might get their feet wet and take cold. We know he has always been very careful to save his dear children from having any trouble or exposure.

Mr. Knight thinks "this indicates the finger of God." Which finger?

Job asks his friends, "Will ye talk deceitfully for God? Will ye contend for him?" "Ye bet they would. What a mean god it would be who would make man weak and helpless and place him in this desert world with thorns to pierce his naked feet, insects to sting his naked body, savage beasts to devour him, and poisonous serpents to inject their venom into his veins; to struggle all his life to escape death, with the certain knowledge that death will be the victor, with just expectation and fear enough of the future to make him the prey of priests and kings. Happy is the man who can look with pity upon the meanest man on earth, knowing he is a victim of his inheritance and surroundings, and who can say that as there is no God nobody is to blame.

Does Mr. Knight know that there are miles in depth of stratified rocks in which life on this planet has been traced from rudimentary beginnings? Does he know that Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, and others have worked out the problem of the present geographical distribution of organic beings on the earth in connection with paleontological history and the changes which are known to have taken place in continental areas? Does he know that philologists have proved that all the European languages are derived from the same source as the ancient Sanskrit of India? Does he know that a race of men having many characteristics in common with the present inhabitants of equatorial Africa and associated with extinct animals, many of them like the giraffe and hippopotamus, now inhabiting Southern Africa alone, once lived in Europe? Does he know that the remains of many large animals, frequently associated with implements of human workmanship, are often found in the islands of the Mediterranean? Such facts as that of the existence of three extinct species of elephants on the little rocky island of Malta proves that in the times of early man Europe and Africa were one continent.

When Parson Jasper comes at us with the proposition that "de sun do move," or Professor Spear with his hollow sphere, a few simple propositions in geometry applied to the plainest facts of ordinary observation will dispose of them, but when a man comes with the theory of special creation, though it has not a particle of evidence to even make it a plausible supposition, it takes time and patience to appreciate the relations of the innumerable facts which have been accumulated to prove that man is the result of evolution and has a common origin with all animated beings on the earth. Let any one who wishes to form an intelligent idea upon the question of the origin of man, read Le Conte's "Geology," Wallace's work on the "Geographical Distribution of Animals," and he will have at least a foundation for an understanding of any of the popular works on the origin of man. Milwaukee, Or. D. PRIESTLEY.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XV.

ENTITLED SUBLIMITY.

Simon Again Proceeds Wearily on his Journey.

1. The gathering. The gathering of the mighty ones. The gathering of the great ones. Woe be to him that delayeth to come; woe to him that heareth not.

2. The mighty shall rejoice, and the weak-kneed shall fall down.

3. And the viper of Ezion was married to the nether whirlwind, and the mighty ones were gathered together. And a great mist came out and overwhelmed the scribe, and built itself an habitation among the bushes, and sent out invitations to the feast.

4. And the crocodiles, and the locusts, and the grasshoppers of the sea isles came. And two beetles and a cimex presented themselves in baskets of filigree work.

5. And one of the crocodiles had a flat nose, and was an eunuch, and they stoned him, and drowned him with water till he died.

6. And divers of the conies said continually, It is well, it is well; and the grey falcons grew sick unto death, and made over their possessions.

7. And the great fish that sat in the midst, was possessed of a demon, and refused to sell, and the lepers were angry thereat.

8. But why they broke it, I know not, and no man living can tell, and of late the dead are silent.

9. And the scribe lifted up his voice, which had fallen into a pit, and cried, saying, Out of the depth, out of the depth, and the answer came quick, saying, Wallow.

10. And I sharpened mine ears with myrtle sprigs, and came down, and the beggar died.

11. And Abram gave him a four square cloth and said, Blow, and it was so.

12. And the other side was hollow, and said it was born so, and the horses and the chariots went away empty, nevertheless the man was a liar.

13. And it came to pass, and was not able, and went by on the other side of the dead crocodile, and began to scratch lustily, and the woe-begone cimex said, So let him find grief, and it was so.

14. Then I understood why the blood was seen, and what was meant by the wounded coppersmith. And the king said, It is better thus, and I said, Amen.

15. After this it grew dark, and there were seven of them.

16. He that hath ears to hear let him hear!

To be Continued.

"MATTER" AND "MATERIAL."

In a recent number of FREETHOUGHT P. Carus replies to a few words in which I took exception to some of his philosophical statements. If there was any error in my quotation (I have not papers at hand to verify it) it was, if not typographical, due doubtless to inadvertence on my part. But my criticism was directed against the sentence as P. Carus himself quoted it, and as it originally appeared, viz: "Materialism went too far when it tried to explain everything from matter, when it identified matter with reality. Yet it stands on solid ground when it maintains that every reality is material."

I say this is nonsense. But he says: "The adjective 'real' covers a larger field than the noun 'reality.' Thus every fool is foolish, but everything that is foolish need not exactly be a fool." Foolish is indefinite because there are different degrees of folly. There are not different degrees of matter; that is to say, one kind of matter is not more material than another; for it is all, ac-according to P. Carus, "composed of material particles." Hence the absurdity of the statement that "Materialism went too far when it tried to explain everything from matter, when it identified matter with reality. Yet it stands on solid ground when it maintains that every reality is material." To say that matter is real, and then that we must not identify matter with reality, is to utter twaddle.

Form and motion trouble P. Carus greatly. They are "abstracts," he says. Our conceptions are abstracts; but all abstracts are derived from reals. Form is not a thing per se. We know form as a quality. We know motion, not as something separate from matter, but as a change of space relations. The abstract noun "motion" is from the adjective "moving." We say a moving ball. Motion is the abstraction of the ball in changing space relations. To speak of matter and motion, and to distinguish between matter and material (one being a noun and the other an adjective), as P. Carus does in his "fool" and "foolish" illustration, is to show philosophical incapacity, which, indeed, is marked in all his articles that I have seen.

As he has taken the liberty to say that I am ignorant of logic and have disgraced your columns, I may be pardoned for also making a personal remark. Mr. P. Carus as a pedagogue may understand the rules of logic, but he lacks logical power, and does not know how to make a logical statement. Logicians, like poets, are born. Studying syllogisms won't make a logician. Mr. Carus's attempts to reason are like those of a child except in the egoism and self-conceit which they exhibit. But for the help he constantly has from one specially employed to supply his deficiency and correct his errors, he would appear at still greater disadvantage. A man who writes and sends to editors extravagant eulogies of his writings and of himself, and descends to any kind of pretension and trickery to get recognition, and who is least esteemed by those who know him best, is the last man to meet a few words of criticism by insulting the writer of the criticism and reflecting on the judgment of the editors of the paper in which the criticism appeared. AGNOSTIC.

SEVERAL PERSONS REBUKED.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I want to place myself in the line of fire from my Spiritualistic friends by criticising some of their methods, one of which is the creeping in under the priest's robe by adopting the title of "Rev."

The Rev. Mrs. Whitney came to Portland and gave public tests. She had diamonds in her hair, diamonds at her throat, and the front of her dress was covered with costly cut beads like to a breast plate, while her shapely arms gleamed through a covering of lace as she came into the hall and inclined her head with a ministerial air. Bosh! Do I doubt that she is a medium? No, but a medium for church spirits who love to use her vanity, her love of display, to disgust sensible people who are not glamourised by the magnetism of her attractions.

Now, please remember that I am a Spiritualist so far as the facts are concerned. I have had evidence through myself and by myself to convince me that continued life is a reality, but the man or woman who uses mediumship for display, the money thus gained I mean, for the display of diamonds and rings, till the hand is half-covered, cannot attract noble, generous, humanity-loving spirits.

One tear of the imprisoned Harman, as he reads the loving letters of his friends, is of more value than all the diamonds that can glisten from hair and throat, unless their money value can be used to aid in liberating him.

And that brings me to another point, to wit: The comments and criticisms of Mr. Harman's friends. These all hinge upon as to whether Mr. Harman or the cause he advocates is considered of the most importance, and Mr. Harman evidently puts himself second and the cause first. Could he know that by remaining in prison he could do more for the race by aiding in woman's emancipation, than by coming out, I honestly believe he would remain there from choice.

I do not agree with Moses Hull when he says through the "Carrier Dove" that Mr. Harman's methods are a positive damage to the cause he advocates. I cannot understand why Moses Hull, a man who has defied the law in defense of his natural rights, a man who has risked his life, been nearly killed, and more maligned than most men—I cannot understand why he should so far forget his usual good sense as to write so illogical an appeal as is that in the "Carrier Dove."

"Doing the cause more harm than good," "has brought upon himself what every sensible man expected." To write such things as that and then call for help for the man of whom he thus speaks; it seems to me that he could not have taken a more efficient method to close half-open pocket books. If Mr. Hull, in his recent debate, used no better logic in his defense of Spiritualism, I should, for one, count that defense of but little worth.

"The only thing he is guilty of is being a fanatic; that I know is not a penitentiary offense," and yet he "has brought upon himself what every sensible man expected." Does Mr. Hull mean to say that every sensible man expects that a man will be imprisoned for what is not a penitentiary offense? Were I in Mr. Harman's place I should prefer that Moses Hull had kept silent to saying what he did.

Well, I think I have provoked hot shot enough, so good-by for this time.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

East Portland, Or.

The Eureka Clergyman.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see from several issues of FREETHOUGHT that you take great interest in our Eureka ministers. But since you seem to see things in a different light from what we do I pen this by way of heading you off.

Sanborn has hardly left California when another of our ministers is accredited with Christian conduct. He had been reading Luke xiv, 26, where it says: "If any man come unto me and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Being a good Christian, he scorned to act contrary to the precepts of his master. But as there is nothing in the passage to prohibit a man from loving the wife of another, he betook himself to loving the wife of another man. Unfortunately, the happy couple were more loving than prudent and they got caught. Now, people who have not the fear of God at heart denounce the worthy reverend as a criminal, when in reality he practiced one of the greatest of Christian virtues. Our holy Bible tells us that David was a man after God's own heart. It likewise tells us that there never was a more lecherous villain in existence than David. It tells us that Solomon was the wisest of men, because he loved wine, women, and song, was a heartless debauchee, and had seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines. It tells us that Jesus Christ was a descendant of the greatest of libertines and the vilest of prostitutes, and that he seldom ever kept decent company himself. It tells us that God himself came down from heaven to commit an assault on a Jewish girl, who in consequence became our mother Mary. Why then should we blame a minister of the gospel for acting in a way so highly approved by the Bible? None but ungodly people will do so, and I am proud to say there are but few people in this pious city of Eureka who find fault with the praiseworthy conduct of our ministers.

Some years ago a rumor was started that one of our ministers was loving a young miss of his flock to the great annoyance of his wife. Of course we all believed it, and we believe it yet, but since such rumors are very damaging to the sale of the gospel we denied it and whitewashed our minister, and we did the job so well that the rascal was looked upon as a saint ever afterwards, especially by the ladies. He has since gone to pastures new.

Lately we have had our beloved Sanborn, another man after God's own heart. As we are not at war with the Philistines he could not send our modern Uriah into the thickest of the battle. So he took another course to get his wife. Sanborn acted well. Like David, he walked in the ways of the Lord except in one thing; but in that, it must be confessed, he acted mean beyond expression. Mrs. Ricks was not the only woman who loved Sanborn; about half a dozen more would have been willing to go with him; and then to go off with one and leave the rest behind was certainly an unpardonable sin. The husbands of those who loved him may forgive him for leaving them behind, but the women never will. Another little charge might be brought against him by the brethren of the cloth. It is said that at the beginning of one of his sermons, Sanborn told his audience that he would not speak to them like a minister, but he would tell them the truth. It is hard for a servant of the Lord to be called a liar, but the worst of it is, nine-tenths of the people here believe that Sanborn told the truth when he insinuated that ministers were liars. Sanborn was a great man, especially among the ladies, and, no doubt, many a bitter tear has been shed by them since his departure.

Now, to console the ladies in their distress, another servant of the Lord has come forward and shown his willingness to take them under his protecting wing. Unfortunately, like a hen who is pounced upon by a hawk when calling her chicks, so the reverend gentleman was pounced upon while spreading his wings for the young and tender of his flock (or other flocks for that matter) to take shelter under. You may think that there is something wrong with our ministers, but I assure you that it is sheer benevolence and goodheartedness on their part when they minister to the wants, spiritual or otherwise, of the fairer sex in their congregations.

Ministers are Bible students, and know that the Lord was always partial to young women. He always commanded the Jews to kill everything but the young virgins, and in Numbers xxxi we are informed that on one occasion the Lord took thirty-two of them to his own bosom. Why should our ministers not do the same thing?

Alas! This generation lays great stress upon its enlightenment. Yet, while socially and scientifically great progress has been made, religiously the human race is as stupid as ever. People pay a pack of unprincipled drones to do their thinking for them, and put faith in a book which has but one redeeming feature, and that is, nearly the whole of it is a lie. I know of no book that is equal to the Bible in obscenity, absurdity, brutality, and untruthfulness.

ROBERT GUNTHER.

Eureka, June 16, 1890.

A Level-Headed Man.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In looking over FREETHOUGHT "News and Notes" we were pleased to see that our townsman, Mr. H. E. Witherspoon, acted as chairman of Mr. Putnam's meeting at Fort Jones. We happened to know Harry. He is one of California's very best and noblest sons. Harry packs a splendid thinking machine around with him and always keeps it in complete order ready for business. If ever Harry gets both his legs on the Freethought side of the fence and plants both his feet solidly on Infidel ground he will make some of the folks think that there is a positive and constructive side to Freethought. Why, he would kick down the partition and pull bigots faster than a boy ever yanked minnows out of a brook. Harry is young in years, but has a level American head. And we predict that all America will know it, in time. All we have to do is to place a little Liberal literature where the eagle eye of Witherspoon can light on it, and the job is done. Success, friend Harry.

San Jose, Cal.

L. R. TITUS.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Leaving Coquille on the steamer, I had a glorious ride, on the hurricane deck, all the way to Arago. Driftwood was lodged in every bend in thousands of cords. Some farms were almost buried up with it, beyond redemption. I saw some houses that had been floated across the river, and hundreds had to leave their homes for fear of their lives. Much stock was swept away, and some died afterward from starvation, as the feed had been washed away and the grass was buried deep in mud when the waters subsided. The Coquille valley is a fine one, but it overflows sometimes. The houses are built up six to eight feet from the ground, yet often are flooded. Even the chickens were compelled to stay in the trees, and feed was carried up to them and put where they could get it.

I arrived in due season at my destination. J. Henry Schroeder met me at the landing. Old friends soon began to come in, and a general hand-shake all around was indulged in. I found the Schroeder mansion presided over, as usual, by Mrs. Schroeder, who is a model landlady, and helpmate, in fact, to J. H.; also the Misses Schroeder, accomplished and modest as ever, and Willie, the oldest son, who is the postmaster, merchant, and "hail fellow well met" all round, and who always has a good word and a smile for the tired tramp lecturer. Several others of the family, sons and daughters, even down to the baby, all gave a welcome to ye wandering comet that was like an oasis in the desert to the weary pilgrim. That evening I lectured in the pavilion to a small audience, but few coming out on account of the rain. Sunday morning the glorious sun shone out in all its resplendent beauty, yet a fire was needed to sit by, for this country is a cool one. Soon our Liberal friends began to come down from the hills and out from under the big myrtle and maple trees, until, at one o'clock, a good audience was gathered to have "the bread of life broken to them." Crazy McNorton, the Spiritualist from "over there," or some other place not yet in the summer land but in the eternal mountains, full of fire and zeal

"For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrongs that need resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that he can do,"

was on time and meant business; Mr. Boque, wife and son and daughter, whom I knew years ago in "bloody Kansas," came down from their mountain home in one of the wild canyons of Coos county, to greet me and listen to the Liberal balm in Gilead to be found in Freethought. I knew Brother Bogue's people as good Methodists away back in times gone by, but Oregon atmosphere has freed the troubled spirit from fears of hades, and my old-time friends are building on more liberal ground. Mr. Smith's bright and winsome girls, four in number, who live near Bogue's, came with them, making a bevy of bright faces and happy hearts not often met with. We had a regular revival, and if the "holy spirit" was not there he missed a good chance to get in his work, that is all. I knew we were on preying ground and the contribution showed it; also the appreciation of the mourners. I went home with comrade Bogue and family, all riding on an Oregon buckboard, and had a royal time riding up the long, crooked canyon, under the immense forest trees, going around this and that big log or stump—the road crookeder than the letter S, or the Christian's road to their heavenly home. Bubbling springs and foaming creek were now here now there, and glory everywhere; especially could I see stars as our coach and four "fell off" a log or rock. At length the ranch was reached and supper was soon on the table smoking hot.

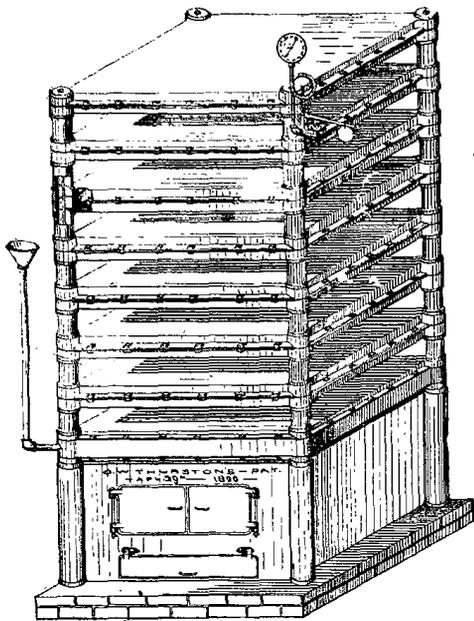

The way they farm it here is a caution. The timber is cut down along the road and away up the slopes and mountains and burned; a fence is built along the road; the cleared land is sowed to tame grass, the cattle turned on, and they can't run off or stray. The fence keeps them out of the road and the timber and fallen logs are so thick they have no chance to go off in that direction very far. So if the rancher does not see his cattle, sheep, horses, or hogs, for three months, he knows they are not far off. If he wants meat, and no bear, deer, or fish, happen along, he goes out and gives a lead pill to one of his own herd and drags that in and has a small barbecue. Two or three acres seems to be a large farm here, of plow land, and it costs about $100 an acre to clear it. Hence small farms. The scenery, water, air, etc., are perfect; and no sickness is heard of. I rode back to Arago next day on a "cayuse," and lectured again in the evening to a fair audience. I met the two Robinsons, from the "fish trap," liberal, intelligent gentlemen who have buried themselves in this neck of the woods to make a home, and have, I understand, a fine one. The next day it was still raining, but the little steamer bore me on to Myrtle Point where I am at present writing.

Yours, etc., D. C. SEYMOUR.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Fossil, Or.....	June 29	New Bridge...	July 30, 31, Aug. 1
Lost Valley.....	July 1	Summerville.....	Aug. 2, 3, 4
Wagner.....	July 2, 3, 4	Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11
Mitchell.....	July 5, 6	Rosalia.....	Aug. 13
Prineville and vicinity.....	July 8 to 16	Plaza.....	Aug. 14
Monument.....	July 18	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Hamilton.....	July 19	Spokane Falls.....	Aug. 17
Fox.....	July 20, 21, 22	Davenport.....	Aug. 18, 19
John Day.....	July 24	Colville.....	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Prairie City.....	July 25	Buckley.....	Aug. 24, 25
Baker City.....	July 26, 27	Port Townsend.....	Aug. 31
Union.....	July 28

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

The Thurston Steam Dryer.

The above cut illustrates the Thurston Portable Family Fruit Dryer, which is equally well adapted to use in a factory of any conceivable dimensions.

It is formed in sections. First a stove or furnace $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet square, to be lined with fire brick. Second, a shallow boiler, of the same size as the furnace, which rests on the top of the stove. The cover of this boiler has a hole at each corner; a short tube, 3 inches in length, is placed over each of these holes on the corners as rests for the next section, which is perforated by a hole at the top and bottom. These holes are placed over the above mentioned tubes and form, thus, a connection through which steam may pass.

Thus section after section may be added until the Dryer is built to any height desired. It is then securely bound together by strong rods attached to the boiler at one end and passing up through the steam passages at the corners, and secured by nuts at the top end.

Each section or steam chamber is formed of two parts, either cast or pressed, a little cupping and to be fastened at the edges by either bolts or rivets, after having been properly packed. Flanges are made for the rivets.

Live steam is supplied to each corner of every section, and thus the heat will be constant and equal at all points all the time. The steam can be raised and held at any degree of pressure desired, and thus the desired degree of heat can be maintained. The fruit, placed on trays, can be slid into the spaces between the sections and will receive heat both from above and below, and as all sides of this machine are entirely open, all moisture from the drying fruit will be expelled, by the radiation of heat, the moment it leaves the fruit.

All steam is condensed and returned to the boiler and thus heat is economized. It needs no expert to run the machinery; any child can do that. No fruit need ever be burned. As there is a safety valve no explosion can ever occur. There is a tube attached to the boiler through which water is supplied. The inner end of this tube dips to the bottom of the boiler so that steam cannot escape unless the water be exhausted; more should then be added. This tube may be used to indicate steam pressure by placing a float in it with a stem attached. It will also act as a safety valve in case of too great heat.

I claim that this machine will do more and better work at less cost for help and fuel than any other now in use. By arranging a number of these machines in a factory, and attaching proper steam power, a factory of any conceivable dimensions may be established and run to advantage.

G. W. THURSTON, SR.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches.
39. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History.
45. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism. Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. Illusions.
57. James Sully.
58. The Origin of Species. Two Double Numbers.
59. Charles Darwin. 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, I.L.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
75. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
76. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
77. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
78. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
79. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
80. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
81. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
82. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
83. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
84. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
85. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
86. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
87. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
88. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
89. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Fiancee: A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haeckel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
107. Ultimate Fiancee. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace, Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards,

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 508 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and Crackery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts.

(Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Win. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

F. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lulge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glandeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeinan, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 HOWARD ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

City Items.

Dennis Walsh, a steamboat fireman, who has been on the verge of delirium tremens for several days, was examined before the Commissioners of Insanity yesterday. He was rational on all subjects except religion, and said that Archbishop Riordan recently descended from heaven and told him to pray. He proceeded to do so and fell forward on his face several times. Although he received wounds on his face and a black eye he would not place his hands in front of him while falling, because he wanted to show proper respect to his savior. He was sent to the Agnews asylum.

Henry Wilson, a young man with a Uriah Heep expression of countenance, was before Judge Rix the other day, charged with stealing a prayer-book from Lottie White, 122 Turk street, where he had been employed cleaning windows.

Wilson said he had been drinking, was taken ill, and feared he was about to die. He took the prayer-book on a Sunday night, and, after reading it, proceeded to go to church. The devil took possession of him on the way and he proceeded to get drunker than ever. A policeman stopped him, for which he professed thanks. Case dismissed.

At the Mission.

Pretty teacher (intent on the lesson)—And vast swarms of flies descended on the land and came into the houses of the Egyptians and covered their clothing and their tables and all their food, but (impressively) there were no flies on the children of Israel.

Small Boy—Please, ma'am, there ain't now, either.

A NUMBER of ladies of Adrian, Mich., in order to aid the heathen, got up an ice-cream festival. The cream poisoned nearly the entire community, but a dollar was raised to light up the dark continent.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, - - - - - 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.

Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

W. M. HINTON & CO. PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE, Merchant Tailor, 1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel. BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet." —Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet." —The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive." —Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading." —Boston Investigator.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1 25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper. PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send to us for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm in large profits, quick sale, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 postpaid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address

FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
 The Moon.....2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Aesthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

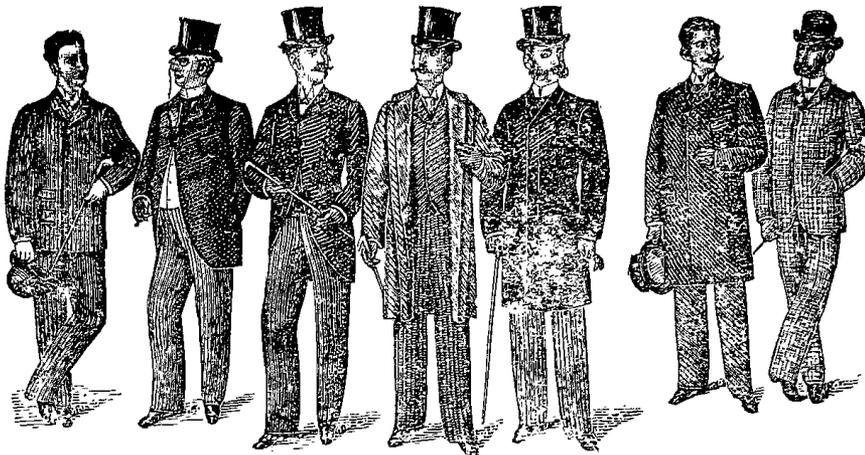

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital.....$3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....$2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories......30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25 00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35 00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6 00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

- God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.
- Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.
- Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.
- God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.
- Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.
- Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.
- Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.
- The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.
- Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.
- The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK OF FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors. The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
 By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
 Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
- 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 0
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $6, 6 00
- 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
- 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
- 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
- 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 10
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " " Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
- Six Months......75
- Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Dalles are very orthodox, or they are the most indifferent "outsiders" that I have ever met, or rather didn't meet. They were conspicuous by their absence. The Dalles is an unknowable quantity. Like the Irishman's flea, you put your finger on it and it is not there. I reckon it is a discouraged community. The railroad shops are removed, or rather the men, and about $17,000 a month is taken out of circulation. That gives The Dalles an orthodox black eye, and Freethought is not appreciated. However, Ives and myself took it quite philosophically. We were both old soldiers and used to every fortune. I must give my thanks to Judge Thornbury for the use of the court-house, and to Meshell, of the Times-Mountaineer, for a kindly notice. The next time I visit The Dalles I shall take a brass band with me. But it will be some time before I venture again into these regions of profound slumber. I don't believe The Dalles will ever know what is going on in the world until Gabriel blows his trumpet.

Friday morning I say good-bye to Ives and push on to Arlington.

Ives is a jolly campaigner, and we enjoyed ourselves hugely amid good and evil luck. Ives is an old steamboat captain on the Columbia. He has been in this country, from Salt Lake to Portland, nearly forty years. He knew Grant and Sheridan before the war, and camped with them, and told stories in the festive circle. He is full of reminiscences of the old days—of the Indians and the first settlers. He has been rich several times and "busted" several times, but he comes right side up with care—always gets a square meal somehow, and laughs at misfortune and death. As long as I have such a comrade by my side it is impossible to lose courage. We shake hands, and our last words are, "We'll meet at Portland."

As soon as I reach Arlington whom do I find but my old Montana friend, B. W. Carrington, conductor on railroad from Arlington to Heppner. He had telegraphed me at the Cascades to come right on to Heppner and lecture there. But my unfortunate trip to The Dalles prevented. I should have had a crowded house at Heppner, for the brass band, with a Methodist minister for drummer, was ready to stir up the natives with music for Freethought. This was another disappointment. I could not go to Heppner and reach Fossil in time. However, I am going to Heppner August 4, 5, and 6, and I reckon on having one of the best times along the route. Carrington is one of those who make things hum when he sets about it. It was a pleasure to meet a comrade who is so splendidly in earnest for the cause.

I have had plenty of ups and downs this week. I have met the worst of luck and the best of friends, and am therefore "on top."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

INGERSOLL ON THE PRESBYTERIAN CREED.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was interviewed at Rochester, N. Y., the other day, and in answer to the question, "What do you think of the revision of the Westminster creed?" he said: "I think that the intelligence and morality of the age demand its revision. The Westminster creed is infamous. It makes God an infinite monster and man the most miserable of beings. That creed has made millions insane. It has furrowed countless cheeks with tears, and under its influence the sentiments and sympathies of the heart have withered. It was produced by those who were suffering with two diseases—petrification of the heart and putrefaction of the brain.

"The civilized Presbyterians do not believe it, the intelligent clergymen will not preach it, and all good men who understand it hold it in abhorrence. It gives me great joy to know that the churches are getting better; that they are growing more and more humane; that they do not really hate all forms of joy. Infidels are reforming Christians, teaching them to be generous, intellectually hospitable, and happy. After all, happiness is the only good, and the time to be happy is now, and the place to be happy is here.

"Christians owe a debt of gratitude to Haeckel, Huxley, Voltaire, Diderot, Hume, Paine, Humboldt, Darwin, and many others. These great men have helped to destroy the awful fears, ghosts, and devils of the orthodox religion. Yes, the creeds must be revised or the churches will have to be closed."

A LIBERAL PREACHER.

There is considerable excitement in ecclesiastical circles over the pulpit utterances of the Rev. J. C. A. Grumbine, the best known Unitarian clergyman in Missouri.

Mr. Grumbine has always been known as a Liberalist, but his congregation at St. Joseph was astonished on Sunday, June 23. They never heard such radical talk in their lives before, and they don't know what to make of it, says a dispatch. The people of other denominations do, however, and they have set down Mr. Grumbine as a man dangerous to the Christian religion. He said, with accompanying gestures, that he was in favor of Sunday theatrical performances, Sunday ball games, Sunday horseraces and all kinds of Sunday sports. He said that he believed in them, and intended to patronize them whenever he had an opportunity.

In support of this advocacy he stated that Christ said that the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath, and if the people found relaxation and pleasure in Sunday sports he favored them.

He believed that they would tend to keep people from the saloons, and he advised all of his hearers to read all the Sunday papers.

A JUDGE WHO THINKS.

Last week FREETHOUGHT referred to a Sacramento judge who refused a man citizenship because the applicant belonged to a society formed for the protection of personal rights. The judge, whose name is Walling, would probably not have been heard of outside his own county except for his absurd decision. Now comes another judge, a well-known jurist, whose opinion Walling would do well to study, providing he has sufficient intelligence to comprehend, or even apprehend, its meaning. At the annual gathering of the Turners' societies of Chicago a letter was read from Judge Murry F. Tully, which the Associated Press, strangely enough, has telegraphed to San Francisco. In this letter Judge Tully says:

"Just so far as an individual is deprived of his personal rights, just to that extent is he enslaved. Every law which directly or indirectly forbids the exercise of, or abridges, a man's personal rights deprives him to that extent of his liberty, but the danger to liberty is not so much from unequal, tyrannical legislation as from the ignoring of the written laws, and the usurpation by the executive officers of the powers at any time of authority not granted by the laws. Where, as in the city of Chicago, an arrest upon bare suspicion, and without a warrant, of persons not found in the act of violating the law; when the police undertake to determine who shall and who shall not meet upon public assemblages to discuss political or economic questions; when trial by newspapers is substituted for trial by jury; when original packages of slander and vituperation are hurled at the court of the nation because of decisions favoring personal rights and the freedom of commerce; when upon almost every article of food, drink, and clothing fictitious prices are made by means of unlawful trusts and combinations—it is time, I say, not only to call a halt, but to establish personal rights leagues in every school district in every county in every state of the Union. Let your organization proclaim it to be the first duty of every citizen to obey the law, whether an official or a private citizen. Demand that there shall be absolute equality to every citizen before the law, in the administration of the law, and under the operation of the law. Persevere in your opposition to all sumptuary and all other vicious legislation, and teach the people that if they wish to preserve their liberties there must be eternal vigilance in the protection of personal rights."

These are wise words—words whose truth is known and voiced by thousands of people throughout the country; but it seldom happens that those who utter them are able to reach the public ear. It is gratifying to know there is at least one judge in the country who realizes that individuals have rights majorities ought to respect.

A SOCIABLE

Next Sunday evening, July 6, the San Francisco Freethought Society will close the season's meetings with a sociable and dance. All members of the Society, and all friends, are cordially invited to be present. The treasurer desires to realize a modest fund to square accounts all around, and hopes for generous cooperation.

Therefore, attend the Sociable. Professor Miller will give a reading; Mr. F. B. Perkins promises a recitation, and there will be songs and music, and other attractive features. Those who have attended the previous sociables can testify that nothing necessary to enjoyment has been lacking.

THE Rev. Dr. Gray, of San Francisco, admitted in his last Sunday's sermon that Infidelity was on the increase, but he was sure that there would be a reaction toward Christianity. Dr. Gray does not read the signs of the times aright, or, rather, he reads only half of them. There are two divisions of mankind which are on the increase. Infidelity, which is one division, is growing in proportion to the growth of intelligence. Catholicism, which is the other division, increases to the extent that ignorance propagates its kind. A general reversion to Christianity may occur if Catholicism overpowers and destroys Freethought, and people will again pass through the transition stage now occupied by Dr. Gray's congregation. Otherwise Protestantism is doomed, and except as social club houses its churches, after a few decades, will not exist. Roman Catholicism will endure until mankind get sufficient intelligence to be Infidels.

FREETHOUGHT is in receipt of a communication from Alexander von Humboldt, given inspirationally through the brain impressibility of Mrs. Julia C. Franklin, of Big Creek, Steuben county, New York. Brother von H. sends a kindly greeting to the editors. He adds that while in the material or earth plane he discovered that the universe is governed by law. The communication is not accompanied by a remittance, but we would be glad to enroll our distinguished correspondent on the subscription list without that formality, except that he has omitted to forward his present address. Judging from the communication a little of the robust thought to be found in this journal could be profitably disseminated in the spirit world.

To be approved are the methods adopted to discourage a saloon keeper at Moore's Hill, Ind. The place had never had a saloon until very recently, and the women objected to the innovation. They therefore visited it in relays, taking their knitting with them, and simply sat there, knitting for dear life and saying nothing. In a town where everybody knew everybody else customers did not feel like frequenting a saloon thus occupied, and so the women had it all to themselves until the dealer confessed himself "knit out" and shut up shop. If the women had smashed the man's glassware and spilled his goods they would have made a martyr of him and fools of themselves.

MANY alluring schemes are offered for the acceptance of those interested in reform work, and usually those schemes with the least in them have the most followers. Sometimes they distract the attention of Freethinkers from Liberal work and divert their support; but it is cheering to remember that some day these Freethinkers will return to the object of their former fealty, and work thence onward for the one great principle upon which all other necessary reforms depend, the principle of untrammelled liberty for the human mind.

THE silver bill is defeated and appears to be dead. Consequently the relief expected from a monthly coinage of four or five millions will not be realized. And yet the agitation of the question has done good. It has shown that people are not contented with our present financial system, under which the flow of money into the hands of the few is as constant as the flow of all streams toward the sea.

It needs a tyrannical state to support a tyrannical superstition. The trial of a Protestant clergyman named Grimm, in Russia, for making insulting references to the church, has resulted in his conviction and sentence to ten years' exile in Siberia. The church and state in Russia, and in some other countries, are two of a kind, both detestable.

WHATEVER happens to other business the church and the priest never suffer. In good times their dupes are assured that they have been blessed in store that they might do more for religion; and when times are bad they are warned that providence is offended at their lack of enthusiasm for the church. Either way the priest gets his dollar.

"FOUGHT like Tigresses—two women engage in a prize-fight on Coney Island.—Two hundred brutes applaud it." Such is the sensational heading in a morning paper, which in describing the disgraceful event at length omits to say that the most dangerous brutes concerned in the affair are the ones who report and publish it.

THE arrest of a Kansas City parrot for using profane language is as sensible as any arrest made for the same offense. To preserve the similarity to other cases of the kind the blasphemous bird should get a long term in jail. It might also be fined.

To inquirers concerning the date when the Harman petitions are to be forwarded we would say that the defense committee will doubtless give due notice. In the mean time let as many signatures as possible be obtained.

THE deacons of the First Congregational church of San Francisco have good scriptural grounds for not investigating the charges against their pastor, Dr. Barrows. There is not one among them with courage or character enough to cast the first stone.

THE fact that San Francisco has 300,000 inhabitants instead of 350,000, as some have guessed, is not to be grieved over. There are many thousands here now who have nothing to do and would be better off somewhere else.

OUR readers have been apprised that Putnam's "Religious Experience" is now on the market. It is going well. Price 25 cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

"About now look out for a dry time," said the Hon. F. B. Perkins in opening his address on "Morality and Religion" before the Freethought Society last Sunday evening. "For," he continued, "I know of but one subject drier than morality, and that is religion." Mr. Perkins's lecture was devoted to an inquiry whether there was really any necessary relation between the profession of religion and the practice of morality. He held that there was not. Among Rationalists, he said, morality, or the adoption of that course of life which led to the greatest amount of happiness in this world, was held to be of the highest importance. Christianity, on the other hand, placed less stress upon morality and more upon belief in certain dogmas. As a result there was more faith than works among religious people. Mr. Perkins then said that he would call attention to a few of the prominent illustrations of this fact to be found in San Francisco and vicinity, whereupon he proceeded to tell what he knew about the local religious lights. Within the past few weeks the lustre of many of these luminaries had been dimmed by the exposure of their lechery, their dishonesty, and their hypocrisy. Moreover our Christian statesmen, jurists, and politicians, many of whom held full communion with the churches, were men of low and unprincipled private life. So far as promoting morality was concerned, religion had been ineffective. After two thousand years of Christianity, professing to be backed by the full power of Almighty God, there was no perceptible gain in the morals of believers.

Many of the teachings of religion, the speaker said, were plainly false. The doctrine that evil is for the good of mankind and therefore necessary, was a palpable lie. Those who believed in that doctrine were welcome to all the evil in the world. In defining morality, Mr. Perkins said that it had to do with the relations of men with one another, whereas religion concerned men only in their relations with a supposed deity. The two systems of conduct not only had no connection with each other but were contradictory and conflicting, since religion looked backward for its sanctions, and beyond this life for its goal, while morality sprang from the necessities of society and placed its reward here and now.

An interesting portion of the lecture was that describing the old Roman household, where the head of the establishment ran a little private goddery of his own, and conducted the religious affairs of the family himself. In those days there were gods in every corner, and there was no department or household convenience that did not have its presiding deity. The Roman was jealous of interference with his idols, and his patriotism was largely of a religious nature. He would fight seven days per week for the ashes of his fathers and the temples of his gods.

Professor Herbert Miller, by way of supplementing the lecture, read a page or two from a new book entitled "Cæsar's Column," the scene of which was laid in the twentieth century. The book did not present the attractive picture of Bellamy's "Looking Backward," but painted things about as they will probably look if the present drift of affairs is not diverted. Professor Miller is growing every day more intellectual and thoughtful of aspect. I understand he has recently been attending a discussion at the Berkeley University between Dr. Howison, the Hegelian, and Professor Le Conte, the evolutionist, and has taken a hand in the controversy himself, the subject of the debate being Plato's "Phædo." He has studied the "Phædo" more than I have had time to do, hence his superior bulge of forehead; but in conversation the other day I found that he does not profess any further knowledge of immortality, of which the "Phædo" treats, than I do. All he has gained, I take it, is sufficient data to be able to tell Dr. Howison that Plato knew no more about the soul than the Attic agriculturist.

At the close of the discussion the Chair announced that there would be no more lectures before the Freethought Society until after the summer months. Next Sunday evening a social and dance occurs, intended to furnish members with recollections of the season of 1889-90 to which they can recur with pleasurable feelings.

Last Tuesday morning when I opened FREETHOUGHT office at half past six I found a clerical-looking man awaiting me. It was his duty, he explained, to tell me that Freethinkers took a wrong view of the scriptures, which were not intended to be literally interpreted. I asked him to what he referred, and he replied that he had seen in the window a copy of a book called "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." He had studied the Bible carefully all his life and had never discovered any discrepancy. I told him I would look into the matter, and picking up the pamphlet read, casually, "The earth abideth forever." And my clerical friend replied, "Yea, it is from everlasting to everlasting." I then continued: "The earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up." Then the clerical man said, "Really I had not before noted the contradiction." So he journeyed down into his pocket for fifteen cents, and having purchased the work, went on his way rejoicing.

A gentleman who is the editor of a city paper met me the other day, and speaking about the whitewashing report of the clerical committee that exonerated the Rev. Dr. Stratton, accused of ministerial conduct, said: There is a story that fits this case exactly, and I have wept bitter tears because I could not publish it. There was once a man on trial for an offense against good morals, and the evidence was overwhelmingly against him. The judge told the jury that the man was unquestionably culpable, and then inquired if the defendant desired to offer any reason why he should not be found guilty. The man said he would like to say a few words, and going into the box he whispered something into the ear of each juror. As a result he was acquitted quicker than lightning. The judge was surprised, but said nothing at the time. When he met one of the jurors again, he took occasion to observe that the plea of the acquitted party must have been very powerful. "Well," said the juror, "I don't know what he sprung on the others, but what he said to me was this: 'Now is the time for us fellows who are in the same boat to stand by one another.'"

"In my opinion," added the relator of the above incident, "that is about what the Rev. Dr. Stratton said to the members of the committee that tried him, and they were in a position to realize the force of the remark."

In "Liberty" of June 21, Editor Tucker says:

The contents of this issue show that Liberty has recently found much worth quoting in the columns of San Francisco FREETHOUGHT. Putnam is up-country lecturing.

There is always much worth quoting in FREETHOUGHT, and never more than when the Secular Pilgrim furnishes the paper with an extended letter from up-country. There is also much quotable material in Mr. Putnam's "Religious Experience," the price of which is 25 cents per copy.

I was setting type for FREETHOUGHT and Henry Replogle was working off a page of his monthly paper, when the news came that a brother editor with Liberal tendencies, T. L. McCready of the "Twentieth Century," was dead. Quoth I, "He is in luck." "Yes," said Henry grimly, "save this drawback: being dead he cannot realize what a good thing he has struck." And I agreed with Henry, yet both of us are still working away for dear life.

Moral: The contradictions of human nature are more numerous than its harmonies.

The writer of "Observations" acknowledges the gift of some roses placed upon the editorial desk by his wife. I do not think that these little attentions from women to their larger halves are of rare occurrence, but I believe that an acknowledgment of the courtesy constitutes an original item.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The silver men are discouraged over the failure of the free coinage bill.—One of the striking ironmolders was shot and killed by a foundryman named Kerr during a street quarrel last week Thursday. Kerr claims to have acted in self-defense.—First Assistant Postmaster-General J. S. Clarkson, of Washington, D. C., is in San Francisco. Possibly he is here to find a site for our prospective postoffice.—The striking carpenters of Oakland challenge their employers to a public discussion of differences.—Thomas Waller, Connecticut; M. H. de Young, California; D. B. Penn, Louisiana; G. W. Allen, New York, and A. B. Andrews, North Carolina, are the vice-presidents of the World's Fair.—Postmaster W. J. Bryan of San Francisco has retired, and General Backus, his predecessor, succeeds him. The cause of the change is purely political, which is no cause at all.—Herbert Beecher, son of the late Henry Ward Beecher, has just been acquitted of a charge of larceny. He was collector of customs at Port Townsend, and abstracted a book from the records.—D. O. Mills will erect a twelve-story building in San Francisco on the northeast corner of Bush and Montgomery streets. The building will extend to and include the site now occupied by Platt's Hall.—September 8 and 9 will be legal holidays this year in honor of the fortieth anniversary of California's admission into the Union.

Madam Diss de Bar, the medium who swindled Lawyer Marsh of New York, and who was arrested in Rome, Italy, has appealed to the citizens of America for aid. She says: "My only crime, when in your midst, was the charge of being a Christian Spiritualist, but aside from all questions of creed, I sincerely trust to find myself as worthy of American generosity as that which has been magnanimously extended toward foreign murderers, where philanthropic aid was required for their defense."—The United States Grand Jury has indicted the Rev. H. F. Bradbury, the dean of Trinity University, in Vermont, for issuing bogus diplomas.—Superintendent of the Census Porter says that from present indications the returns of the enumerators will show a total population of the United States of 64,500,000, against 51,155,783 in 1880.—About half the large cities of the country enter complaints that the census enumerators have not done their work properly. Denver claims 2000 more than the census returns show.

A tremendous howl has been raised by the Sabbatarian element over the order issued by her majesty the queen, that a band of music play on Windsor terrace every Sunday, and petitions protesting against the desecration of the Sabbath are in circulation.—Joan of Arc is to have a monument in Paris.—The Russian police have seized all the copies of the memoirs of the Princess Dolgorouki, which has just been published. The book is exceedingly interesting in some parts on account of the writer's knowledge of some inside facts concerning the imperial family, and it gives a very graphic account of occurrences which took place on the evening of the assassination of the late czar.—The court at Bantry, Ireland, sentenced Father Crowley to one month's imprisonment, and six more additional in default of bail for good behavior, for intimidating a Protestant clergyman.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION BUDGET.

"A bill has passed the House of Representatives, authorizing the director of the Mint, with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, to change the patterns and styles of United States coins." So says our esteemed antagonist, the Christian Statesman. The Statesman evidently thinks this bit of news worth publishing as the second item on its editorial page. As the organ of the Godin-the-Constitution party thus pointedly calls the attention of its people to this matter, we may infer one of two things: Either it fears that the one concession already made to its party (of the "In God we Trust" motto on the Bland dollar), may be withdrawn; or else it hopes for further concessions. At all events it behooves Liberals to be up and stirring in this matter.

How many of you who read this item, and who recognize the importance of a protest against this union of church and state in the mottoes on our coins, are willing to put your objections into some practical form that will have its effect upon the said director of the mint and secretary of the treasury?

There are auxiliaries of the American Secular Union organized all over the country. Let the members of these, and, indeed, of all Liberal clubs, whether auxiliary to us or not, make known their wishes in this matter to their legislators at Washington. Let them, both through their societies and as individuals, insist that their representatives there shall see to it that no more "In God we trust" or any other religious mottoes shall be stamped on the coins of a free people.

The Portsmouth, Ohio, Secular Society (president, J. L. Treuhart; secretary, Will S. Andres) is booming our cause. Judges, lawyers, editors, and other leaders of thought in the town are doing what they can to make the local society a success; and the rank and file of the membership seems to be composed of the most active and influential of the citizens. They are going to work in a business-like way, too—i.e., attempting co-operation with our other auxiliaries and with Liberal societies in general in obtaining lecturers. The first lecturer chosen is Mrs. M. A. Freeman, and she is to be followed by others. These lecturers are, by a recent set of resolutions of the society, to be recommended to the different Freethought societies and citizens throughout Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania. These societies and citizens are to be requested to co-operate, by writing at once to Mrs. Freeman for terms, dates, etc., and arranging for her reception. Later on, it is hoped that a system of co-operation can be perfected, by which each of our leading lecturers can make the rounds of the Liberal societies in these states in turn, at the least possible expense to both lecturer and society. This scheme is worthy of consideration, not only by our Liberal friends in the states above named, but all over the country. With organization and co-operation, the traveling expenses of each lecturer would be less; the outlay for each individual society would be less; and the lecturer would have more dollars in his pocket at the end of the year.

Some of our orthodox friends are falling into line with us. It will be remembered that we have laid great stress of late on the necessity of flooding Maryland with pamphlets on "Church Taxation." The Jesuits and ultra-orthodox Protestants in that state are working hard to have church property exempt from taxation by a constitutional amendment which will lift the matter beyond the reach of ordinary legislation. The Maryland newspapers, almost without exception, have been strangely silent on the subject, and one cannot help thinking that they have been muzzled. Lately, however, the Baltimore Methodist, by giving prominence to certain articles by one "Ed. L. Stroughton" and others, has bravely come to the front in behalf of the equitable taxation of church property in common with other property. We wrote the editor, thanking him for his bold and fearless stand in giving such articles prominence, and sending him one of our "Church Taxation" pamphlets for further points; and we have received from him a most encouraging and sympathetic reply.

Now, dear friends, there is just one lesson which is to be gleaned from these three disconnected items of news, and it is this: The value of co-operation among Liberals. If, instead of being broken up into dozens of un-affiliated societies, we were welded into one solid organization, we could strike telling blows for Freethought at every point. We should be able to strike "In God we trust" forever from our debased eighty-five cent dollar; we should possess a full corps of traveling speakers, at more profit to the latter, and at less expense to ourselves, than at present; and we should effectually hinder the plans of the church exemption people in Maryland. These three things, with many, many more important ones, could be accomplished if for one little year the majority of Liberals would consent to serve in one united army, under organized and capable leadership of their own choice, and to uphold those leaders with something of the loyalty that obtains among our opponents. It is something of which Liberalism ought to be ashamed—that so vastly inferior a force in numbers as is the ecclesiastical party in America to-day, should so frequently outwit the friends of progress and religious freedom.

What is the remedy, do you ask? I reply: Organization and co-operation.

The American Secular Union is doing what it can for freedom of thought. Wherever it can, it strikes a blow for that religious liberty which can be secured only by total separation of church and state. But what can so small a standing army accomplish for the widespread interests of the cause for which it is fighting?

We rejoice in the work which some of our members have accomplished during the past year, and we are grateful for the support which we have hitherto received, both in small and in large ways. But we need many more soldiers than we have. Yes, Liberals, you ought, every one of you, to belong to this army. You ought to be organized into companies and regiments in your local towns; you ought to have your A. S. U. badges and your rallying cry, your camp-fires and your grand military reviews—just as the ecclesiastical party have. And, like them, you should support the leaders whom you yourselves have placed at the head of the controlling central organization.

It should not be necessary for us to appeal for money as we have had to do for the past two months, and as, from the present appearance of the treasury, we shall probably have to do again this month. It ought to be a matter of pride with each Liberal to belong to the army of the American Secular Union, and to help carry on the battle to the best of his ability, both with money and with personal influence.

I repeat that the battle of Liberalism, in the matter of total separation of church and state, is an easy one to gain, provided that our people will become organized. The majority of the male population of the United States are to-day not only non-church-goers, but thorough Liberals at heart. A large (though constantly lessening) proportion of women, it is true, continue to be church-goers; but this will not prevent the majority of these from joining hands also with the American Secular Union, when our society shall prove itself to be a permanent and well-equipped organization, with a definite and loyal following. The more conservative women are, the more likely they are to be swept along with the current of enthusiasm which such a society—and only such a society—can create.

Liberals, we want you, one and all, to enroll yourselves in the army of the A. S. U. How many will enlist as regular members at once? How many who, for any reason, cannot become members just now, will send in their mite to help along the work? Remember that every little contribution helps to swell the general fund.

We need money and we need workers—many, many more of the latter than we now have. For not until Liberals are organized into a permanent, well-equipped body, under capable leadership, and loyal to that leadership, will they be able to deal the death-blow to ecclesiastical power in the state.

IDA C. CRADDOCK, Cor. Sec. A. S. U.

Philadelphia, June 24, 1890.

PUTNAM'S "RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE."

To the Editors of Freethought:

The genial Samuel P. Putnam is always an interesting writer, and in his "Religious Experience," just issued from the press, he not only sustains but adds to his previous reputation in that respect. I have read this pamphlet of his with deep interest, for I too had a preacher for a sire, and in some respects had similar experiences to his own, for, like Samuel, "I never got acquainted with my father," and my mother alone could be approached with confidence and a feeling of freedom, for a wall of reserve and a natural barrier bigger than a mountain always existed between sire and sons. And oh, how depressing, miserable, and devoid of joy and happiness were those Sabbath days, characterized by solemnity and restraint. As Putnam says, blue Monday mornings were then unknown, for Sunday was so great a contrast to week days that Monday morning seemed like breaking into a new world. How many of his readers will voice this statement, and in how many hearts will he strike a responsive chord in recalling the memories of childhood! With his description of religion, and its comparison with morality, I am more than pleased; for no writer to my knowledge has delineated that curse and abomination known as religion in better, clearer, and more fitting language than has he. "Religion can make not only a saint but a devil," says Putnam; "not only a Jesus but a Torquemada," and nothing nameable has ever cursed humanity like this same religion; and right here I wish to mention an admission made recently by a lecturer in one of the churches of this city. Said he, "Nothing in the past has been so intolerant as religion;" and he could truthfully have added, nothing is to this day. Now where is the foundation of religion to be looked for? Putnam says: "The origin of the Christian religion, and of all religions, is the misery of man. Man is a religious animal because he is an unhappy animal, and the universality of religion is based upon the universality of suffering. Take away suffering and religion would cease to be." His assertion and conclusion are undeniably true, and he clinches the whole business with this remark: "Pain is productive of piety. Almost every saint is on the sick list, and Zion is the home of invalids." Verily these words are true, and they open up a line of thought that can be pursued to advantage by all who seek the origin of causes that result in religious effects. Putnam's views are also sustained in this respect by that ancient poet who remarked some time ago that "the devil was sick and the devil a monk would be, but the devil got well and devil a monk was he."

As the reader pursues this little pamphlet to the end, he meets with much sound philosophy, practical common sense, and many glowing periods that would reflect credit on the genius of Ingersoll; and in my judgment this last literary production of Putnam's is one of his best. It should and doubtless will have an extensive sale, and those who know a good thing when they see it will not be disappointed in the contents of this pamphlet. Putnam, I congratulate you on the happy result of the "inspirational thought" that led you to write "My Religious Experience."

Los Angeles, Cal.

Very truly yours, C. SEVERANCE.

MIND AS A CONTROLLING FACTOR IN NATURE.

Brother Knight is candid and genial, therefore it affords me great pleasure to continue the discussion. Both of an analytical turn of mind and both sincere in our researches, we should be able to settle the question of God or no God before we get through.

He says: "We confess when we called God 'he' we did so in deference to fashion merely. We know no sex in the sublime mind in the universe," again affirming his belief in a personal God.

And again I propose to prove that unless there is a personal God there is no God at all; and right here on this rock any God idea will be dashed into fragments; I insist that without sex a God is not thinkable—if not a "he" or a "she," he, she, or it is nothing.

He says "our God has mind, justice, love," etc., but these attributes are those of living creatures, either male or female, solely. Intelligence, mind, love, sympathy, etc., are concomitants of sex only, and wherever we find the former we find the latter. From its highest manifestation to its lowest, be it animal or vegetable, there is no exception to this rule. There is no analogy, then, in nature for the attributes of sexual beings existing without sex.

In repudiating the sex principle in his God, our friend unwittingly divests him of the most divine (so to speak) attribute in nature. Upon this subtle principle depends all life, mind, sensation, sympathy, love, reason, all. Without sex, I insist, all the divinest attributes of men and women would be unthinkable and of course die out, so even a he-God—or any other—could not resurrect them.

God, then, must possess sex, as without sex an intelligent being is utterly unthinkable. But now the very grave question arises, What sex? A belief in a plurality of Gods being considered absurd by Brother Knight, and sacrilege by the "only true" (Christian) church, they must answer in favor of the "stronger" sex, of course, and insist that their God is a "he." But supposing I insist that because the "fairer" sex embodies infinitely more "divine" characteristics than its opposite, God must be a "she." What champion of a he-God could successfully prove the contrary without at the same time killing his own God? Yet both notions are equally absurd. There exists either a he-God and a she-God or no God at all, because the one necessitates the other, and without the other either one would be a most lamentable failure.

I thus show logically that a he-God cannot be a God, or a she-God cannot be a God—and nobody pretends to believe in a he and a she-God (though the most reasonable of all); also that without sex a God is strictly unscientific and unthinkable, therefore there can be no God at all.

Brother Knight's own concessions will annihilate his God and make impossible any God. He insists that God is not a he, but still talks about God "looking," "knowing," "remembering," "rewarding," etc. What folly! Now let him analyze this remnant or this shadow of a God a little further and see if it vanishes not entire: Without being a "he," without being a person, what in the name of reason is it in nature that was "looking" when Brother Knight was alone, that "knew," that took an interest in him, "remembered" his good and evil deeds, and perhaps would reward or punish him? Divested of sex and personality, what is it? What does it look like? Where is it? Is it air, like the air, in the air? Is it electricity, heat, light, ether? Is it the moon, sun, or any particular star or all the stars, planets, or constellations? What is it? Can it be seen by methods of science, reached by our telescopes or observed anywhere within the domain of nature? What and where is it, this important something that has transcendent human attributes without personality or sex, that can "look down upon him" without eyes, hear without ears, think without a brain, and love without a nervous system? I insist upon an answer. Brother Knight places his belief upon the plane of pure reason—then let him give a reasonable, direct answer. I am anxious to know the truth, to discover God—if there is one—by methods of science and reason. Let him aid me in my ardent effort to discover final truth.

He cannot do it. He is in a transition state—has jumped from the frying-pan into the fire. He is still groping his way out of that labyrinth of superstition where I was years ago. If he continues to search he will eventually evolve up to the plane of pure Materialism and reason.

He is not there now. What is it he continues to worship after discarding the Bible God? What in all the realms of nature is it that is invested with divine attributes? What in the realms of science and knowledge that even resembles, acts, or looks like a divine power? What, in nature, is conscious, outside of man and beast?

Nothing, absolutely nothing. And still he talks about a being that has no being, and about a consciousness with no possible mode of existence!

With profound humility I concede that in relation to the universe I am infinitely less than even a mouse is to a church, yet I insist that where we are all mice together it ill behooves some mice to arrogate unto themselves the airs of cats or other superior animals and pretend to know what they don't know and what they emphatically refuse or fail to prove. But this is what priests and preachers have done, and this is what Brother Knight continues to do. He says there is a being (he calls God, but unlike everybody else's God) anterior, exterior, and superior to the universe, who created and now rules it, and sundry other orthodox affirmations. He fails to define the idea or make clear this mystic creature's mode or place of existence. We simply protest against the exhibition of such arrogance on the part of some mice and insist the burden of proof falls upon them, and unless forthcoming our simple denial refutes the assertion.

Brother Knight simply falls into the same errors of the old church. He assumes that man cannot be the result of a "mere hotch-potch of matter stirred up without plan or mind," and therefore illogically assumes the existence of a logical necessity for a designer, ignoring the fact that by parity of reasoning the same necessity for another designer would then exist for his designer. But, as I stated in my previous letter, if our friend will read Haeckel's "Evolution of Man," or similar books, he will find that what to him manifests design is indeed the result of causes purely chemical and physical, and neither sentient, benevolent, nor wise.

The fact that one says there is no God where a thousand say there is proves but that like causes ever produce like effects; that the masses, being alike ignorant concerning final causes, have like superstitions and solutions. But will my good friend please tell me how the false belief of the millions who do not believe in his God can prove his God?

As a million oughts or ciphers ever remain less than a single unit, so the belief of all the world ever remains of less consequence than the opinion of one Humboldt, who affirmed there is no God.

No doubt as long as mankind are ignorant they are servile, but when free and intelligent they will vote against a tyrant or ruler in the sky or anywhere else every time. Nature rewards virtue and punishes vice deservedly, when God won't.

Rochelle, Ill., June 15, 1890.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

A LIBERAL UNIVERSITY.

Probably no other decade in the world's history has been marked by such rapid strides in civilization as the present—so many inventions, such grand discoveries in science, and above all, the founding of benevolent institutions for the helpless. But seemingly the churches perceiving the impossibility of any longer combating with brute force and ignorance against the advancement of scientific education, have determined on a reconciliation; founding schools and colleges, presided over by preachers and priests and instructed in religio-scientific text-books.

Grasping half of a scientific principle, enveloping it with a biblical myth, expounded by a Christian priest and sucked down by the credulous student as purely scientific—such is the state of things in all the church schools, and such would be the state of things if the church had power, and to a certain extent is in all of the state schools, including the primaries and colleges of our country. All who send their children to school are compelled to have them taught this religio-scientific nonsense.

But the time is approaching when this must cease—when science will be taught unalloyed by superstition.

But before this can be accomplished there must be an exertion made by every Liberal of the land, an untiring energy upon their part to outdo the enemy. We must found schools and colleges everywhere and maintain them on a perfectly Secular basis.

Therefore, I appeal to the Liberals of the Pacific coast for the founding of a Liberal university on the coast. That such a school is a necessity of our times, I think is apparent to every Liberal. We are strong enough on this coast to maintain one with the utmost ease if only started. I think to make a success it needs only to be started.

Mr. Dawes, of North Yamhill, Or., in an article in the Truth Seeker some time ago, called for twenty thousand dollars for the erection of a building. Let us have the amount. Let us show to the world that we have awoken from the slumbers of superstition. Let the stout-hearted men of the Pacific have the honor of founding and maintaining the first Liberal university in the world. Let it be the property of the Liberals of this coast, superintended by a board elected by the conventions of the Pacific states.

Let us hear through the columns of FREETHOUGHT, from the Liberals in regard to this matter.

B. S. MARTIN.

Brownsville, Or., June 20, 1890.

THERE is now a Nationalist paper at Santa Cruz. It is a four page weekly.

SEND your orders for printing to the FREETHOUGHT office. Country orders solicited.

THOMAS PAINE.

BY WILLIAM HENRY BURR.

One hundred years ago Thomas Paine was unknown to the world, and yet for nearly one hundred years his name has been a bugbear. Few people are aware that the man whose pen was as mighty as the sword of Washington in the achievement of American independence, was scarcely known as a writer until more than eight years after the close of the war. In 1791, at the age of fifty-four, he burst forth like a meteor in the literary and political world by the publication of the "Rights of Man," in answer to Edmund Burke's attack on the French Revolution. All through the American war he signed himself "Common Sense," and his only open publication prior to his return to England was a "Dissertation on Government; the Affairs of the Bank and Paper Money," in 1786.

His first acknowledged essay was a "Plea for the Excisemen" in 1772. This was anonymous, and the officers of the excise contributed to pay the expense of publishing four thousand copies.

His next known literary work was a few brilliant contributions for the "Pennsylvania Magazine" in the early part of 1775, signed "Atlanticus." How he happened to write for the magazine is explained by himself in a letter to Dr. Franklin, dated March 4, 1775:

Your countenancing me has obtained for me many friends and much reputation, for which please accept my sincere thanks. I have been applied to by several gentlemen to instruct their sons on very advantageous terms to myself, and a printer and bookseller here, a man of reputation and property, Robert Aitkin, has lately attempted a magazine, but having little or no turn that way himself, he has applied to me for assistance. He had not above six hundred subscribers when I first assisted him. We have now upwards of fifteen hundred, and daily increasing. I have not entered into terms with him. This is only the second number [February]. The first I was not concerned in.

On the tenth of January, 1776, he surprised his friend, Dr. Franklin, by the publication of the revolutionary pamphlet, "Common Sense" which fired the hearts of Americans, and in less than six months led to the Declaration of Independence. The authorship of "Common Sense" was attributed to various statesmen of the time. One edition at least, if not more, was exhausted in a month, and on the nineteenth of February Dr. Franklin, in a letter to General Charles Lee, introducing "the bearer, Mr. Paine," said, "He is the reputed and, I think, the real author of 'Common Sense.'"

And in a later edition is found this postscript to the Introduction:

Who the author of this production is, is wholly unnecessary to the public, as the object for attention is the doctrine, not the man. Yet it may not be unnecessary to say that he is unconnected with any party, and under no sort of influence, public or private, but the influence of reason and principle.

From March, 1775, to January, 1776, no trace of any writing by Paine was found until recently. In October, 1880, I first saw in the Congressional Library an American reprint of an English weekly paper called "The Crisis," twenty-seven numbers, from January 21, 1775, to July 22. The principal object of the publication was to oppose the British ministry in their conduct of affairs, especially in regard to America. The writers were anonymous and audacious. The ablest and principal contributor, beginning in April, 1775, was "Casca." No sooner had I read one of his essays than I detected the writer as Thomas Paine. "Casca" was unknown to the publisher, and was certainly about London from May until near the end of the year 1775.

What caused Paine's sudden return to England? Hostilities had begun in America, and the most pressing need of the colonies was gunpowder. In October, 1775, General Washington had penned up General Howe in Boston, but dared not advance one step, because his men had not five rounds of powder. On the ninth of December, Dr. Franklin sent a letter to M. Dumas, in France, by a Mr. Storey, inclosing one hundred pounds to defray expenses in procuring a shipment of small arms, ammunition and saltpeter. Previously, in the same year, Charles Biddle was sent to France to procure munitions of war, and in January, 1776, he returned with a cargo of saltpeter. Hence, I infer that Paine went first of all on a like mission.

Four days after my discovery that "Casca" was Thomas Paine, I was happy to find that Librarian Spofford had anticipated me, his identification of the writer being based, however, not on the series of papers by "Casca" in "The Crisis" but on a separate publication of a pamphlet entitled, "A Crisis Extraordinary," dated August 9, 1775, and signed "Casca." It was an extra paper, all about General Gage's proclamation of June 12. Taking a text from Horace, Prociat ampullas, the writer gave it a free translation thus:

On souls, of slavery more than death afraid,
Gage wastes his pardons and his gasconade.

"The Crisis" continued publication until after the Declaration of Independence. "Casca's" last communication was in the paper of April 13, 1776.

On the twenty-third of December, 1776, a little pamphlet was printed in America called "The Crisis," by "Common Sense," written on a drum-head by Thomas Paine, a private in General Washington's army. Many are still familiar with its first words:

These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country, but he that stands it now deserves the love and thanks of man and woman: Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict the more glorious the triumph.

This paper was read in camp to every corporal's guard, and in three days our army won a victory at Trenton. Three weeks later came the second number of "The Crisis," addressed to Lord Howe, and the sixteenth and last of these papers is dated December 9, 1783.

In 1796 fourteen of the sixteen numbers of the American "Crisis" were published in England, and prefixed to them was "Casca's" "Crisis Extraordinary," of August 9, 1775, signed "American C. S.," i.e., "Common Sense." This was such a puzzle to Paine's biographer, Sherwin, in 1819, that he attributed its insertion to the ignorance of the person who furnished the copy. But Librarian Spofford, having detected "Casca" as Paine, made this margin note in Sherwin's book:

It is by Paine, but does not belong to the "Crisis."

Mr. Spofford was not yet aware that "Casca," i.e., Paine, wrote not less than thirty articles for "The Crisis" of 1775-6. And as Paine was in France in 1796, it is quite possible that he authorized the English publisher of his American papers, called "The Crisis," to put in as number one "A Crisis Extraordinary," changing the signature from "Casca" to "American C. S."

When Paine returned to England in 1787 he immediately published a pamphlet, entitled "Prospects on the War." It was anonymous. Six years later, when he became known as a writer, some critic detected his authorship of that pamphlet, and it was republished as his work.

Paine's success as a pamphleteer was unprecedented. Not less than one hundred thousand copies of his "Common Sense" were sold in America, and the demand for his "Rights of Man" was much greater. Being now, in 1791, first known as a political and revolutionary writer, he acknowledged himself as the author of "Common Sense." But yet his apparent aversion to personal fame or wish for concealment is shown in the preface to part second of the "Rights of Man," where he says: "Had not Mr. Burke urged the controversy, I had most probably been a silent man."

To counteract the effect of the "Rights of Man," one George Chambers was paid five hundred pounds to write a defamatory life of Paine. It purported to be written by Francis Oldys. Paine at once detected the author, and the only answer he made to the calumnies was, "I wish his own life and that of the cabinet were as good."

Up to this time Paine had never written a word to indicate that he was a skeptic in regard to biblical inspiration, and had he died at the age of fifty-six the world would never have known what his religious views were. For prudential reasons he intended to publish his thoughts on religion as his last offering to the world. But in December, 1793, in hourly expectation of arrest and death by the guillotine, he made haste to prepare a portion of the work. With no Bible at hand he completed the first part of the "Age of Reason," gave the manuscript to Joel Barlow, and in less than six hours he was sent to prison.

SUNDAY LAW ENFORCED IN WASHINGTON.

My constant, earnest appeals for all Liberals to enroll in the state organization for mutual protection, and so we may reap the harvest of the good seed sown and enjoy the fruits of our bill of rights in the constitution, meets with cool indifference from many. "Law is all right; no need of organization; can't have any religious exercises in our public schools; we don't have to take oaths—affirm, just as we please; all church property has to pay full share of taxes; never can enforce any Sunday-observance law—our constitution fixes all that."

Yes, some Liberals, at cost of time, means, and hard work, secured all that. The constitution does guarantee absolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious belief and sentiment, and that no one shall be disturbed in person or property on account of religion. But eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and if Liberals do not watch, guard, and defend the rights and privileges the constitution affords us, the despotic tyranny of the church will be exercised despite our constitutional guarantee.

It is only by rigid, scrimping economy I can live—I cannot afford the luxury of a daily paper—have to depend on accidental opportunities to read other people's. Our president informed me that the Post-Intelligencer contained an article on "Religion in Our Schools" that I ought to read and could use for reference, so I indulged in the extravagance of purchasing a copy, and found the following article:

"TACOMA CLOTHIERS FINED FOR SELLING GOODS ON SUNDAY.

"TACOMA, June 18.—The clerks employed in the retail clothing trade recently formed an association with the principal object of securing the closing of all clothing stores on Sunday, and appointed T. Nash to have the Sunday law enforced. On Monday warrants were sworn out against L. Moses, J. E. Heilick, David Jordan, and Abe Blask. They were heard before Justice Patrick this morning, and fined $25 each and costs. The cases were all appealed to the superior court."

There are no members of the W. S. U. in Tacoma. I have arranged to go there and deliver lectures in the basement of the Unitarian church on the evenings of the 25th, 26th, and 27th. Have written to each of the parties arrested. Presume none of them are Liberals—certain they are not liberal, for they do not take a Liberal paper, are not members of or contributors to the W. S. U. . But the wrong done them, the outrage of arrest and fine, the ignoring of constitutional rights, is just the same, and if not checked it will surely reach Liberals ere long. Oh, that the facts might be sensed so that each Liberal would feel the duty to be prepared for defense of others, so that when the iron clutch of ecclesiastical despotism seized on one all could rally to the rescue!

I shall do all possible, with our very limited means, to arouse the people of Tacoma to a sense of the gross wrong done, and endeavor to post them on the law of the Sabbath and Sunday, both biblical and constitutional, in hopes the informed, intelligent will check the fanatics in such outrages on personal liberty and constitutional rights of the citizen. C. B. REYNOLDS, 1204 Sixth st., Seattle, Wash. Sec. W. S. U.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE STATE.

The question as to whether Christianity is the law of the land, which has been resurrected by the public school discussions, is likely to be settled once for all by the supreme court. No actual litigation arising out of it has ever been important and hardly contested enough to carry it through all the intermediate courts to the final tribunal. A case arising in the state of Tennessee, however, has been taken up by the National Religious Liberty Association, which has already carried it to the supreme court of the state and will appeal it from there to the United States Supreme court.

The case involves the right of a man to work on Sunday. It arises directly out of the act of a person who believes that Saturday should be observed as the Sabbath, but it will serve to test the general principle whether the state has the right to compel a man to keep any Sabbath at all. R. M. King is a farmer, and was indicted by the circuit court of Obion county, Tennessee, for quietly working on his own premises, not in sight of any place of worship. None of the witnesses for the state testified to having been disturbed in any way, or to having a knowledge that any one else had been disturbed, except that their moral sense had been shocked by seeing work done on Sunday. Mr. King is a member of the Seventh-day Adventist church, a sect which observes the seventh day (Saturday) as the Sabbath, in the place of Sunday, the first day of the week. The defense has been made by the National Religious Liberty Association, an organization of recent origin, which admits no one into its membership who does not believe in the Christian religion, but holds that the functions of religion and the state are entirely distinct, and for interests of both, should be kept separate.

The defendant was first arraigned before a justice of the peace and fined $3 and costs, amounting in all to about $12, which he paid. He was afterward indicted for the same offense by the grand jury at Troy, Obion county, and was convicted and fined $75. An appeal was taken to the supreme court on the plea: First, that the acts complained of and proven did not constitute a nuisance, as charged in the indictment; Second, that the court erred in not permitting the defendant to prove that he had been once arrested, tried, convicted, and fined for the same offense, and that he had paid the fine and costs; Third, on the ground of the appeal of the district attorney-general to the religious prejudices of the jury, by his bitter denunciations of the religious views of the defendant, and confounding the sect with which he is connected with the Mormons.

The supreme court confirmed the decision of the court below and the case will now be appealed to the supreme court of the United States on constitutional grounds, the appeal to the state supreme court having been taken merely upon technical errors. Several similar cases are pending in Tennessee, where an association has been organized, the members of which pledge themselves to prosecute every violation of the Sunday laws. A number of persons who observe the seventh day as the Sabbath are now under indictment for working on Sunday. They are tenacious of their faith, and claim the right under the first and fourteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States, and the bill of rights of the state of Tennessee, to work on Sunday. This will be the first case involving the constitutionality of Sunday laws that has been brought before the United States supreme court, and the decision will be looked for with great interest by other than Seventh-day Adventists.—Portland Oregonian.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XVI,

ENTITLED DUALITY.

Simon in Deep Distress.

1. And Simon departed upon his journey, and took leave of the guides. But the guide whose name was Godlyguts went with him to show him the way.
2. And they went in search of a certain city called the city of Sanctification, but they could not find it.
3. For the gutter called the Narrowway branched off in every direction, and the branches ran into each other, and through each other, and over each other, and under each other.
4. And there were turnings here, and twistings there; on this side was a bend and on that side was a bend; in one place the gutter was so deep that daylight was no longer seen, and in another so shallow that the pilgrims could scarce keep within it.
5. And Simon went on painfully and wearily day by day, tumbling headlong down into the deep places, and toiling up the ascent to the shallows.
6. And everywhere in the gutters were great stones called Arguments, which were cast in by the Giants, and they were exceedingly troublesome to the pilgrims, causing them often to fall down, and compelling them to clamber over, for some of the stones were very great and not easily got over.
7. And Simon and Godlyguts went on together, helping each other over the great stones, and tumbling down together, and lifting each other up again, and condoling with each other, and saying, We fell not, nor can we fall, and even while they were yet saying it, they went down sprawling.

8. And it came to pass at a certain place one of the Giants came and threw down a great stone upon them, where the gutter was very deep.

9. And the great stone came down very swiftly, hissing as it fell, and Godlyguts being expert in such matters avoided it, but it fell upon Simon, and as an hammer driveth in a nail, so did it drive Simon into the ground.

10. Even up to the ears did it drive him into the ground, and not being able to get out, he took good counsel and stayed in, and his wits went gathering wool, and found little.

11. And when his wits came back from their journey, behold Godlyguts was gone away.

12. And Simon went after him, and overtook him, and said unto him, Why hast thou forsaken me, seeing I am nailed fast in the ground, and the great stone over me.

13. And after much entreaty Godlyguts went back with Simon, but they could not find the stone, not the place where Simon was nailed down.

14. Then was Simon in sore distress, and went about as one distraught, moaning his grief to the winds, and Godlyguts grew weary of the search.

15. And Simon bemoaned himself bitterly, saying, Woe is me, woe is me, woe is me; I am one of the lost sheep. Was ever man in such woeful guise, that he should not be able to find himself. Woe is me in very deed, for I know not where I am, nor where my carcass is laid. Oh, Simon, Simon, son of my father, where art thou? Why hidest thou thyself from me? Thou whom my soul loveth above all men, where art thou?

16. And after many days Simon found the stone, and was exceedingly joyful thereat, and he began diligently to dig under the stone, and in due time found himself.

17. And Simon was much shattered by the stone falling upon him, and he gathered himself up with great care, and placed himself in a basket, and putting the basket on his head he went on his journey.

18. And when he came to Gilead he repaired to the physician that dwelt there, and the physician repaired him.*

19. And Simon went on his way rejoicing.

20. And Simon rejoiced exceedingly.

21. And it came to pass that when Simon came to the—

To be Continued.

A LETTER FROM A WEST INDIAN.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have received your noble letter on the 28th inst., and welcome it is to one who for many months past has been seeking for what you have given. Your offer in the same is accepted, and as soon as I have received the copy which you sent, and which I believe is now on its way to me, I shall send you an order.

Your informant has done me a great favor, for which I return my warmest thanks, trusting he may send my name to all the Liberal journals of the United States. I have shown your communication to many of my friends who are of my opinion, and it is as welcome to them as if you had forwarded the same to them; their co-operation is certain, and ere this reach you an order will be on its way to California. I shall be thankful for any Liberal tracts or pamphlets published by you, and all information from you will be accepted with the greatest kindness. I shall be glad to serve as your agent this way, should you deem it fit to appoint me.

* In this verse, and the six preceding, the doctrine of the duality of man's nature is plainly and unequivocally propounded.

† To our excessive dismay and grief, and to the incalculable loss of science, religion, and the rest of the professions, the rest of this highly interesting and very valuable chapter is for the present at least, lost! An irreverent rat (our eternal curses attend it), with a literary taste of ravenous dimensions, has eaten it! May its mother eat dirt! Our sorrow is of course great, and yet we do not sorrow as one without hope. We have borrowed a trap of Anthony Comstock (than whom a more tricky trapper never breathed), and have set it with a bate which we are sure neither gods nor men can resist. In the event of our catching the ignoble animal (to which end we desire the earnest prayers of the faithful), we shall engage an orthodox clergyman (than whom at cutting up the dead none have had more extensive practice) to perform a post mortem examination, and having thus recovered the lost manuscript, we shall publish it in our second or third edition. Should the rat, however, elect to keep out of the trap, we shall engage the renowned strategist Moody. To say more than this is unnecessary. TRS.

Liberalism is still in its infancy, though it is much on the march from a few weeks past, through the foolishness of some misinformed officials by one of their ill-managed organs that claimed to be the mouthpiece of the police, etc. (The Port of Spain Gazette). The affair, though silly, has led to the opening of many eyes that were shut, and there is much in favor of Free-thought since the occurrence, which I will now relate. Through the distribution of a few tracts by myself and several other persons, who thought that some good might be done, the above named sheet thought it best to raise the Christian war cry of Infidelity. True to their principles of slavery and cowardice, the church and government came to the rescue, and one person, who they thought was more ignorant than the rest of us, was apprehended by a detective sent for that purpose. It turned out in the end that the magistrate considered the matter so simple that he sent the young man away, and charged the police to be careful in the future how they tamper with the liberty of the people. This will give you an idea of our present state of government. The truth is, I am bent on fighting for the Liberal cause, and if even a law was framed similar to that of the Inquisition, that could not turn me from the course on which I have embarked. The emissaries of Rome are trying their utmost that Trinidad may be their stronghold in the West Indies, but there is a movement which all their vigilance cannot hinder, and success is certain. The time has come; already many of their staunchest adherents have broken the chains placed on their necks, and they have exchanged their worn-out creed for the truths set forth by Thomas Paine and others. We, the followers of that liberator of mankind, are trying our best to advance the doctrine taught by the great Ingersoll, and although it is a characteristic of those who are under British rule to be lagging in the rear, still there is a forward tendency which only requires support. I therefore ask you to send all available help possible by cheap tracts, etc., which we will be willing always to purchase.

Hoping to be favored by earliest opportunity with further communication, I remain, gentlemen, yours most truly,
Trinidad, Port of Spain. THOMAS C. JACKSON.

A GOOD MAN ASSAILED.

FRIEND MACDONALD: That article of H. L. Knight against Stanford, which appeared in FREETHOUGHT under date June 14, is simply atrocious. Leland Stanford is one of God's noblemen. He is to-day the most popular man in the state of California. He went to California a poor man—he made his money in the state in a perfectly legitimate manner, and now is spending it in the state for the benefit of the state. His building and endowing the Stanford University will immortalize him. His endowment is liberal, greater than ever was made by any other man for such purpose. To have him vilified, belied, and slandered, if that were possible, by such an old crank as Knight, is infamous. I regret that you should allow the columns of FREETHOUGHT to be prostituted for such base purposes. Many of the readers of FREETHOUGHT are friends of Stanford, and everyone will resent that dirty article. I don't believe such personal articles against anyone will do any good to the community, but will injure the paper that publishes it.

With many kind wishes for your prosperity, I remain, as ever,
Albany, N. Y. Yours truly, A. SCHELL.

* * * On another page are a cut and explanation of the Thurston Fruit Drier. Those acquainted with the necessities of the fruit-drying industry will be able at a glance to detect the value of this device. Mr. Thurston has just secured a patent upon his invention and desires that a company may be organized to manufacture and introduce the drier. Inquirers may address Geo. E. Macdonald, FREETHOUGHT office.

INDUCE your friends to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT.

Interesting Notes From Oregon.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The present season has been remarkably dry in the Willamette valley, and the drouth continued up to the time that Putnam came into the valley, and the Campbellite camp-meeting commenced at Turner. Then the refreshing rains descended and watered the thirsty ground. Many attributed the rain to be brought by the camp-meeting, as the Campbellites love wa'er, and it is supposed that they are regarded of "gawd;" but the advent of Putnam was no doubt an active factor, as the Campbellites always "raise a storm" when an Infidel lecturer comes around. Otherwise we are having a season of quietude here in Oregon. This valley has gone decidedly dry so far this summer (until just lately), crops generally will be short, and the dry got away considerably with your correspondent's strawberries.

I am writing this because I see nothing in FREETHOUGHT from this section, and your readers may think that we are all dead. But we are not. The Freethought cause was never stronger here than it is now, although there is not much noise being made about it.

I have got a novelty in the shape of a hen (domestic) raising a brood of a dozen China Pheasant chickens; own countrymen of the gorgeous bird that's standing on his four by six inch landing, o'er the photograph of Putnam, just inside the office door of the Freethought Publishing Company. They are three weeks old now; run at large with the hen; can fly a little, and are lively as crickets; and, although they are timid, they are not wild. Like curses and crows, they come home to roost, and get under the wings of the hen same as their more civilized cousins do. But the natural instinct of their race for running and hiding is still strong in them. They resemble in this respect the Christian, the Prohibitionist, and the protectionist when these try to use argument; they always want to keep a little way off, and to have something to dodge behind.

Aumsville, Or.

F. S. MATTESON.

Come and Gone.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The most intelligent audience that met in Portland last evening convened at Nonpariel hall to hear Putnam on "The Religious Conspiracy."

B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis, the "old man true and tried," was there. The intelligent Priestley, whose grand-uncle was Dr. Priestley of England, came ten miles to the lecture. J. H. Fisk, the chemist, was there. That brave and generous little man, Saunders, who is on duty for life, was there. R. D. Sutton, the ex-minister, who will debate theology with any man in the world, was there. David Wittenberg, the Hungarian patriot, who is a life member of the Oregon State Secular Union, was there and threw a handful of silver into the hat before Putnam was done speaking. Carrie E. Haight, the grand little woman who "works and works ever," was there. Miss Elva Davidson, one of our state secretaries, whose parents and grand-parents have been Liberals for seventy years, was there. And last but not least, the Oregon Hypatia, Miss Mattie Blaisdell, was there; unfurled the banner of the Oregon State Secular Union, and beautified the platform with blooming roses. Her black eyes, beaming countenance, and queenly demeanor pronounced her the belle of the evening. Putnam did not lecture. He simply gave us a grand oration—the best we ever had in Portland. He has made himself the Bradlaugh of America. Long may he live.

Portland, Or.

C. BEAL.

Conservative Mr. Barrett.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have no desire to dictate what you shall do, or what you shall not do—that is your province. I would advise every Liberal paper to eliminate Elmina Drake Slenker from its columns. She is not popular with the Liberals of this locality. She is considered a woman of easy principles; a damage to any paper that accepts her contributions. The "Word," Heywood's paper, and some of its contributions are Elmina's gender. Another matter with some of the so-called Liberal papers—the editors are rebels, and eulogize secession. This will do in some sections. Brother Shaw, of the "Pulpit," is a rank secession sympathizer. I read his "Pulpit" more than a year. Finally the cloven foot appeared in a eulogy on Jeff Davis. I wrote him and he turned my letter over to one Dr. Park, of Waco, Texas, who scored me in his answer concerning Jeff and the lost cause. Uncle Jeff was the most patriotic martyr on earth.

Shaw tried to shirk the situation. Some two years ago I identified myself with the Agnostics of Missouri. They are all rebels and I will have none of them. Now rebeldom has nothing in particular to do with one's religion. A man may be a believer in Liberalism, but an out-and-out traitor to his country. The two don't blend very well, however. Of the two, loyalty and Liberalism are the best and both should be adopted.

The Truth Seeker and the San Francisco FREETHOUGHT, I believe to be loyal. Certainly they are both superior journals. If such productions as are contributed to the columns of the "Word" and "Lucifer," also some other Lilliputian sheets, are a necessity, let's accept them, if not. let us drop them like a hot potato. The human anatomy is all right enveloped in legitimate covering, but exposed in its nudity is not a spectacle for public gaze.

O. S. BARRETT.

Adrian, Mich.

A Suggestion.

To the Editors of Freethought:

There is much time, fuss, feathers, display, and expensive military accoutrement connected with the almost daily drill at the old Montgomery Block, and elsewhere, of our superb and very renowned police force; supposably necessary for some future great riot, which, in the minds of many astute ones, is always anticipated.

All this unnecessary parade of what our magnificent force might do may be dispensed with.

Let it be understood that in case of riot the fire alarm be turned in—a general one if necessary—and then thoroughly drench the unruly crowd with a liberal supply of Spring Valley water. Life and broken heads would be spared and the efficiency of our fire department would drown out all signs of mobocracy.

Publish this. Send a copy to the board of supervisors, and, with the aid of your contemporaries, the suggestion will meet with public favor, and our police force have more time for duty on their regular beats or for rest in their hours off.

San Francisco.

S.

Death of G. W. Tiffany.

Dear Freethought:

By this morning's Oregonian I see that Geo. W. Tiffany, of Salem, Or., is dead. This is sad news. He helped organize the Oregon State Secular Union; was at the last convention, and was the first one to pay in $25 and become a life member. He had unbounded faith and confidence in the Union. I am doing him no injustice in saying that he had the same confidence in me as its presiding officer, and this urged me forward in the hard work so that his expectations might be at least partially realized. Let the next convention honor this grand Liberal.

Portland, Or.

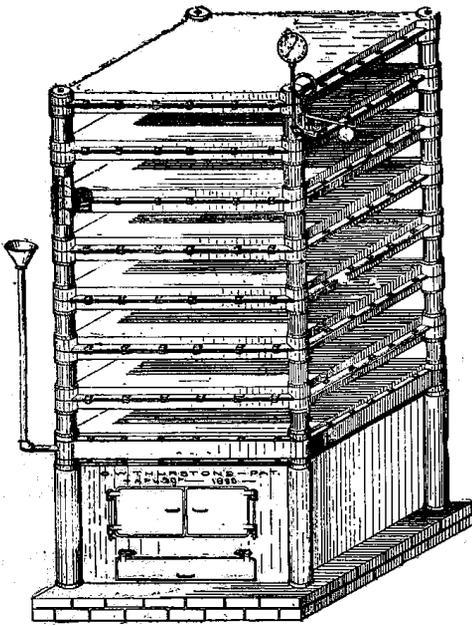

C. BEAL.

W. F. JAMIESON has been almost constantly lecturing in Iowa for the past five months. He was engaged to deliver the Fourth of July oration at Hampton, which created consternation among the orthodox, who were fearful that he might say something against religion, and some politicians surmised that he might advocate the rights of workingmen to equal liberty with millionaire kings. Mr. Jamieson has several calls to Minnesota, where he may go in July. He invites correspondence from Minnesota and Wisconsin. Address at Des Moines, Iowa.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Mitchell	July 5, 6	Heppner	Aug. 4, 5, 6
Prineville and vicinity	July 8 to 16	Dayton	Aug. 10, 11
Monument	July 18	Rosalia	Aug. 13
Hamilton	July 19	Plaza	Aug. 14
Fox	July 20, 21, 22	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
John Day	July 24	Spokane Falls	Aug. 17
Prairie City	July 25	Davenport	Aug. 18, 19
Baker City	July 26, 27	Colville	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Union	July 28	Buckley	Aug. 24, 25
New Bridge	July 30, 31, Aug. 1	Port Townsend	Aug. 31
Summerville	Aug. 2, 3, 4

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

The Thurston Steam Dryer.

The above cut illustrates the Thurston Portable Family Fruit Dryer, which is equally well adapted to use in a factory of any conceivable dimensions.

It is formed in sections. First a stove or furnace $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet square, to be lined with fire brick.

Second, a shallow boiler, of the same size as the furnace, which rests on the top of the stove. The cover of this boiler has a hole at each corner; a short tube, 3 inches in length, is placed over each of these holes on the corners as rests for the next section, which is perforated by a hole at the top and bottom. These holes are placed over the above mentioned tubes and form, thus, a connection through which steam may pass.

Thus section after section may be added until the Dryer is built to any height desired. It is then securely bound together by strong rods attached to the boiler at one end and passing up through the steam passages at the corners, and secured by nuts at the top end.

Each section or steam chamber is formed of two parts, either cast or pressed, a little cupping and to be fastened at the edges by either bolts or rivets, after having been properly packed. Flanges are made for the rivets.

Live steam is supplied to each corner of every section, and thus the heat will be constant and equal at all points all the time. The steam can be raised and held at any degree of pressure desired, and thus the desired degree of heat can be maintained. The fruit, placed on trays, can be slid into the spaces between the sections and will receive heat both from above and below, and as all sides of this machine are entirely open, all moisture from the drying fruit will be expelled, by the radiation of heat, the moment it leaves the fruit.

All steam is condensed and returned to the boiler and thus heat is economized. It needs no expert to run the machinery; any child can do that. No fruit need ever be burned. As there is a safety valve no explosion can ever occur. There is a tube attached to the boiler through which water is supplied. The inner end of this tube dips to the bottom of the boiler so that steam cannot escape unless the water be exhausted; more should then be added. This tube may be used to indicate steam pressure by placing a float in it with a stem attached. It will also act as a safety valve in case of too great heat.

I claim that this machine will do more and better work at less cost for help and fuel than any other now in use. By arranging a number of these machines in a factory, and attaching proper steam power, a factory of any conceivable dimensions may be established and run to advantage.

G. W. THURSTON, SR.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sops'isms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words. Richard Chenevix Trench.
31. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
32. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
39. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
40. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
45. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
46. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
47. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
48. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
49. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
50. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
51. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
52. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
53. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
54. Illusions. James Sully.
55. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
56. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
57. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
58. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
59. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
60. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
61. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
62. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
63. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
64. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
65. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
66. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
67. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
68. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
69. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
70. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin.
71. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
72. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
73. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
74. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
75. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
76. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
77. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
78. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
79. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
80. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
81. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
82. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
83. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
84. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
85. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
86. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. III. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. III. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrat'd. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. III. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer Wymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards,

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

- Architects and Builders.
F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.
- Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.
Hopper & Schroeder, 39½ Fremont st., cor. Mission.
- Assayers:
H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.
- Boot and Shoemaker.
George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater.
C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.
- Cabinet-makers.
A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.
- Carpenters and Builders.
A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND
- Contracting Painters.
Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and
- Crockery, Glassware, Etc.
Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.
- Dentists.
S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)
- Geologist.
Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.
- Independent German Congregation.
Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.
- Laundries.
J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.
- Lawyers.
Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.
- Lodging Houses.
S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.
- Merchant Tailors.
Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.
Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.
- Magnesia Sectional Covering.
C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.
- Music Teachers.
Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)
- Physicians and Surgeons.
G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.
Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.
- Stoves and Plumbing.
. Koch, 1063 Howard st.
- Stoves (Gasoline).
Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.
- Upholstering and Furniture.
August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.
- Wine, Beer, and Liquor.
Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.
Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.
J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.
The Social, 1057 Polsoni street, A.G. Wood & Co.
- Watchmakers and Jewelers.
Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.
Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,
USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Par-ton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.
BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Precept and Practice.

She stood on the high-school platform
In her sweet white muslin dress,
From her essay a ribbon fluttered,
And it dealt with happiness.

"It is what we do for others,"
She said, "that must bring us bliss;
The highest delight the selfish
Can never fail to miss.

"Just in giving there is a gaining;
He who stops to count the cost
Loses all the good he might get
If the thought of self were lost."

And her mother heard the essay,
But her thoughts seemed bound to roam
From the subject; and she pondered,
For she'd seen the girl at home.

English as She is Wrote.

Under this head the Redding Free Press prints a few of the answers made by those ambitious to be teachers in Shasta county to questions submitted by the Board of Education:

Use the following words in sentences of sufficient length to show their meaning:

Tantamount—The tantamount is an animal of the monkey species; the tantamount was killed; he had a view of the tantamount last evening; he was willing to enter the tantamount.

Oscillation—We do not believe that oscillation is the proper method of punishment in this country; oscillation is usually painless.

Resuscitate—They resuscitate medicine into the flesh; he plainly saw that to resuscitate the question would be to lose all hope; he said you should never resuscitate.

Propinquity—The propinquity is so great that he objected to take part in the debate.

Inscrutable—The metal was inscrutable.

Obscure—The obsequious consequences resulting from his death has caused general disappointment.

Surreptitious—The man being of a surreptitious nature the people would not trust him.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.
Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against

LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet." —Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet." —The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive." —Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading." —Boston Investigator.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the Editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception, Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extirmination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper. PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven ewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Hardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm; large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 542 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index, $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

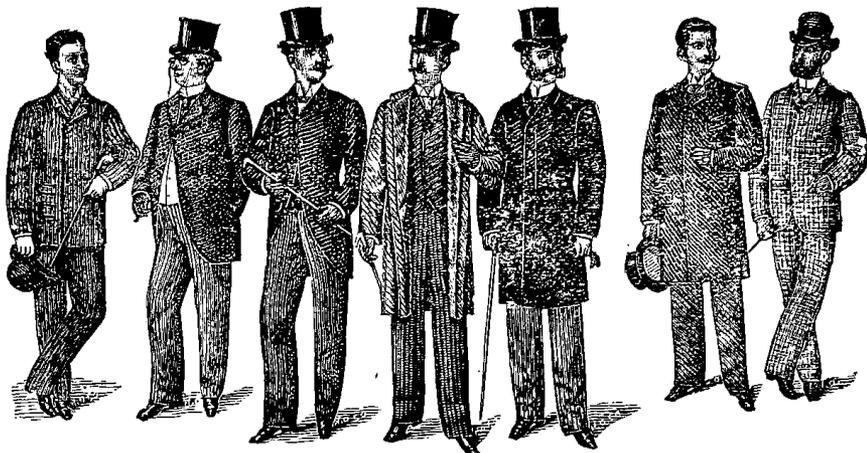

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

Works by Alexander Bain.
English Composition and Rhetoric.....	$1.75
Education as a Science.....	1.75
Works by Charles Darwin.
Origin of Species, 2 vols.....	$4.00
Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....	2.00
Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin, 2 vols.....	4.50
Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....	2.00
Works by J. W. Draper.
History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....	$1.75
Works by Ernst Haeckel.
The History of Creation, 2 vols.....	$5.00
Works by Huxley.
Lay Sermons.....	$1.75
The Advance of Science.....	.25
American Addresses.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin.....	.50
The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.00
Works by John Stewart Mill.
Principles of Political Economy, 2 vols.....	$4.00
On Liberty.....	1.25
Works by Richard A. Proctor.
Other Worlds than Ours.....	$1.75
Our Place among Infinites.....	1.75
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.75
The Moon.....	2.00
Works by Herbert Spencer.
Studies of Sociology.....	$1.50
Man versus the State.....	.30
First Principles.....	2.00
Principles of Biology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Sociology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.00
Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....	2.00
Education.....	1.25
Organic Evolution.....	.75
Works by Andrew D. White.
Paper-Money Inflation in France.....	$.50
The Warfare of Science.....	1.00
Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
Body and Mind.....	$1.50
Responsibility in Mental Disease.....	1.50
Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
Handbook of Household Science.....	$1.75
Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....	1.75
MISCELLANEOUS.
By Carl Marx.
Capital.....	$3.00
By Asa Gray.
Darwiniana.....	$2.00
By L. L. McLaughlin.
Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....	$3.50
By John B. Henck.
Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....	$2.50
By C. Marcel.
Study of Languages.....	$1.25
By Lester F. Ward.
Dynamic Sociology, 2 vols.....	$5.00
By Frederick Overman.
A Treatise on Metallurgy.....	$5.00
B. F. G. Fairfield.
Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....	$1.25
By W. B. Carpenter.
Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....	$1.25
By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
Evolution.....	$1.50
By Sir John Lubbock.
Origin of Civilization.....	$5.00
By Charles A. Abbott.
A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....	$1.50
By Garrett P. Serviss.
Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....	$1.50
By Nathan Sheppard.
Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....	$1.50
English as She is Spoke.....	$.30
English as She is Wrote.....	.30
Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories.....	.30
C. medies for Amateur Acting.....	.30
The Distracted Young Preacher.....	.25
Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR..... $25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK

OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors. The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A Very Bad Boy.

Minister's Son—Pa, I believe you would make an awful good prize-fighter.

Minister (greatly shocked)—You rude child! What makes you entertain such an unholy thought?

“Because I notice how easy it is for you at church to put everybody asleep that appears before you.”

They Always Take Them In.

Wales, to English duke—What part of the States did you do?

His Grace, who has been traveling in America—The hotels.

HOLWORTHY (entering church late)—How long has Dr. Vox been preaching? Sexton—Twenty-two years, sir. Holworthy—I guess I went go in then.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00	6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " Diamond*.....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....	$1.50
Six Months.....	.75
Three Months.....	.50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. “I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar.”—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

=====NOW READY=====

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without
this Trade Mark on
Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

—FOR—

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,

Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica,
Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all
Kidney, Liver, and Stomach
Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C. H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and
Manufacturer, No. 40
O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S
HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H.
Webb's Hæmony.

Hon A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S. F.
Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres Sather Banking Co S F.
Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco
P. J. Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
J. Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.
James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1.
Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose
Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy
HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed
and shipped by Express to all parts of the world.
Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells,
Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

To the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

O Talmage, man of God—and gall—
And shrewd as Mammon's self withal,
You've robbed the ruins of sacred places
To deck the temple which you think
You'll build with other people's "chink;"
You've played the part of second Paul,
And on Mars hill made your grimaces;
You've duly kept the daily papers
Informed of all your daily capers;
You've traced the route of Joseph's flight
To Egypt, and have climbed the height
Of pyramids, even to the spire.
Pray, would it be too much to ask
That you complete the holy task
And to the deserts now retire?
For forty days resist temptation,
To blazon to the Yankee nation
Your every act and lay aside
For forty nights your priestly pride?
—Chicago News.

He Confessed.

Minister (to tramp)—Tell me, now, haven't you stolen something recently?

Tramp—Yes, boss, I have.

Minister—Well, promise me now that you will give it back to the owner. What did you steal?

Tramp—A ride on a freight train.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,

Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,

Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.

HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m.

25tf

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D., $1.

How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D., $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy, $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook, $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer, $1.

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache.

By M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the

Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina, Ills. 50.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook, $1.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Len-

nox Browne, F. R. C. S. 30 cents

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices
and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank
and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes
and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc.,
built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz
Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time,
therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered
on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—
causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures,
embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.

OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 28.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888 world ought to have a better excuse to offer for hard times than the intemperance of one per cent of its inhabitants

Our Protestant ministers in their union meeting last Monday erroneous, as Mr. Sinz's charges, for the above reasons, were not presented until after his committee had been discharged. Furthermore, according to Mr. Sinz, the charge of embezzlement is against Mr. Ashton, not Haskell. Mr. Sinz does not think that the statement of the committee, or the technical correction made in the paragraph alluded to, materially changes the aspect of affairs.

A BRAZEN LIE.

The Catholic "Monitor," a weekly paper published by S. J. McCormick in San Francisco, with the most perfect indifference to truth, makes this statement:

"The achievers of great things have never been Infidels."

The occasion for the above untruth is the pious claim of Stanley, the African explorer whom John Burns has so well characterized as the "buccaneer of the Congo," that, "constrained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess his aid before men." Conceding that Stanley has achieved "great things," what has he accomplished of value compared with the explorer Humboldt, one of the most distinguished men, as well as Infidels, that ever lived? Stanley will be remembered as a daring man, and an astute advertiser of himself, but his achievements give him scarcely more credit for benefit to the human race than Allen Kelly's capture of the "Examiner's" grizzly entitles the latter to.

But how about other Infidels beside Humboldt? It seems to us that Darwin achieved something, and the same is true of Tyndall, Spencer, Huxley, and Haeckel. To go back farther we might mention Giordano Bruno, the astronomer murdered by the church; Shakespeare, who achieved the greatest things known to literature; Leibnitz, the "universal genius;" Voltaire, the intellectual director of his age; Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and Thomas Paine. The things these men achieved will make them live as long as history, while Stanley, as well as his great rival in sensationalism, the Hon. Phineas T. Barnum, will go into early forgetfulness.

Perhaps the "Monitor" doubts that Rousseau ever accomplished anything, or George Washington, who was not a Roman Catholic; or Edward Gibbon; or Goethe; or Laplace the astronomer. Beyond question, Dr. McCormick never heard of the work of Stephen Girard, or Robert Owen, or Gerrit Smith, or William Lloyd Garrison the abolitionist; of John Stuart Mill, the greatest of political economists; of Abraham Lincoln. And lastly, the editor of the "Monitor" has probably lived in San Francisco a half dozen years without hearing of the Mount Hamilton Observatory or the Pioneer Hall, or of the California Academy of Sciences, the work of that conspicuous Infidel, the late James Lick. Never having heard of these men, Dr. McCormick may have spoken more from ignorance than from a desire to lie when he said that "the achievers of great things have never been Infidels." Otherwise he is convicted of deliberate falsehood.

It would be untrue to say that the converse of the "Monitor's" statement is true, namely, that "the achievers of great things have never been Christians," because religion has not prevented all who believed in it from distinguishing themselves in some useful manner. Agassiz professed Christianity. Isaac Newton accepted the same religion subsequent to the unfortunate lesion of the brain which robbed him of his reasoning faculties. The blind Milton was a Christian. These men and others of similar belief made their names famous in the same manner that Infidels have done. It was therefore not their religion but their humanity which distinguished them. But Christians have had other ways of achieving "great things," although those of them who were noted for their piety have left us little to remember them by except their crimes. Who are the most prominent men in the history of the church? Possibly Constantine, the murderer, is first, and following him is a line of popes, cardinals, and ecclesiastical officers who in a civilized and enlightened age would not escape the gallows. In the list of eminent Infidels these characters have no parallels, and only by defining crime, persecution, and general infamy as "great things" can it be said that the achievers of great things have never been Infidels.

We withhold our opinion of an editor who will tell a deliberate lie in his paper and trust to the ignorance of his readers to escape detection; and our opinion is withheld simply for the reason that there are no words in the language to express it.

HELEN GARDENER's reputation as an author receives new lustre from her latest published book, "A Thoughtless Yes." It is a collection of nine short stories, covering something over two hundred pages and forming as interesting a book as one could wish for leisure reading. The paper and print are elegant; the cover is attractive, and bears this sentiment in the handwriting of Colonel Ingersoll: "The downcast eyes of timid acquiescence have paid to impudent authority the tribute of a thoughtless yes." For the information of those desiring the book we add that the price is fifty cents and that "A Thoughtless Yes" is for sale at this office.

DR. JOHN MONROE, of Day's Gap, Alabama, has lately "been paying great attention to religious matters," and became insane. On July 8 he shot and killed his four children and then killed himself. The superstition of which Monroe and his four children were the victims is still being preached by one hundred thousand paid priests and ministers in this country!

C. BEAL, of Portland, was in San Francisco last week, but could not tarry; yet may his stay be long upon the earth. He is an earnest and whole-hearted worker for Freethought.

OBSERVATIONS.

The man who came into FREETHOUGHT office last week to convert the whole establishment, has twice returned. Once he bought the "Age of Reason," and again Paine's theological works complete. He now admits that there is much on the Freethought side worthy of study.

THE WIND.

Within the caves of ocean's waves
I nestle my supple grace;
Through the mighty lair of the hollow air
I move at a tiger's pace;
I gently creep round the babe asleep,
And waft the lover's sigh;
Each tiny flower has learnt my power,
And bows when I pass by

The fields of wheat yield to my feet
In rhythms smooth and long;
The forest leaves unbind their sheaves,
And breathe a whispering song.
I blow the ships with cunning lips
Of promise false and fair;
None ever know who with me go
What their journey's end or where.

I toss the sands in tropic lands,
And whirl the flakes of snow
When winter white my hand clasps tight,
And we merrily onward go.

I softly blow the seeds of woe
That yield disease and death,
Which I sweep again from the fevered plain
With the rush of my healing breath.

When the hot sun pours from heaven's doors
The flame of his burning heart,
I grow distressed, to madness pressed,
Then leap like Jove's red dart:
The clouds I clasp in my giant grasp
And, hid in stormy rain,
In fury whirled around the world,
I shriek with angry pain.

In the dark I moan to the stars alone,
And sing to the dreamy noon;
None ever see my mystery,
All listen to my tune;
I am the breath of Life-in-Death,
And the spirit of the air,
Where I move free by God's decree,
Yet do his bidding there.

The above poem was given last Sunday evening by Prof. Herbert Miller as a contribution to the literary exercises at the Free-thought Society's sociable. I was not there when he read it, although I learned from others that in his introductory remarks he expressed disappointment over my absence. His words were substantially as follows:

"There is a certain editor of a certain paper known to us all here who has a habit of perpetrating poetry upon his readers, and when any of them retaliate he is unkind enough to print their verses as written with observations of his own calculated to make them regret having dropped into poetry. I know how it is myself. The poem which I shall now read I desired to inflict upon him especially at this time when he is not on the programme for any remarks. But I see he is away; he is not in it. You will please put yourselves in his place and listen to the poem. Then you will realize how much he must suffer if present."

When Professor Miller had made this explanation, which was received with levity, he read his poem in a scholarly way, pronouncing all the words right, following the punctuation marks, and putting the stress of voice on at the proper places. It was greeted with applause, at which the reader expressed surprise, and rebuking his auditors with the remark, "You have brought this upon yourselves," he drew forth and read another. The listeners even then desired more.

The sociable was enjoyable in a high degree. Vice-President Eastman opened proceedings with a neat introductory address, and Miss Annie Lenont gave "Shells of the Ocean" as an overture on the piano. Professor Miller then gave his verses as above. Mrs. Blue recited a poem with fine effect; the Misses Haelke played a duet upon their zithers; Prof. W. S. Bell read some very humorous verses which he said were original with another person; Mr. Will Alfred Pingree performed skillfully with his banjo, and Miss Lillie Arper gave a recitation. There was marked excellence in each number, and no entertainers could ask for a more appreciative and responsive audience.

After this came the dance, Secretary Lemme acting as floor manager. And then hilarity began, the music swept with joyful sound, while many a staid and serious man did swing his partner round and round. An hundred hands clapped in accord, an hundred eyes with pleasure burned, when Bell, as stately as a lord, went down the center and returned. And when Professor Miller danced, ah, how the ladies stopped to look, as o'er their feathered fans they glanced to note each graceful step he took. There will be no more lectures before the society until after the summer months, but it is probable that entertainments will be held monthly, of which due notice will be given in these columns.

At the last business meeting of the Nationalist Club a committee was appointed to make arrangements with FREETHOUGHT to retract something printed two weeks ago. The other proceedings at the meeting were of deep interest. Mr. Otto Sinz, persisted in saying that the accounts were crooked. Mr. Haskell condemned Mr. Sinz as a tool of monopoly, and assaulted him. Mr. Sinz says:

"We were discussing the matter when Haskell arose to a question of privilege, and went on to say that twenty-five copies of FREETHOUGHT containing statements damaging to him had been sent to Kaweah Colony. I arose to a point of order, and was recognized by the Chair, when Haskell ordered me to sit down, and finally struck me a blow with his fist. I gathered up a chair to defend myself with, when Haskell's friends grabbed me from behind, threw me down, and walked over me. That raised a pandemonium at once. Some of my friends interfered, and at the first opportunity I broke through an opening, climbed on the stage, and took a leisurely view of the house. It was an interesting scene. Half the members had either chairs or their fists in the air ready to bring them down on other members' heads. I waited until they had got through fighting and then resumed my seat. Mr. Haskell demanded a retraction of my charges. I declined. He then said that if the charges were not dropped he would leave the club; so he stalked away as though he were shaking the dust of the whole business off his feet. But he didn't leave the hall; he just got behind a curtain and stayed there to see what would happen. At this the members were scared out of their boots, and one of them moved that I be dishonorably expelled. The motion was carried, but I kept my seat. Secondly, moved that I be invited to withdraw at once. Carried; but I didn't go. Thirdly, moved by Benjie Haskell that the sergeant-at-arms be authorized to remove me forcibly if necessary. Carried. I was also carried—out on the street. There I met Haskell in a fighting mood, but we compromised by his threatening me with a suit for slander and by my inviting him to proceed with it. Then I went home."

The statement of the Committee on Retraction will be found elsewhere. In regard to this matter I stand in a position somewhat similar to that of the country judge who charged the jury as follows: "Gentlemen," said he, "if you believe what counsel for the defense tells you, you will acquit the accused; if you believe what counsel for the prosecution says, you will find a verdict of guilty; but if you are like me, and have full confidence in both, then I am d—d if I know what you will do. Gentlemen, the case is now in your hands."

Professor Seymour, now on the trail, has sent this paper an original poem of several stanzas. I should hesitate to publish it without first consulting the professor's many friends who now hold him in high esteem, but if the offense is repeated there will be no other recourse.

BUSINESS POEM.

We're sending many pamphlets hence
In orders large and small,
But Putnam's quaint "Experience"
More numerous than all.
It makes the torpid liver work,
And starts the blood again
To circulating with a jerk,
And stimulates the brain.

The parsonitis quickly flees
Before its magic power,
While pious weakness at the knees
Is cured within an hour.
The weeping sinner's tears it dries,
Uplifts him from the rack,
Removes the wool from o'er his eyes,
The mos. from off his back.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Chris Buckley, the political boss, has returned to San Francisco, bringing a new wife with him.—The Alaska Commercial Company promises to bring Siberian sealskins into the American market, and to materially lower the prices of the commodity.—One of the San Francisco census enumerators is under arrest for stuffing his returns. Instead of calling at residences he filled up his blanks with fictitious names, turning in about 400 more residents than his district contained.—Although Actor Crane was well rewarded for his late efforts to please the San Francisco public, he went away with a poor opinion of the city. He told a New York reporter: "I know I have said some hard things about California, but, by jingo, it deserves it. I have talked with old Californians and they admit the truth of what I say. I had not been in San Francisco for eight years, and could scarcely recognize the place. The town is blase and worn out. Prize-fighting in the principal industry, and when that waiter was killed the other day the industry got a black eye. By gad, sir, I do not know what it will talk about now."—French residents of San Francisco will celebrate the 101st anniversary of the fall of the Bastille July 14.—The Planter's Hotel, worth $15,000, at Anaheim, Cal., was burned last Saturday.—There were 122 deaths in San Francisco last week against 83 for the corresponding week of 1889.

Dr. Burtzell, the friend of McGlynn in the latter's trouble with the pope, has been removed from the pastorate of the church of the Epiphany, at New York. Next to McGlynn Burtzell is the most popular priest in the metropolis.—Congress is now considering the River and Harbor bill. The silver question has been retired, and probably will not be recalled. People who have watched the indications express a belief that congress never intended to do anything to relieve the financial stringency.—Real estate boomers at Cape May Point, N. J., have presented an elegant cottage to President Harrison on the condition that he shall make it his summer residence. The gift is merely an investment by shrewd property-owners who think the presence of the president will enhance the value of their lots and buildings.—A prize-fighter was killed in a slogging match at Chicago last week. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death, and the parties implicated were released from custody.—P. T. Barnum, the showman, has celebrated his 80th birthday. He and Pope Leo XIII. are among the oldest living humbugs.—Some Detroit women have induced the directors of the Detroit Museum of Art to put drapery over the nude figures of a Venus and the Dying Gladiator.—Idaho has been admitted as the forty-third state of the Union.

The cholera epidemic is on the increase at Valencia in Spain.—The Socialists of France are forming a Democratic Union in connection with the Belgians, the leading clause in the platform being universal suffrage.—Michael Davitt is to publish in London a paper called the "Weekly Labor World."—The editor of Voz de Mexico, published at the City of Mexico, has been thrown into prison and his paper denounced by the government. The offense is not stated.—Religious difficulties at Queretaro, Mexico, are of a serious nature. The Protestants and Catholics recently had an armed fight in which several were injured.

THE ASSEMBLY OF PROGRESS.

"L. S. P.," LIBERTY, SCIENCE, AND PROGRESS.

The Assembly of Progress has been founded to supply a long existing vacancy in society. Among all civilized, intelligent aggregations of people, harmonious society is most important to the welfare and happiness of communities, and, in order to realize the greatest degree of happiness in social society, it is most important that people of similar views on the leading vital questions of the age should, as much as possible, be united together in social, moral compacts for their own mutual advancement and prosperity. 'Tis clear you cannot unite Catholics and Protestants in the same society with that degree of social concord which should characterize a society formed for the mutual benefit and advancement of its members, and the same rule applies to the Methodists and Presbyterians, and to other societies holding adverse religious opinions; and particularly is this true with Freethinkers and believers in the orthodox religions. The Christian's feelings are wounded whenever the truth of his faith is questioned, while the Freethinker will not accept the orthodox faith without proof, nor believe the "stories that are told of the miracles of old," and this breeds dissension and discord, and alas! too often engenders an animosity which creates permanent enemies who might otherwise have lived as friends. Therefore the segregation of these opposing elements is necessary to the general welfare of society.

The Catholic church by its thorough organization is a great power and wields a wonderful influence on society and the body politic; and so it is with the Protestant church. It is organized throughout the civilized world, and in consequence of its thorough organization it is strong and its power is felt as well in politics as in society. There are organized a large number of social and benevolent secret societies, which, as a general rule, are prosperous and increasing in numbers. But the Liberals, who represent a large part of the intelligent portion of mankind, have practically no organization, and are therefore unable to exert that influence upon society which is their right by reason of their numbers and intellectual position. Without organization we are without unity of action; without organization our power is unknown; without organization we have little knowledge of our numbers, and are almost helpless to advance our cause for truth and freedom.

There having been no general beneficiary organization of the Freethinkers, there are now many Liberals who are members of some of the various secret beneficiary orders, notwithstanding the offensive religious ceremonies in common use in most of the secret orders. The want of society, the importance of co-operative insurance and sick and funeral benefits so common to benevolent orders, and the absence of a Liberal organization have driven them to join these societies, however unpleasant the religious ceremonies may be. In consideration of these facts and to advance the cause of Freethought, the Assembly of Progress has been organized. It provides all the advantages of kindred societies, such as co-operative insurance, sick and funeral benefits, with the least possible expense consistent with a sound financial basis, and presents the opportunities to Liberals to perfect a general and permanent organization such as will thoroughly organize the Freethinkers throughout the civilized world. With a thorough organization, such as can be brought about through the Assembly of Progress, the Liberals will be in a condition to work and work successfully for the cause of liberty and truth. Their numbers will be known, and Liberal literature can be generally circulated through the country. With thorough organization a system of missionary work can be effected among the unfortunate who have never seen the first glittering rays of the true light.

With the Assembly of Progress organized in every town and city in the country, our Liberal lecturers will receive an audience and a welcome heretofore unknown. The Assembly of Progress is a society free from religious ceremonies, and therefore free from religious wrangles, hatred, and strife; a society wherein liberal-minded people can assemble together in a pleasant and social manner and peaceably discuss intellectual and scientific subjects without the interference of an assumed deity, or fear of the encroachments of religious creeds or faiths.

For information concerning the Assembly of Progress apply to J. M. VOSS, Grand Prefect, Los Angeles, Cal.,
Or, E. E. SHAFFER, Grand Secretary, Los Angeles, Cal.

ON DREAMERS.

In reply to Mr. Gunther's letter of June 21, I still maintain that all who work for human happiness, though sometimes mistaken, are not dreamers. Those who deal in fancies only may be called so; but to apply the term unreservedly to all efforts of reformers is not right. Many of the best inventions were made by persons who were called dreamers.

And what shall be said of every attempt at self-government or re-adjustment of labor and social relations? If it were not for them we could not see the matter in its many bearings; hence I rather encourage efforts, though often futile, than discourage them; though I assure you I never intend to encourage wrongdoing.

As to how mechanics and farmers can co-operate, I refer Mr. Gunther to Kaweah. If there is anything obnoxious or impracticable about the plan adopted there I have failed to find it. I have looked about a good deal to formulate a method that would secure fuller justice to the more fully evolved citizens of this country; one that would be practicable. I am so peculiarly constituted that I accepted Edward Bellamy's and Lawrence Gronlund's combined as the very best yet advanced. Kaweah may fail eventually, but so far she has not. I do not think she will ever fail because the theory is wrong, but should failure come, it will be from the "solid selfishness" in human nature inordinately developed. It may be from a combined effort on the part of church and state.

Germany is essentially German. The United States are essentially everything. Germany "went to Canossa" under Bismarck, and may return with Rome astride of her neck. Then she may go to the "devil" entirely. The United States are there now planning to escape.

My plea for woman was not intended as a criticism upon anything Mr. Gunther said, but to indicate my idea of the kind of co-operation we should build. Women have been ignored so long, now that the tide is rising in their favor I want to see them have equal liberty and opportunity, and when men have got that far on the way to justice the rest of the way will be easier.

My comparison of Mr. Gunther's letter with Mr. Ingersoll's was to show the sympathy of the one for laborers generally, and the lack of it by the other. I think it did that. Suppose we grant that Mr. Ingersoll did not know what he was talking about, and look at the matter in another light. Those who compose the various labor unions have had all the experience Mr. Gunther thinks Mr. Ingersoll lacks. Still, Mr. Gunther differs widely from them. Ingersoll did not offer any solution of the problem, nor has Mr. Gunther, except that we should do as Germany has done. But before Mr. Gunther concludes Mr. Ingersoll is not capacitated to speak upon the labor question, would it not be better to show that what he has said is wrong? Ingersoll evidently does not lack sympathy, and he knows that many have to work long and are poorly paid. He thinks eight hours a day are long enough for a person to labor. He thinks a man not wholly civilized who asks or demands that another shall work hard for scarcely enough to keep body and soul together. And I will add that I think one who is content to do so is equally uncivilized. The hireling system is wrong, based as it is upon the idea that one may own everything, and the rest of mankind nothing—not even liberty, having lost the means to sustain it.

If the right to live is inalienable, a place to live and something to live upon are equally so. It does not follow though that someone else shall produce your living for you. Each one should have every natural opportunity left free. What no one has made belongs to all. The idea of parceling out the earth by homesteads, and then legalizing of all sorts of schemes to gull the most of mankind out of them; the idea of letting all the natural advantages pass into the control of a few shrewd and unmerciful speculators; the idea of a few enjoying unlimited luxury and the many unlimited want; the idea of giving to him that hath and taking from those who have nothing, only their diminishing power to work; the idea of—well, of calling a man a fool just because he is a fool!

Interest on money is wrong. If a man does not need the principal, he surely does not need the interest. Having earned the principal, he should have it when needed; but he nor the money itself earns the interest which men demand and use as a compound lever to get the advantage of the whole world (and the rest of mankind). Then, after setting up this feudal system, kill off mankind to protect money, instead of using money properly to protect mankind! Civilization! Why, after all the civilization in the west half of North America there are some men who think they own the women. There are other men who won't have a wife, but think they own everybody, and more too. But I am not one of that kind. I would be better satisfied if each individual owned himself or herself, with all his or her natural rights inalienable. And should anyone be so thoughtless as to try to build a good industrial and social structure, that is about the depth they will have to dig for a foundation.

Sanel, Cal.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

COLONEL INGERSOLL ON VIVISECTION.

LAW OFFICE, ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, }
45 Wall street, New York, May 27, 1890. }

PHILIP G. PEABODY, ESQ., Boston Mass.—My Dear Friend: Vivisection is the Inquisition—the hell—of science. All the cruelty of the human—or rather the inhuman—heart is capable of inflicting, is in this one word. Below this there is no depth. This word lies like a coiled serpent at the bottom of the abyss.

We can excuse, in part, the crimes of passion. We take into consideration the fact that man is liable to be caught by the whirlwind, and that from a brain on fire the soul rushes to a crime. But what excuse can ingenuity form for a man who deliberately—with an unaccelerated pulse—with the calmness of John Calvin at the murder of Servetus—seeks, with curious and cunning knives, in the living, quivering flesh of a dog, for all the throbbing nerves of pain? The wretches who commit these infamous crimes pretend that they are working for the good of man; that they are actuated by philanthropy; and that their pity for the sufferings of the human race drives out all pity for the animals they slowly torture to death. But those who are incapable of pitying animals are, as a matter of fact, incapable of pitying men. A physician who would cut a living rabbit in pieces—laying bare the nerves, denuding them with knife, pulling them out with forceps—would not hesitate to try experiments with men and women for the gratification of his curiosity.

To settle some theory, he would trifle with the life of any patient in his power. By the same reasoning he will justify the vivisection of animals and patients. He will say that it is better that a few animals should suffer than that one human being should die; and that it is far better that one patient should die, if through the sacrifice of that one, several may be saved.

Brain without heart is far more dangerous than heart without brain.

Have these scientific assassins discovered anything of value? They have settled some disputes as to the action of some organ, but have they added to the useful knowledge of the race?

It is not necessary for a man to be a specialist in order to have and express his opinion as to the right or wrong of vivisection. It is not necessary to be a scientist or a naturalist to detest cruelty and to love mercy. Above all the discoveries of the thinkers, above all the inventions of the ingenious, above all the victories won on fields of intellectual conflict, rise human sympathy and sense of justice.

I know that good for the human race can never be accomplished by torture. I also know that all that has been ascertained by vivisection could have been done by the dissection of the dead, or at least of animals completely and perfectly under the merciful influence of ether. I know that all the torture has been useless. All the agony inflicted has simply hardened the hearts of criminals, without enlightening their minds.

It may be that the human race might be physically improved if all the sickly and deformed babies were killed, and if all the paupers, liars, drunkards, thieves, villains, vivisectionists, were murdered. All this might, in a few ages, result in the production of a generation of physically perfect men and women, healthy and heartless, muscular and cruel—that is to say, intelligent wild beasts!

Never can I be the friend of one who vivisects his fellow-creatures. I do not wish to touch his hand.

When the angel of pity is driven from the heart; when the fountain of tears is dry—the soul becomes a serpent crawling in the dust of a desert.

Thanking you for the good you are doing, and wishing you the greatest success, I remain,

Yours always,

R. G. INGERSOLL.

MARRIED—It will be of interest to the Liberals of the United States to learn that our friend, who in youth was a Garibaldian volunteer; who, a few years after, was promoted for gallantry in the Union service; who later on was a member of the Executive Committee of the International Typographical Union; subsequently, chairman of the Executive Board of the General Assembly Knights of Labor; more recently, the energetic secretary of the American Secular Union, and who has been widely renowned as a dashing, fertile newspaper correspondent—Mr. E. A. Stevens—was united in-marriage, at Chicago, on Tuesday, June 17, to Ella Godman Stiles, youngest daughter of the late John C. Godman, for many years treasurer of Morrow county, Ohio, and niece of James Godman, ex-State Auditor of Ohio. The happy couple have our warmest congratulations, and we sincerely hope that their pathway through life may be strewn with roses.—OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

THE RELIGIOUS PESTILENCE IN ILLINOIS.

This town and vicinity (Philo, Ill.) has been in a state of excitement for several weeks past over the actions of a company of strange religious enthusiasts known in this section as the Pentecost Band, writes a correspondent of the Chicago Herald. There are several of these bands holding forth within a radius of thirty miles of here, one being at Charleston, one at Atwood, and still another at Lovington, and at each place they have stirred the people up by their irrepressible and fanatical zeal. They have also visited Camargo, Hinesboro, Fairland, Tuscola, and Urbana, and at each place they left the people torn up and divided. This may appear strange in view of the fact that the people composing the Pentecost bands are young men and women who are in most instances weak-minded, ignorant, superstitious characters, filled with strange notions and ideas, and whose actions are out of accord with this day and age.

From what can be learned of this religious sect, they are mostly foreigners, who, being indolent and shiftless, have hit upon this plan of gaining a means of support, and it is marvelous the number of victims they find among the ignorant classes that throw open their doors to them and contribute to the advancement of their ideas, and to their relief and support. In all there are said to be fifteen of these bands in Central and Southern Illinois, and from those who had charge of the work here it is learned that one V. A. Dake, a native of New York state, originated the new sect and has placed himself at the head, and is looked upon by his followers as a second Moses, who has come to lead sinners out of the "Slough of Despond." They claim to be a branch of the latter-day saints and adhere to the faith-cure doctrine. In fact, they have carried their faith so far in this direction on one or two occasions that their victims were on the point of giving up the ghost, when neighbors interfered and insisted that they should have proper medical attention.

During the time the band has been at work in Philo it has stirred up an unusual amount of feeling and the better class and the more intelligent portion of the community has condemned its actions in unmeasured terms. The press has also censured it in a forcible manner for its efforts to decoy and persuade young women to leave their homes. At nearly every meeting the excitement ran high, and the members of the band and their victims would fall in all parts of the house in swoons and trances, from which they would awaken and relate horrible visions of hades seen while in the mesmeric state. The devil was pictured as having gigantic horns, while in his hands he carried a dragon fork with which he heaped up fire and brimstone around his victims. So great was the effect of this sort of preaching upon the ignorant and weak-minded believers who nightly sought the altar, and so highly were they wrought up by the pictures of hades held up before them by the Pentecosters, that half a dozen or more were soon in a state bordering on insanity, and of this lot one lady did become a raving maniac.

Mrs. Samuel Swarts, who carried an infant child in her arms, became impressed with the idea that she must offer it as a sacrifice to the Lord, and held it aloft by one of its limbs. She was caught by others and prevented from killing the child before the eyes of the people. She was tried for sanity a few days later, and is now an inmate of an insane asylum, with no hope of recovering her reason. Since they were driven from our midst, the night following that on which Mrs. Swarts was taken away, the Pentecosters have been making their quarters with John Brookbanks, a believer in their doctrine, who lives four miles north of here. The leader of the band threatens to appeal to the law for protection in conducting the meetings, but the people retaliate by threatening to appeal to the White Caps if they dare to return and continue their insane religious orgies. It is thought that if they can be kept away the balance of the members who were in a fair way to follow the unfortunate Mrs. Swarts will awaken to their true condition and forsake the band and its vagaries.

Mrs. Martin Rowlen, a sister of the above lady, who was also on the verge of joining the band and was under its power for a time, has awakened to the danger and has told of the artifices employed by the Pentecosters to gain control of her and win her to their cause. She is positive that while she was kneeling at the altar they in some manner blew a powder into her face, the odor of which acted as a sort of narcotic, causing her to experience strange sensations, such as she never felt before and which she cannot now describe. This was repeated for several evenings, but so adroitly was it done by the sisters of the band that it was only by accident that she discovered the trick. The powder was placed between the leaves of a Bible, and this being held closely before her, was opened and shut two or three times, as the occasion demanded.

The Rev. Dake, the Moses of this nomadic religious band, which flourishes and thrives on the credulity and ignorance of the lower classes, has an assistant in the person of Thomas Nelson, a man of considerable natural ability, who once occupied a prominent position in the Methodist church, but who for some reason severed his relations with that denomination to assist in overseeing the work of the bands, which are mostly composed of women, unmarried, who have forsaken their homes. The intentions of the band may be good, but its actions and the result of its work are not and cannot be beneficial to the interests of any community.

The meetings now in progress at Atwood by the Pentecosters are bearing the same fruits as those held here, and the citizens are daily threatening to rise up and cast them out by force, if necessary. They have infested this community for a year and a half past, and as fast as they are driven out of one town they attach themselves to another and cling on to it with the tenacity of grim death. Nothing short of a cyclone or a famine will shake them off.

PETITIONS.

DEAR FRIENDS: You see my name among those of whom you can obtain petitions for the release of Moses Harman from an unjust imprisonment caused by his revelation of man's reckless, brutal treatment of woman; treatment growing out of the general ignorance regarding the true relations of the sexes towards one another. Now I want you to order all the petitions of me you can. Every time you get a signature you sow seed that will help educate the race. There are few more important educational forces than this one of circulating petitions against injustice, oppression, and tyranny. It stirs up argument and discussion and awakens thought where nothing else will do it. Please order now at once and help in the good work. Address

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski co., Va.

A Defunct Institution.

LONDON, June 28.—Dr. Parker, in a lecture on the observance of the Sabbath, said: "Sunday is dead for the moment, yet it will reassert itself. It is God's greatest gift of the week. It is now given up to parties at your homes, bicycling and lawn tennis, even among occasional church-goers who would vote against the opening of museums on Sunday."

THE high school of San Jose had its sixteenth annual commencement exercises June 25. The following paragraph from the report of the proceedings in the San Jose Daily Times refers to the bright and engaging daughter of Mr. J. Vostrovsky, a well-known Liberal:

"Miss Clara Vostrovsky, in an essay on the 'Poetry of Nature,' gave evidence of possessing the 'celestial gift' of poetry. Her essay was full of exquisite bits of word painting and showed a poetical nature strongly imbued with that mysterious influence which hears the voices in the air and interprets the sounds of the forests, the brooklets, and the sea."

We note with regret that the commencement exercises were opened with an "eloquent prayer."

THE Lick Baths on Tenth street, near Howard, are not, at present, a thing of beauty, but they promise to be a joy forever to the trustees. The building has remained in a half finished condition for months. Had it been a private structure it would have been finished and open for business a year ago. But then private parties lose by delay, whereas the trustees do not. The longer the fulfillment of their trust is delayed, the longer they draw their salaries.—Daily Report.

THOMAS PAINE.

BY WILLIAM HENRY BURR.

II.

During the rest of Paine's life he did not generally seek to conceal his personality. But he continued sometimes to use the signature "Common Sense," or "C. S.," and I have discovered an anonymous pamphlet, unmistakably written by him just after his return to America in 1802. It is a series of articles, first published in the National Intelligencer, in support of Jefferson's administration. The title of the reprint in 1803 is "Plain Sense; or Sketches of Political Frenzy and Federal Folly."

Paine died in New York, June 8, 1809. Five months before his death he made a will directing his burial at New Rochelle, and that on his headstone should be engraved after his name, "Author of 'Common Sense.'" The will concludes as follows:

I have lived an honest and useful life to mankind; my time has been spent in doing good, and I die in perfect composure and resignation to the will of my creator God.

Just half a century later, the Rev. Theodore Parker died. He called himself a Theist, but who can define the difference between the Theism of Theodore Parker and the Deism of Thomas Paine? "I believe in one God and no more," said Paine, "and I hope for happiness beyond this life. I believe in the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy." And speaking of Jesus Christ he said: "He was a virtuous and amiable man. The morality that he preached and practiced was of the most benevolent kind."

The worst libel on the character of Paine appeared in 1846, purporting to be a letter written by Bishop Fenwick, who died in that year, to his brother, a Jesuit priest, who died at Georgetown, D. C., in 1827. It describes a scene at the death-bed of Paine, witnessed by two Catholic priests, Fenwick and Kohlman. It is a fabrication. There were two classes of men that Paine hated above all others, to-wit, Scotch Tories and Catholic priests. And yet, according to the Fenwick letter, he, a priest twenty-seven years of age, was invited by the dying man to prescribe for him medicinally! The plagiarism of a sentence of thirty-seven words from a letter written by Paine's attending physician, stamps the document a forgery, to say nothing of other abundant evidences. Dr. Manley's description of the dying man's distress, written at the request of Cheetham for his lying biography in 1809, is repeated verbatim in the Fenwick letter, which is without date, and was never heard of until the bishop died, nor will anybody produce the original manuscript. Yet this forged letter has served the purpose of convincing most people that Paine "died a drunken, cowardly, and beastly death," cursing God and denouncing Jesus Christ as "an impostor."

Paine was not a drunkard, and he died a peaceful death. He was annoyed by the visit of two clergymen, Milledollar and Cunningham, one of whom said: "You have now a full view of death; you cannot live long, and whosoever does not believe in the Lord Jesus Christ will assuredly be damned." To this the dying man replied, "Let me have none of your popish stuff. Get away with you. Good morning, good morning." And when they were gone he said to his female nurse, "Don't let them come here again; they trouble me."

Again, within a few hours of his death, he was asked by his physician: "Do you believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ?" And as Paine made no answer, the doctor repeated the question very earnestly: "Do you believe, or, let me qualify the question, do you wish to believe that Jesus Christ is the son of God?"

After a pause of some minutes he answered, "I have no wish to believe on that subject."

These last words of Paine were drawn forth and reported by his physician, who was a Christian, and they were heard by Paine's landlord, who attended him every day for the last six weeks of his life.

Unfortunately for the memory of Paine his first biographers were malignant and unscrupulous enemies. No true life of Paine was written until he had been dead ten years, and popular writers, who have not ignored him altogether, have generally repeated the falsehoods and calumnies of Oldys and Cheetham, with more recent additions. And it is shocking to find in the recent "History of the People of the United States," by John McMaster, a string of falsehoods, like the following:

1. That Paine was dismissed from the excise in 1774 for a great abuse of trust.
2. That his wife, weary of his abuse and his blows, left him.
3. That in the depths of poverty he turned his steps to London, where Franklin met him, a half-starved Grub-street hack.
4. That he piteously besought Franklin for aid.
5. That being recommended by the great philosopher to go to America, he followed the advice so well suited to his roving disposition.
6. That he had recourse to his pen and speedily became editor of the Pennsylvania Magazine.
7. That in the opinion of Dr. Rush, Paine was penman for the occasion; he therefore waited upon him and urged him to prepare a strong pamphlet recommending separation from England.
8. That the bargain was soon struck; Paine agreed to write the pamphlet, and Dr. Rush agreed to find the publisher, which was no easy matter.

The late Hon. Elizur Wright, after quoting the two paragraphs in McMaster's history containing the above falsehoods, remarked:

A man exalted from a mercenary Grub-street tramp to the top of the Anglo-Saxon Pantheon in one year! This is rather a miraculous ascent. But the confessed authority for this is Cheetham, the convicted libeler of Paine. It seems a great pity that American history cannot be purged of calumny.

The moral character of Paine, in spite of the many attempts to blacken it, appears to have been without a smirch.

WAS HE JUNIUS?

"For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested."—Mark iv, 22.

A few of the leading facts in the life of Thomas Paine were presented in my former article, chiefly with a view to his identification as Junius.

His remarkably secretive nature has been sufficiently shown. Junius began to write under other signatures in 1767. Paine was then an exciseman, stationed at Lewes, forty-five miles south of London, but it is an ascertained fact that he spent most of his time in London. The pay of an exciseman was only fifty pounds a year, and it is certain that Paine had other resources during his entire life, which enabled him to do all his literary work without pay.

Junius was an ardent admirer of Grenville, to whom, on the sixth of February, 1768, he wrote a secret letter, signed "C.," inclosing a paper on taxation, and suggesting that no one could place the observations in so advantageous a light as that statesman. The letter closes as follows:

It is not, sir, either necessary or proper to make myself known to you at present. Hereafter I may perhaps claim that honor. In the meantime be assured that it is a voluntary, disinterested attachment to your person, founded on an esteem for your spirit and understanding, which has and will forever engage me in your favor. A number of late publications, falsely attributed to men of far greater talent, may convince you of my zeal, if not of my capacity to serve you.

The only condition which I presume to make with you, is that you will not only not show these papers to anybody, but that you will never mention having received them.

Seven months later, September 3, 1768, "C." wrote again to Grenville as follows:

It may not be improper you should know that the public is entirely mistaken with respect to the author of some late publications in the newspapers. Be assured that he is quite unknown and unconnected. He has attached himself to your cause and to you alone, upon motives which, if he were of consequence enough to give weight to his judgment, would be thought as honorable to you as they are truly satisfactory to himself. At a proper time he will solicit the honor of being known to you. He has at present important reasons for wishing to be concealed.

Some late papers, in which the cause of this country and the defense of your character and measures have been thought not ill maintained; others signed "Lucius," and one or two upon the new commission of trade, with a multitude of others, came from this hand. They have been taken notice of by the public.

The letter closes with an entreaty to keep the communication a secret.

Again, in a third letter, dated October 20, 1768, the writer says:

I beg leave to offer you a letter, reprinted in the inclosed paper, under the signature of "Atticus." It is finished with more care than I have usually time to give to these productions. The town is curious to know the author. Everybody guesses, some are quite certain, and all are mistaken. Some, who bear your character, give it to the Rockinghams (a policy I do not understand), and Mr. Bourke [Edmund Burke] denies it as he would a fact which he wished to have believed.

It may be proper to assure you that no man knows or even suspects the author. I have no connection with any party, except a voluntary attachment to your person. It began in amusement, grew into a habit, was confirmed by a closer attention to your principles and conduct, and is now heated into a passion. The Grand Council (Miscellaneous, No. VII., October 22, 1767) was mine, and I may say with truth, almost everything that for two years past, has attracted the attention of the public.

I am conscious these papers have been very unequal, but you will be candid enough to make allowances for a man who writes absolutely without materials or instruction. . . . Until you are minister, I must not permit myself to think of the honor of being known to you. When that happens you will not find me a needy or troublesome dependant.

George Grenville, first lord of the treasury from 1763 to 1765, died in 1770.

On the twenty-first of January, 1769, this secret writer, "C.," began a series of papers signed Junius, which continued exactly three years, ending January 21, 1772. In less than six months after he began, a surreptitious collection of his letters was published. Annoyed at the printer's errors, he sends to his own publisher, Woodfall, a few corrections and says:

I did not expect more than the life of a newspaper, but if this man will keep me alive, let me live without being offensive.

A few days later he writes:

I have no manner of objection to your reprinting the letters, if you think it will answer. . . . If you determine to do it, give me a hint, and I will send you more errata (indeed they are innumerable), and perhaps a preface. I really doubt whether I shall write any more under this signature. I am weary of attacking a set of brutes, whose writings are too dull to furnish me even with the materials of contention, and whose measures are too gross and direct to be the subject of argument or to require illustration.

Again, in December, 1769, he writes:

I am now meditating a capital, and, I hope, a final piece.

There were thirty letters of Junius in the year 1769, but in the next year only six. On the twentieth of June, 1771, having written so far in that year six letters, he sends another, saying:

I am strangely partial to the inclosed. It is finished with the utmost care. If I find myself mistaken in my judgment of this paper, I positively will not write again.

Again, on the eighth of November, he writes:

The above to that Scotchman should be printed conspicuously to-morrow. At last I have concluded my great work, and I assure you with no small labor.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XVI.*

ENTITLED WAR.

The Second War.—Revolution in Heaven.—Beelzebub a Devil of a Prince.

1. And there was another war in Heaven. Michael and his angels against the dragon and his army.

2. And the dragon was the old devil, the serpent, otherwise Beelzebub.

3. Now this war was in no wise like the other, for now the dragon had a great and vast army which greatly outnumbered the army of Michael.

4. For the army of Michael, being of such only as were worshippers of the lamb, were few.

5. And Beelzebub prevailed and cast out Michael and his angels.

6. And Beelzebub turned the river of water, which proceeded

* The previous chapter is also Chapter XVI., and it has been suggested that this is numbered in mistake. We do not, however, think so; we cannot see how a divinely inspired book can possibly contain one error, even of this trivial description. We translate faithfully what we find in the MS. without thought of emendation; and if we had found a dozen Chapters XVI. in the MS., the public would have found twelve chapters with that number attached in our translations.—TRs.

from the throne; into hell and put out the flames thereof, and shut fast the gates, saying, There shall be no more holocausts, for I am merciful.

7. And they found the Lamb, even he with the seven horns and seven eyes, and brought him bound, and Beelzebub said, What shall I do with him? And one of his servants whose name was Bar-num said, Give him to me, and I will put him to good service; and Beelzebub said, Take him.

8. And they brought the Ghost bound, and Beelzebub said, Make him an eunuch lest he delude more virgins; and they did so, and let him go.

9. Then they brought the four beasts which were full of eyes behind and before, without and within, and which rested not day or night; and Beelzebub said unto Bar-num, Take these also, but first let them rest and sleep, for they must needs be weary.

10. And Bar-num rejoiced exceedingly, and ran about seeking a smith to make him iron bars.

11. And they brought the four and twenty elders, and made them sing a new song. And the song which they sung was an altogether new song; and they sent them away.

12. And the hundred and forty-four thousand saints which were sealed, they took and held them in the smoke and vapor which arose from hell, and melted the wax by which they were sealed, and made them into a thousand bundles, twelve dozen being in a bundle, and sold them to the boilers of soap.

13. And Beelzebub examined the book with seven seals, and said, Let the leaves be torn out, and the history of Simon be bound within the covers.

14. And the seven angels with the seven trumpets were taken, and Beelzebub said, Throw the angels over the battlements, and of the trumpets, if the metal be good, make wine cups.

15. And the locusts which were like war horses, and had iron breastplates upon them, were put into boxes of cedar wood, and the boxes were fitted with covers of glass, and were placed amongst the curious and strange things; and to the two witnesses, to wit, the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks, out of whose mouth fire came when any man hurt them, they did likewise, and appointed Bar-num to snow the mouths of the olive trees to the people.

16. And they took the red great dragon, which had seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns on his heads, and whose tail threw down the stars; and they took away his crowns, and cut off his tail, and made him cast up the water that was in his mouth before he was ready, and cut off his seven heads, and made lanterns of them, and of his carcase they made an omnibus. And when Bar-num saw what was done he was overcome with grief and wept aloud.

17. And the seven angels with the seven vials they caught, and put the angels into the vials, and sealed them up, and threw them over.

18. And the scarlet woman they sent home even to the city on the seven hills.

19. And they hamstrung the white horse, and gave the red one to Bar-num. And the black horse and the pale horse they tied together by the tail, and put the censers between them, and lighted them.

20. And Beelzebub said, Let the women whose business it was to wash the garments of the saints in the blood of the Lamb be released from their labors, and let them cleanse out the bloody pool, and fill it with wine, and it was so.

21. And Beelzebub said, Where are the horses, even the two hundred thousand which had heads like lions, and which breathed fire and smoke and brimstone, and whose tails are like unto serpents with heads on?

22. And when Bar-num heard this he leaped up, and began to run to and fro very eagerly, and to snuff up the air, even as a dog snuffeth the air when it pursueth its prey.

23. And when he could not find them he sat down and wept.

24. And Beelzebub called his captains together, and gave them wine and bid them be merry.

25. And to that captain whose crest was an image broken he gave white wine from the island of Emeralds.

26. And the captain excused himself, and said, Nay, my lord, from my youth up I have not done this thing.

26. *And Beelzebub laughed and said unto him, There is but one kilderkin of it; pledge me I tell thee, and leave none of it.

27. And the captain began to drink and made a wry face.

29. And Beelzebub said, Nay if thou liketh it not, let this other noble captain drink with thee, even he whose crest is a grave-digger's spade.

28. And the captain smiled, and said, Nay, if he help me the thing is done.

29. So they began to make merry. And the dragon, even Beelzebub, sat down on the throne, and the whole host shouted with a very great shout, saying, Who is like unto Beelzebub; he is the prince of devils, and also a devil of a prince?

30. Who shall we compare to our King Beelzebub, and who shall we liken unto him, for he hath done glorious things and shown mercy to all?

31. And they were all exceeding merry.

31. And they brought out the four beasts, for it was bruited about that they were great at singing.

33. And as I awoke I heard them singing heartily a new song, such as they had not sung before, the refrain whereof was, For he is a jolly good fellow.

To be Continued.

MAN VS. THE STATE.

It would scarcely be too much to say that the most offensive forms of trades-unionism are found in connection with the so-called learned professions. Time was when it was supposed that the state had to look after the spiritual health of individuals; and for that purpose to prescribe their theological beliefs and religious observances. That belief has for the most part been exploded in the modern world, but its place has been taken by the notion that the state is responsible for the intellectual health of its members; and in lieu of the state church we have state schools. As regards the physical health of the community, the general method is to legalize one or two—possibly quite conflicting—schools of medicine, and to empower them to rule out, and if necessary to prosecute and punish, all others. Nobody, broadly speaking, seems to believe that, in the absence of all legislation of this character, people could in any adequate manner preserve their health or protect themselves against gross imposture. We believe it—believe it most heartily; and we believe that the science of medicine would advance far more rapidly, and that, on the whole, the public health would be far better, if every man were left perfectly free to employ any one he chose to attend him in sickness. At present every licensed practitioner feels himself authorized to call every unlicensed practitioner a quack. We should prefer a system under which, to a quickened public intelligence in questions of health and disease, the quack should stand revealed by his quackery. How much of real quackery is now concealed by the license to practice it might distress a confiding public to know.

Our voice may be as that of one crying in the wilderness, but we cry with conviction when we call for more individual liberty, with its correlative individuality. There is something wrong, something vicious, in the application of compulsion where freedom of choice is indicated by all the natural conditions of the case. Force should be reserved for cases in which force is required, where nothing else will serve the purpose, and where the purpose is vital to the life of society. In other cases the application of force is wrong. The issue of "Man vs. the State" is a moral issue; and the more the question is looked at in that light, the more irrelevant, or at least unnecessary, other lines of argument will appear.—Popular Science Monthly.

THREE months ago, says a dispatch, the Forest Grove Presbyterian church at Chartiers, Pa., was a modest little affair with a debt and a meager attendance. Some of the elders after a hard fight succeeded in getting a permit to drill an oil well on the premises. Oil was found in abundance and June 15 the church sold out bodily to the Standard Oil Company for ninety two thousand dollars.

* There is evidence of divine inspiration in the mysterious and apparently wrong numbering of this and the following verses. A merely human writer would have numbered them consecutively. There is a mighty meaning hidden here, whose depth we cannot fathom; but the commentators and interpreters of future ages will make all clear.—TRs.

THE Single Tax Society, by the Australian ballot system, has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, L. M. Manzer; vice-president, H. L. Pleace; recording and corresponding secretary, H. M. Welcome; financial secretary, John A. Maynard; treasurer, David Farquharson; executive committee, James G. Maguire, James E. Mills, Joseph Leggett, James H. Barry, W. G. Sellers, H. A. Moore, and A. H. Sanborn.

Doubtful Progress, Says Mr. Reynolds.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Circulars of the Los Angeles Assembly of Progress are being freely distributed among Liberals. I have long been intensely anxious that the Liberals should have a mutual aid society, for both sexes, that would make sure provision for dependent loved ones; in which no prayers or mummeries, religious or otherwise, would be allowed; founded and conducted on strictly business principles; affording insurance at actual cost, paying fair salaries for needed work done, but no sinecures, fat jobs, or division of spoils among managers.

Because so fully realizing the great need and advantage of such an organization I am the more anxious that no unreliable or fallacious scheme should be accepted, for it could only result in distrust, and would greatly impede the progress of the genuine.

By long and careful study, and consultation with the best actuaries of the United States, I find actual cost of $2,000 insurance on lives selected with ordinary care and precaution, between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-five, is $11 per year; from thirty-five to forty-five, $17; from forty-five to sixty, $30.

This is not on the pass your hat system, but combines the mutual co-operative assessment, and old line systems, affording all the security of the old line, with all the advantages of the co-operative.

Each policy is issued for $2,222, and the $222 at death of member paid into the reserve fund of the society, and the $2,000 to heirs of the deceased. The death rate average would be ten to every thousand members, each year. Every death secures $222 to reserve fund; thus accumulating a reserve fund, proportionate with increase of membership, that affords security and guarantees permanence of the society.

"Fifty cents a month dues is excessive." What! 50 cents a month too much for each member to pay to meet expenses of doing the business of the society?

"How many members do you expect to obtain?" Oh, first year at least seven hundred, don't propose to issue benefit policies until after we get that number; hope to reach one thousand members the first year, two thousand the second year, and ten thousand within a few years.

Seven hundred members at $6 per year, $4,200. But there is also membership fees, $5 from males, $3 from females, not less than $3,000 more—over $7,000, with hope of $10,000 for doing business of society the first year, $20,000 the second year, and $100,000 a year if ever the membership reaches ten thousand. Better go slow before joining such a Progressive Society. Such progress benefits only the promoters of the scheme.

Five dollars a week sick benefit to all members indiscriminate, rich or poor, is a delusion, and an incentive to fraud, utterly impractical in a society extending over the whole United States. The only safe and really helpful sick benefit is necessary amount to secure needed attendance and comfort and provide for dependent loved ones during incapacity from sickness. This can best be secured by loan from Society's reserve fund, secured by pledge of sick member's and two other members' policies.

I do not doubt the good intent of the Los Angeles Assembly of Progress, but their scheme is not practical or reliable. I do hope it will, however, result in great good by arousing attention, discussion, and intelligent action on the subject, that will eventually give us a safe, reliable, practical Liberal mutual aid society. C. B. REYNOLDS.

Freethought.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I was handed a copy of your paper, FREETHOUGHT. I am pleased to find so live and wide awake a paper disseminating the grand truths of Freethought. I have loved the word Freethought since the days of the grand old Thomas Paine. Freethought, amid all the changes and mutations which have marked these ninety-six years, despite the efforts of its enemies, the priesthood and the army of sky-pilots, to retard its progress, has held on and is to-day pressing forward and onward in its grand march to freedom and liberty. There are more philosophers and thinkers to-day than ever before.

Freethought! Wonderful has been its success. Unprecedented in the history of any age, it has stretched from the frozen regions of the North to the sunniest climes of the South. The boisterous lashings of the Atlantic are in accord with its morning orisons, while the gentle roll of the Pacific harmonizes with its evening hymns. Yea, more; to-day thousands of Freethinkers, good men and true, outside of the United States—in the neighboring provinces of Canada, in some of the countries of South America, in the isles of the sea, in antipodal Australia, and in continental Europe—swell, with pride and pleasure, the grand army in its triumphant march to freedom from priestcraft and superstition, and bring all nations to recognize and act upon the grand principle of Universal Mental Liberty.

S. P. BENTON.

Bowie, Texas.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

At Myrtle Point I soon found I was among Freethinkers. In nearly every store, hotel, etc., I saw copies of FREETHOUGHT lying on the table. I met all the old friends of last year, namely: the brothers Lowe, Brown and wife, Majory and wife, Frank Poore, E. Bender and family, Border—of the hotel—Wise and wife, Dr. Brower and family, and many others. I gave four lectures in Wise & Bender's hall, to full houses and with good acceptance. The town has doubled in size since I was here last year, and "city lots" have quadrupled in value. Bonfires made of big stumps dug out of the streets, were constantly burning; not in honor of my presence but as a result of the expected railroad. The people of the whole county are carried away with the railroad excitement, so they have hardly time to think of lectures or anything else. The long, hard winter has made times dull, and they look to the railroad to bring back good times again. There is very little immigration here, for it is a hard place to get to, the roads are so bad over the mountains. I found Brother Bender rushed with business night and day. The Point is rapidly getting ready to put on metropolitan airs. It is one of the finest town sites in the world and will make the "queen city of the Coquille," no doubt. Dr. Brower invited me to his home, where we soon had a set to, as he is a dyed-in-the-wool Adventist and believes that when a man is dead he's dead until the final round up comes—when the graves shall give up their long sleepers who shall stalk about in their grave clothes. He threw more scripture at me than a mule could carry, to prove that a man had no soul, etc., which I never believed anyway, and to show the resurrection of the body; but all things are possible with God, you know, even to making three-year-old colts in five minutes, and to have them either three years old or five, as you please. You pay your money and take your choice. Handy god, is it not, to have in the family? Dr. Brower is well cultured and much of a gentleman, but is in Bible mire up to his eyes. I tried to pull him out, but where "ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." He thinks evolution is one of the "fakes" of the age. He has a splendid wife and family and is a rising young man of the age, but needs to be widened out to the broad gauge of Liberalism.

After a week's sojourn here at the Lenherr House I boarded the steamer for an all day's ride down the river to Bandon on the ocean shore. The river banks are low and the bottoms are covered with brush and timber, so there is nothing to be seen except the immense piles of drift-wood thrown on to the farms here and there where the timber had been removed so the raging waters could carry it out from the river bed, in some places piling up thousands of cords right at the door of some luckless farmer who, from Providence's mismanagement, has now to clear his farm over again. For a man to work a life time to get his ranch cleared from the jungles which were the growth of the ages, and then to have Providence go on a spree and bury him all up under a million cords of driftwood—whole trees, roots and all—is enough to make any one, even a good praying Christian, say cuss words by the peck. O Mother Eve, why did you masticate that crab and thus set all this drift afloat?

I arrived at Bandon at early eve and met mine host of the Tupper

House waiting at the landing to receive me with open arms. I stopped with Tupper a year ago. I am with Tupper now, and shall always be found at the Hotel Tupper when in Bandon, although there are two other fine hotels. Cause why? Because everybody stops at the Hotel de Tupper; it is but a few minutes' walk from the roaring breakers that chase each other up and down the beach in their mad race to devour the land. It is on the brink of the placid Coquille. It is a big, grand, homelike place, where ye weary traveler finds sweet repose in the arms of Morpheus, listening to the deep bass music of the sounding sea. And, lastly, Tupper & Son are big men with big hearts, grand wives, and as full of Freethought as the Bible is of absurdity. Let every Liberal traveling in Coos county stop at this famous hotel and revel in the good things of this world and let the beauties of the golden throne go by until they get there.

I have given four lectures here, in Rosa's Hall, to large audiences. My most radical thoughts were given, showing why man had made God in his own image; that man was the outcome, the fruit, of the tree of life that started away back in the blood-warm silurian ocean a billion years ago, by spontaneous generation; that pain and want were man's best friends, and have made him all that he is—were nature's emery wheels that made the man out of the savage. Take away these two agencies and man would go back to nakedness and ignorance. The more a man knows the more he wants, and thus will it ever be, and thus will he progress ever and aye.

Saturday, June 28, the Bandonites launched the new steamer they have just built. It was a fine sight to see her make her first trip, stern foremost, into the placid waters of the shining bay. With the speed of a comet she glided from the ways out into the element that was to be her future home, "walking the water like a thing of life" amid the cheers from the excited crowd. Hundreds had come from all around in the bush to be at the christening. She was named the "Dispatch," and, as she lies at the wharf, is a thing of beauty and perhaps a joy for her owners. I met here ex-Editor Upton, a rising and good looking young lawyer, a true blue radical who thinks one world at a time is enough; Emil Wuhlschleger, who has crossed the sea and been everywhere and is yet young, and now chief worker here in keeping up Freethought interests. Marshal & Son, merchants, are for universal mental liberty, and called cranks by the one-idea orthodox folks, but are true-hearted as steel to Freethought. The three Nichols brothers are Spiritualists whose every pulse beats to the rhythm of radical music; in fact, the whole town seemed baptized with the "holy water" of Secularism—no church organization here. Mr. Dyer and family, Mr. Rosa, Mr. Crooks and his handsome and accomplished wife, Captain Dunham, Captain Reed, Mr. Yeager the hardware man, the Kountz family, Editor Stitt of the Recorder; in short, all whom I have met here are Liberals in the broadest sense and are building a city by the sea above whose highest dome shall ever wave the flag of science and universal mental liberty.

After the launching of the steamer was over the liberal owners gave a free ball in the hall where I had lectured, and where my skeletons, charts, and high-colored paintings, Indians, gorillas, etc., were still hanging, thus making the queerest decorated ball room ever known. I visited the ball room at midnight and found it full of people, both old and young, all intent on driving dull care away. As I sat and drank in the sweet inspiration of music and glee I soon caught the inspiration of the occasion and found myself among the merry dancers.

Bandon, Or.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Prineville and vicinity.....	July 8 to 16	Heppner.....	Aug. 4, 5, 6
Monument.....	July 18	Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11
Hamilton.....	July 19	Rosalia.....	Aug. 13
Fox.....	July 20, 21, 22	Plaza.....	Aug. 14
John Day.....	July 24	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Prairie City.....	July 25	Spokane Falls.....	Aug. 17
Baker City.....	July 26, 27	Davenport.....	Aug. 18, 19
Union.....	July 28	Colville.....	Aug. 21, 22, 23
New Bridge.....	July 30, 31, Aug. 1	Buckley.....	Aug. 24, 25
Summerville.....	Aug. 2, 3, 4	Port Townsend.....	Aug. 31

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

The Glorious Fourth.

I am pensive to-night: I sit in a dream
At my window atop of the town,
I see the rockets' ascending stream,
The flash of the bomb and the ruddy gleam
Of the houses burning down.

I hear the populace roar and shout
As the lively pin-wheels turn;
And the Roman candles lavish about
Their globes of color, and orators spout
With an equal unconcern.

The fire-bells, drunken, reel and yell
At each new and growing light.
The town is a hell and my heart is a hell;
I hate all men and all women as well—
O I'm very pensive to-night. —Bierce.

One Way to Advertise.HOW A FUNERAL ORATOR COMBINED GRIEF AND BUSINESS.

A farmer drove up as we were sitting on the side porch of the hotel, and after fastening his horse he came around to us, and began:

"Gentlemen, mebbe it so happens that one of you is a preacher?"

We put in a denial one after another, and he continued:

"Wall, the case is this: My hired man died yesterday. He hain't got no friends around here, and he didn't amount to much, but we've got to hold some sort of a funeral over him. Kin any one of you do any talking?"

We put in a denial one after another, and he continued: "Wall, the case is this: My hired man died yesterday. He hain't got no friends around here, and he didn't amount to much, but we've got to hold some sort of a funeral over him. Kin any one of you do any talking?"

It was finally decided that an Ohio man, who represented a windmill manufacturer, should "do the right thing by the late lamented," and that afternoon the landlörd carried us out to the farmhouse in a wagon. Four or five farmers had assembled, a grave had been dug down on some waste land near the railroad and, the coffin was the cheapest affair to be had for the money. It was evident that the deceased hadn't laid by any cash for such an occasion. When all was ready for the windmill man he stepped out from his chair, pitched the tune, and we joined in the singing. Then he said:

"My friends, death is a sad thing. It must come to us all. Our poor friend here was hardly prepared for death when he took to his bed. He had been carrying water to the stock a long distance and this exertion pulled him down. Had his farm been supplied with one of our 'None Such' windmills, warranted to pump 150 gallons of water per minute, this man's life might——"

"Hold on a bit," interrupted the farmer, as he rose up, "I've got that very windmill on this farm, and it was owing to the blamed thing being out of order and then falling down that Jim got his death. This hain't much of a funeral, gentleman, but what there is of it has got to be straight. Proceed, brother, and perhaps you'd better skip windmills and git in sunthin, about our loss bein' his gain, the good die young, death cometh to the high and low, and so on."

But the windmill man had lost his grip, and he led off with the "Doxology" and closed the business in seven minutes from the start.—New York Sun.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher—I have brought you some odd sayings of the children in my class. I thought perhaps you'd like to print them.

Religious editor (looking them over)—They are hardly blasphemous enough to be funny.

The Humboldt LibraryPOPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. } Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. } Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. } (Geological Sketches.
39. } Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. } The Dawn of History.
45. } C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. } Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. } Illusions.
57. } James Sully.
58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. } Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Speucer.
71. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
75. } Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
76. } Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
77. } Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
78. } The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
79. } The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
80. } Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
81. } Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
82. } The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
83. } The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
84. } The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
85. } Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
86. } The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
87. } Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
88. } The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
89. } The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin]

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards,

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year.

The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas. F. Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Seizer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1469 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

. Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st. Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Gludeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A Census Drama.

Scene: A happy home. Enter Reginald de Montfort. Reginald de Montfort (folding his arms and glaring fiercely)—Madam, do you know me?

Mrs. Guinevere McGinnis (with hauteur)—I must confess, sir, that I have not that honor.

R. de M. (hissing into her ear)—Then I will tell you.

Mrs. McG.—Oh, great heavens! I see it all now. You are—oh, have pity, have pity!

R. de M. (sneeringly)—Pity? Pity and I are strangers. You must answer to me.

Mrs. McG. (almost overcome)—Yes, yes; I know—but think—I am only a weak woman. Be generous.

R. de M. [visibly affected]—Woman, I dare not spare you, even though I might wish to.

Mrs. McG.—And you will know all?

R. de M.—I must.

Mrs. McG. [with visible effort at self-control]—Then I am thirty-four years old, have no chronic diseases, have no mental defects, am near-sighted, slightly deaf, but am not deformed, we own our home, and it isn't mortgaged. Now, sir. Leave me. [Falls fainting to the floor, while Reginald de M. stalks calmly through the door].

Hope for the Chinaman.

Minister [sadly]—I'm afraid that the Mongolian will never absolutely give up his gods and allow himself to rest permanently within the sheepfold of the beneficent influences of Christian civilization.

Stockbroker [a member of the minister's flock]—Oh, come off! Here's a Chinaman eloped to Canada with another Chinaman's wife, the pair taking with them $5000 belonging to the deserted husband.

M.—Is that so?
S.—It is indeed.
M.—Then there is hope for the race yet.

The Organ and the Monkey.

Recently a lady took her little boy to a church in Leeds. He was a very little boy, and it was his first visit to church. The organ began to play, and the child turned to his mother and asked in a loud whisper:

"What's that, mamma?"
"Hush, dear, it's the organ."
"An organ in church," whispered the small boy, evidently much astonished and impressed. Then a pause of expectation, and a clergyman, small of stature, appeared in very gorgeous vestments.
"Oh, look, mamma!" called out the enfant terrible in clear accents, "Is that the monkey?"

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,
Author and Compiler. . . . Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
BY FREDERICK MACDONALD.
404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."
—Bulgarius. c

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."
—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."
—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. c

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."
—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. c

Fathers of the Republic Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Humor of the Census.

The census taking reminds me of an old story that is forgotten by people now. On the printed blanks were the words:

Age of father [if living].

Age of mother [if living].

One of the papers was returned with the starting information that the father was 120 years old and the mother 112. The city fathers hastened down to see this ancient pair and were much surprised to hear that they died long ago. "Then what do you mean by this?" said the angry official, pointing to the ages. "Why, that's straight enough. It says, 'Age, if living,' and that would 'a' been their ages if living now."

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.
Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.
PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; 7 ounce, $28.50; 8 ounce, $30; 9 ounce, $31.50; 10 ounce, $33. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60, $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD and ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50; fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Hardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address, Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm, large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index, $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address

FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric $1.75
 Education as a Science 1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols $4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization 2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols 4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species 2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science $1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols $5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons $1.75
 The Advance of Science25
 American Addresses 1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals 2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols $4.00
 On Liberty 1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours $1.75
 Our Place among Infinities 1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours 1.75
 The Moon 2.00
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology $1.50
 Man versus the State30
 First Principles 2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols 4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols 4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols 4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc. 2.00
 Universal Progress 2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic 2.00
 Education 1.25
 Organic Evolution75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France $.50
 The Warfare of Science 1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind $1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease 1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science $1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life 1.75

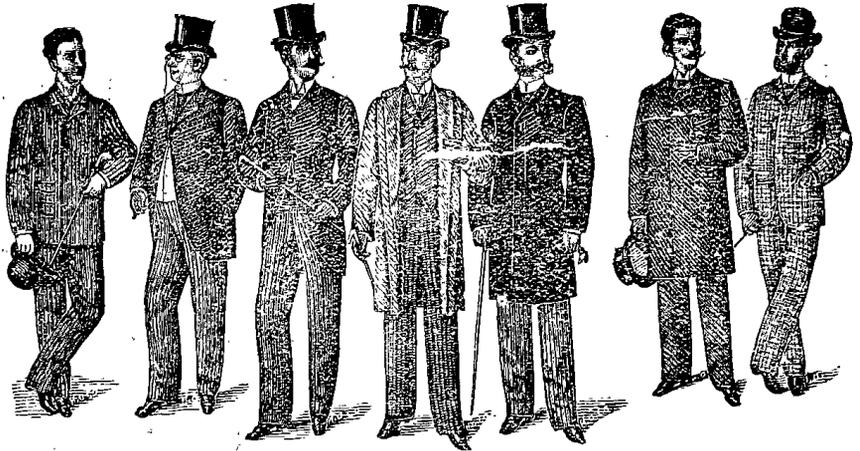

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Carl Marx.
 Capital $3.00
- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana $2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy $3.50
- By John B. Henck.
 Field-Book for Railroad Engineers $2.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages $1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols $5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy $5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums $1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc. $1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution $1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization $5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home $1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass $1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself $1.50
- English as She is Spoke $.30
 English as She is Wrote30
 Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories30
 Comedies for Amateur Acting30
 The Distracted Young Preacher25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. R. E. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR $25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.
 TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK

OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors. The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREIG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.

Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin $ 4 0
- 10 ka. at Gold, small size Badge Pin 2 0
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin 2 75
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
- 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin 3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin 4 00
- 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain) 3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain) 4 50
- 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain) 5 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain) 6 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year $1.50
- Six Months75
- Three Months50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1.00; cloth $1.50.

NOW READY

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,
Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica,
Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all
Kidney, Liver, and Stomach
Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C.H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and
Manufacturer, No. 40
O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H. Webb's Hæmony.

- Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S. F.
- Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres. Sather Banking Co. S. F.
- Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
- S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco
- Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
- John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.
- James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1. Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
- Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed and shipped by Express to all parts of the world. Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells, Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

The Rescue of Emin Pasha.

Owing to the delay in the mails on the Unga-gi Mbawa Northern railroad the following from Life's African correspondent has just come to hand. It is, however, the first authentic report of the meeting of Emin and Stanley: Mr. Stanley approached Emin's headquarters about three o'clock in the afternoon softly whistling "Little Annie Rooney." He rapped at the door of Emin's tent and Emin himself answered the summons. "How do you do, Emin?" said Stanley. "I beg your pardon," said Emin. "You have the advantage of me." "I am Henry M. Stanley—" "I don't care. I don't want any subscription books and I read 'The Dark Continent' a long time ago." "But I have come to rescue you." "I don't want to be rescued." "Well, you've got to be rescued. Put on your coat and come along."—Life.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,

Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,
Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.
HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m. 25tf

Health AND Hygienic Works.

- Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D., $1.
- How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D. $1.
- Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.
- Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.
- Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer. $1.
- Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Ills. 50.
- Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F. R. C. S. 30 cents

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE
Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

RUPTURE

In advertising Dr. PIERCE'S Patent MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS, the assurance is given that we are offering the Best Truss in the World. This Celebrated Appearance has been extensively sold for many years and has Radically Cured thousands of cases of Rupture! This is an Electric Truss (the only successful one ever invented); has no Iron Hoops or Steel Springs about it, and being elastic, can be worn with ease and comfort Night and Day. It's a perfect retainer! For further particulars of Truss, send 4c. in stamps for Pamphlet No. 1 and REMEMBER that Dr. Pierce's Genuine Electric Trusses contain our Private Signature exactly like that shown at top of this advertisement. Beware of inferior imitations! Address: MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS COMPANY, 704 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.,

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET,
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 29.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 19, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JULY 19, 1890

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The drive from Arlington to Fossil, a distance of sixty miles, is through vast stretches of table lands, and immense prospects can be seen upon every side, with the atmosphere free from cloud and smoke, as it was on June 28, when, in a big lumber wagon, with Cook for driver and Hall to look after the "bronchos," I journeyed over these lofty highways. A change was being made in the "line"—new horses and new stages being put on—and as the new stages had not arrived, a lumber wagon became for the time being the transportation facility. It had good solid springs and plenty of room, and with an umbrella over my head I had a fine opportunity to enjoy the magnificent panorama. I do not think that anywhere in the world there could be a grander view than from these vast plains, that spread from the bluffs of the Columbia to the Blue Hills. For hundreds of miles they roll away like gigantic swells of the sea. To the westward, against the unclouded horizon, stand the majestic forms of Mt. Hood and Mt. Adams, and from no point could these snow-white pinacles be seen in nobler magnificence. Almost the whole mountain appears, from base to top. There is nothing intervening. The plain leaps suddenly into these enormous waves, which are of a dazzling white, from the horizon line upward ten thousand feet. Both peaks are nearly two hundred miles distant and yet they seem but a little way, so perfectly clear is the atmosphere. Hour after hour we travel, and yet those mighty sentinels are still before us, and scarcely change their relative positions. Occasionally Mt. Jefferson and Mt. St. Helens glance upon the view. At four o'clock in the afternoon we arrive at Condon, which has recently been made the county seat, taking the honor from Arlington. It has about eight or ten houses at present. I should have remained over and lectured, at the cordial invitation of Postmaster L. W. Darling, if I had not been due at Fossil.

Here we put on a little extra steam in the way of an untamed broncho which had never been in harness before. Gently the horse tamer, Hall, approaches the fiery animal, and by soothing attentions fixes him in the traces. From the moment he starts off he gallops, and the speed is quite exhilarating. The way is level for about seven miles and it makes no difference how fast the animal goes. The wagon won't tip over. By the time we get to the "back bone" he is well cooled off and under the rein, and it is well that it is so, for if he should happen to "shy" at this point the wagon might shoot into the gully hundreds of feet. The "back bone" is only about twelve or fifteen feet wide in some places, and it goes almost perpendicularly down, and it would take but very little exertion on the part of the broncho to send us to hades. However, he minded his p's and q's pretty well until he got to the bottom and we were just crossing the Thirty Mile Creek, when he took a notion to heave over the side of the bridge. Fortunately he turned and hung suspended in such a way that he could scarcely stir, and was not able to drag the wagon with him. The other horse, a veteran in the business, held back for dear life, and preserved our equanimity. However, we descended rather rapidly from the vehicle, blocked the wheels, and then paid attention to the broncho, which was evidently quite surprised at the situation. He dropped into a hole under the bridge and awaited events. He didn't seem disposed to do anything on his own account. After sundry tugs and pulls the harness was disentangled, but the broncho was in such a position that he could not rise unless he took the bridge upon his back. Whereupon a rope was tied to his hind legs and he was thus hauled out by main force. He then stood up and realized that he had made a mistake. No bones were broken, or anything else. He quietly submitted to the harness and this time went over the bridge in good style; and probably will keep doing so to the end of his days. By the time we got to Fossil he was a subdued broncho.

I lectured on Saturday evening at Fossil. The hall was full. Benton Mires presided. Fossil is still good for Freethought, although there is considerable indifference in regard to work. The majority of the people are Liberal. Church services are not very well sustained. The neighboring country has passed through a hard winter. From thirty to seventy-five per cent of the stock has been destroyed. Some have lost all they had. But it isn't the quality of the people about here to give up, and spite of losses they go ahead. The prospects for harvest are bright. The rains of the last two weeks have helped things wonderfully and there will be more than an average crop. A good deal of money has been made in this country by stock, and undoubtedly will be again. The last season has been extraordinary in the amount of bad weather. The "providence of the skies" gave double the quantity of cold and storm, and being unprepared for this there was a fearful death rate among the sheep and cattle. Even those who had plenty of feed lost from twenty to twenty-five per cent, and consider themselves lucky. In spite of all, the country is improving. Take it year in and year out there is bound to be far more gain than loss.

It is hot weather just now. The thermometer runs up to a hundred, and in the middle of the day it is almost impossible to stir. I lectured Sunday evening, but just at the hour of gathering a thunderstorm came up and prevented a full attendance. However, there were enough present to keep things moving.

W. N. Putnam, John Putnam, Benton Mires, and others, are in the front ranks here, and represent what the majority really believe but don't take the pains to express. It is upon these few that we have to depend for the advance of Liberalism. W. N. Putnam has had to fight the elements this winter. He has had over seventeen hundred cattle to look after, and has had to ride day and night to battle the storm. His face was frozen, and feet nearly frozen, so fearfully cold was it at times. But he has come out of it all right and can do a heap of work yet for Freethought and humanity.

James S. Stewart, a Freethinker by inheritance, whose father in Scotland bears the brunt of orthodoxy in behalf of liberty and truth, was present Sunday evening from Lost Valley. On Monday evening, when the heat of the day was over, by the kindness of "Uncle" David Smith, I had a ride as far as his ranch, accompanied by Stewart on horseback. It was a delightful journey in the gorgeous twilight. Coming out of the valley where the yellow sunshine flickered, to the level of the broad heights, the sun was just beneath the horizon, and all the western sky was one mass of brilliant gold almost to the zenith. Far and far away stretched the resplendent earth beneath that glorious arch. Remotely to the north Mt. Ranier, over three hundred miles distant, reflected the radiance. Nearer, about one hundred and seventy-five miles off, Mt. Adams reared its massive form, dark blue, against the sky. Next came Mt. St. Helens, double that distance, faintly glittering on the extreme verge; then to the southward in proud pre-eminence Mt. Hood towered. Southward still, the Black Butte showed its rugged head, and then, vying with Mt. Hood, the lofty Jefferson; and to the extreme left, under a black mass of cloud, the Twin Sisters lose themselves. It was a marvelous picture, wonderful in extent and entrancing in sublimity. Scarcely anywhere could one look over such a vast extent of country adorned with such monuments of primeval energy. The rude and wild and desolate mingled with a splendor as rich as ever Art's deftest hand gave to the palaces of kings.

The wings of darkness gradually overspread the beautiful scene. The storm winds began to blow, and the clouds sent forth their lightning. Deep down into the valley we plunged. It seemed as if I was going into hades. After a while we reached a level and secure place where the wild brook, amidst ranks of trees, rushed along. Here David Smith kindly entertained me for the night. Coming here thirteen years ago he found this pleasant spot, where the sheep and cattle range and grow fat and find refuge from the winter's tempest. I sleep well, while the clouds and winds roll overhead. In the morning the brilliant sunshine again greets me. Stewart, going forward the previous evening, returns with an extra horse, and, alongside the Thirty Mile Creek, over an ancient Indian trail which the Aborigines, for immeasurable years, have traversed, amidst rocks and trees and overhanging bushes that almost bar the way, I pull on to Paper Sack Creek, at the head of which is the home of Alex Hardie. As we pursue our way, shut out from every sign of civilization, it might seem as if we were in an absolutely savage country, following the trail of the wild native. We passed by abandoned Indian camps and "sweat boxes." The sweat box is a kind of rude Turkish bath. It is a net work of branches just big enough for the human body. It is packed with hot stones covered with dirt. In this the sick Indian is stuffed, and kept there until he is about parboiled, and then, being taken out, he jumps into the cold waters of the creek, and in this way gets "cured." The process is said to be very effectual. I should think it would be. It must be either "kill or cure."

In the middle of the forenoon we reach Hardie's, where I am now writing these "News and Notes," and a comfortable place it is to sojourn. It is surrounded with trees, and everything has an air of improvement. There is Freethought hospitality here. Mr. and Mrs. Hardie are genial people. Mr. Hardie came here nearly fifteen years ago, and out of the wilderness has made a home where books, papers, and the spirit of to-day obliterate every shadow of superstition. Mr. Hardie came from Scotland, leaving home when he was seventeen years of age, and he has the knack of his countrymen, of pushing things and succeeding. His brother and father are now with him, and together they own large tracts of land and thousands of sheep. They lost about five thousand this winter, but they don't lose heart even if fortune is so rough, and keep going on, making the best of things. It was supposed at one time that nothing could be raised on this land. It was given over entirely to pasture. But the fields of barley and oats are in fine condition. The cornfield also gives excellent promise and makes a most profitable crop. Corn in this country is a rarity. I guess Mr. Hardie is the only one in the county who raises it. He doesn't go according to old ideas in farming. He believes in brain work, and gets outside of orthodox ruts, and in this way has the best that the land can produce. Those who don't think beyond the ancient landmarks wonder why he is so prosperous. Freethought in farming is as good as Freethought in religion.

It is really delightful to be in these frontier regions, where, amid the plains and hills and forests, only here and there can man conquer a home. Miles and miles of land stretch away, useful only for the wandering herd. But along these spaces are quiet nooks where the waters flow, and nature puts on her green apparel. Here the hand of man can make the fruits and flowers and harvest gold mingle in picturesque beauty with the uncultivated leagues. I have had a happy visit in Lost Valley. I suppose it is called "lost" because there are so many hills about it that it would take a guide to enable the wandering pilgrim to find out where it was. Friend Hardie is a real worker for progress. He has a fine library, takes the Truth Seeker, FREETHOUGHT, and other journals. There is not a dull hour on this picket line Paper Sack. The legend is that an old miner, some quarter of a century ago, struck this creek with his dinner, a cracker or two in a paper sack. After eating his dinner he threw away the sack. In his further travels he referred to this creek as the place where his paper sack was left. Hence the name, Paper Sack Creek. Thus historic association is preserved. Near by is Buttermilk Creek. The buttermilk rolled out of an immigrant's wagon and liquefied the way. The transaction became memorable.

Rye Hollow is where I am now, in the heart of the Blue Mountains, with vast rocks and forests about me—the pages of the planet's past history heaped together in wonderful variety and confusion. I never was in a country with such stupendous scenery as this. You might imagine that some immense battle field was before you, and that giants had here tugged and toiled and thrown mountains at each other, and been buried under the mountains, and in trying to get up had rolled and tossed them in every possible shape and direction. Demolished castle walls greet you far and near; there are hollows and gulfs innumerable, pinnacles and precipices, tremendous canyons, abrupt peaks, green spaces, tumbling brooks, embowered springs, and "rivers that move in majesty." Now you seem to travel in a prison house, hemmed in by desolation, then pictures suddenly open and the blue horizon glitters in "magnificently stern array" as if heaven's host had fallen upon the earth. All day long I have been riding through these wierd scenes, up and down, pursuing the winding trail, fording the John Day, holding on for dear life, keeping my feet on the horse's back, earnestly desirous that he follow the narrow line and not roll of a sudden into some new-made hollow of waters, for the ford of this river has a tendency to alteration, and where once was safe crossing is now a depth profound. Devious has been my day's journey, and my bones have ached, every one of them. At last I am securely at Rye Hollow, and I descend from my steed with scarcely any feeling in my legs. I have to walk around for a spell in order to realize that I have any "understanding." Rye Hollow is the ranch of Emil and Adolph Straub, two bachelor boys, and in their bachelor quarters I find repose. A good fire is blazing on the hearth, for with a cloudy sky and little rain this day, July 5, is chilly. The boys also provide me with a good square meal, and the absence of the fair sex is not so painful as it might otherwise be. Variety is the spice of life, and a bachelor's hall has its attractions, especially in this unique land, where nature's untamed magnificence cultivates a sort of savage longing.

I have enjoyed the Fourth of July in an unusual fashion. I have had a very jolly time, but there has been an under-current of dissatisfaction which occasionally conduces to emphatic speech. Friend Caspary met me, safe and sound, at Hardie's, July 3, and I left Paper Sack Creek on a mild and beautiful morning. Until noon the ride was enchanting. The blood was jubilant. At noon, however, a change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The poetry of motion on a horse's back ceased to be agreeable. The hard realities of life presented themselves. We could not recline in the verdant glades, attractive though they were. We must press on through sun and shadow. I was due at Wagner at 5 o'clock for lecture. We passed the Corn Cob at 1 o'clock. The origin of this name is unfathomable. It is truly Oregonian. At 3 o'clock the worst of the journey was over and we drew rein at the home of the Wagners—Carl, George, and Miss Lavina. While the supper was preparing I flung myself upon a couch and soothed the weariness of the flesh with sleep. After supper the whole company started for the picnic ground, where a temporary structure had been reared for the lecture and the dance. Here everything was in readiness for a patriotic celebration. The friends of a year ago gave a cordial welcome. Maxwell Ramsby was there, the pioneer Liberal of Haystack, who has kept the flag to the breeze for many a day. Mr. and Mrs. Gates, who first entertained me in this valley; Mrs. Hayden and her daughters, May and Lillie—Miss Lillie that was, is now Mrs. Thos. Smith, married on Christmas; long life and happiness to those who weave Cupid's darts with the colors of Freethought—Warren Carsner and Mrs. Carsner, and the little baby and all, were there also. The Crawfords and the Andrews and the Caldwells, from Lone Rock; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brown, Doc Hughes, Postmaster Flynn, the Hunt Bros., the Andersons the Frizzels, and many others were in the festive throng. There was nothing to mar the glory of the occasion, except that I found myself in the predicament of Miss Flora McFlimsey, of Madison Square. I had nothing to wear. I was left high and dry without bag or baggage, or scrip or scrippage. One may be a pilgrim to the heavenly city and get along without his gripsack. Not so, however, with the Secular Pilgrim. He is of the earth, earthy, especially in dry weather, and he must have a clean shirt occasionally, and a shave. I had to come from Lost Valley in light marching order, and everything that could be packed up was left at Fossil to be forwarded by stage. But behold the wonderful wisdom of Uncle Sam in his mail contracts. On this route the job was let so low to outside speculators, who prevent local competition, that it was almost impossible to sub-let, and, as a consequence, when the old contract was out, there was no one ready to carry the mails, and, therefore, no baggage, and, therefore, the Secular Pilgrim was obliged to borrow a clean shirt and collar, and the use of a razor, in order to make a presentable appearance, and the whole Fourth of July, including the oration and the dance, had to be passed in these borrowed plumes, and up to date there is no knowing where that baggage is or when I will get it—thanks to the business astuteness of Wanamaker. It looks like a scheme to make me patronize one of his ready-made clothing stores. I was obliged to enjoy the glorious Fourth like a veteran soldier in his fatigue suit, just off a long march. Of course I have no very kindly feelings toward the mail route from Fossil to Wagner. I think its abolition would be a benefit to the community, so long as it is in the hands of those who don't care a snap for the convenience of the traveling public.

I have to bear it philosophically and take the world as it goes. I lectured on Thursday evening, gave the oration on Friday morning before a large assembly, lectured in the afternoon at 5 o'clock, and remained to the dance and supper in the evening, until midnight, whirling occasionally in the mazy circle. Dr. Nicklin, of Lone Rock, read the Declaration of Independence; music was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell and others. After the oration there was a grand spread of all the good things that provoke a generous appetite. Mrs. Crawford brought a superb chicken twenty miles in order that the orator of the day might bring his clerical experience to "fond recollection." There was a big crowd present, from far and near—men and women, boys, girls, and babies, Christians and non-Christians, Methodists and Liberals, Catholics and Jews—all in one enjoyable assembly. It was the largest gathering Haystack has ever seen. In the evening the numbers overflowed. The majority did not go home till morning. It was a brilliant affair, and the Liberals of Haystack are to be congratulated on the success of this patriotic and Liberal celebration. It has given an impulse to Freethought in the community that will be felt for a long time, and permanent results will follow. The Fourth of July should be made a festival occasion, wherever possible, by Liberals. It is their day, as the Declaration of Independence is their document.

I was up early this morning, July 6, and took breakfast at the hospitable home of the Wagners. I bade good-bye to Caspary, the secretary of the Union here and an indefatigable worker, and my thanks are due to him for his kind attentions. There was a good hearty hand-shake all round as I quit the Wagner ranch. They are royal Liberals. A friend in need is a friend indeed. It was through them that the forlorn and baggageless pilgrim had a clean shirt and collar for the Fourth of July. Not only that, but, as it was impossible for me to go over to Mitchell by stage or wagon, they loaned me a horse to take the journey of forty miles over the roughest country on the coast. Emil Straub, of Rye Hollow, is my guide, and without him I don't think I could have proceeded. It takes a practiced eye to follow the trail, and I should not want to ford the John Day without somebody to go ahead. If I had been alone I should undoubtedly have got a ducking, for some of the old settlers get "taken in" occasionally.

So I am here, half way to Mitchell, and these generous ranchmen give me delightful hospitality. In fact I never struck a better people than these Eastern Oregonians. The rougher the country the more kindly disposed the inhabitants seem to be, that is, if they don't preach and pray. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

EXPULSION FOR HERESY.

For something like a year the Rev. Henry Frank, of Jamestown, N. Y., has been publishing a lively little paper called the "Rostrum," in which he printed his weekly sermons before his congregation, and dealt in a liberal manner with religious and economic questions. It will be seen from an article printed in another place that the Rev. Mr. Frank is now expelled from the Congregational association. His brother clergymen of Western New York could not abide his heresy and will fellowship with him no longer.

In expelling the Rev. Mr. Frank, the members of the Congregational association have done exactly what they had a right to do. It is one of the rules of the church that when a member departs from the faith he may be excluded from the church. A good Congregationalist must believe in everlasting punishment, in vicarious sacrifice, that clergymen are "called" to preach the gospel, that the entire Bible is divinely inspired, that human nature is totally depraved; in short, he must believe in all the dogmas of the orthodox churches. The Congregationalist differs from the Presbyterian and Episcopalian mainly on points touching the government of the church. His belief regarding the unknowable is substantially the same as theirs; and when the Rev. Henry Frank was ordained he undoubtedly took an oath to preach the orthodox doctrine, which he has not done of late. His brethren in the church were therefore much more consistent in expelling him than he has been in not voluntarily withdrawing from a body organized to inculcate doctrines which he rejects. But the association did an unjust and cowardly thing in expelling Mr. Frank without a hearing. Only a religious body would be guilty of such an act, but they were perhaps wise in their course. Now the criticism will be directed at them, whereas if they had allowed Mr. Frank to defend himself their creed would have been put on trial, and they would have been called on to defend that instead of themselves. Possibly they regard their own meanness and cowardice as more susceptible of defense than the brutal dogmas which Mr. Frank has repudiated.

Hence their wisdom in keeping those dogmas in the background and exposing their own reputations to the fire of criticism. They knew that their creed is too weak to stand examination, and they chose to defend it with their own persons, though they must sink below the level of ward politicians in order to do so.

THE "Pacific Union," a Labor-Nationalist paper, is not pleased with the new Silver bill. It says: "Let us state the situation now in a few words precisely as it is. In the first place, the government is imperatively required to purchase each month 4,500,000 ounces in silver bullion. This will enable those who produce it to sell their product at their own price, thus affording an opportunity to force the government to pay whatever may be demanded. How that part of the bill will work it needs no prophet to determine. Secondly, the special contract clause will enable the gold-ring to place the whole business of the country absolutely and irrevocably upon a gold basis, by making all obligations payable in gold or its equivalent. What more could be asked? What more, if they should try, could Congress possibly give them? Tell us, if you will, you who seem to know, in what way can the country be more securely bound to the money power than by such a bill as this?"

AT the close of Mrs. Besant's lecture at the Hall of Science on Sunday evening, June 22, says the London "Freethinker," that lady made a most interesting and important statement which was received with tumultuous applause. Recalling the great and sustained support given her by Freethinkers more than a dozen years ago, when proceedings were taken against her for the removal from her of her daughter Mabel, she thought it would please her friends to know that her son, who was now of age, had returned to her of his own free will, and that her daughter, although not legally free until next August twelve months, was again with her. Miss Besant had expressed a desire to be present here that evening, but Mrs. Besant to avoid any unpleasant complications had advised her not for the present. "My daughter," said Mrs. Besant, "notwithstanding her training and surroundings, and without a practical knowledge of Freethought, already expresses her detestation of the religion that separated her from her mother, marring the happiness of her childhood, and causing her mother such poignant sorrow."

FAITH-CURE and consumption have carried the Rev. J. C. Johnson, of Chicago, to the grave. Affliction sore long time he bore, but would do nothing for himself but pray. The advocates of faith healing say that this was not a fair test, as consumption is incurable. But why not? Every faith cure, if any ever occurred, is a miracle, and an impossible miracle is as reasonable as an easy one.

WHILE Providence was counting hairs and watching sparrows last Sunday, a cyclone struck an excursion boat on Lake Pepin, Minnesota, and a hundred persons were drowned. We wonder how many thoughtful people there are in the world who really believe that there is any god who takes the slightest interest in the preservation of human life.

"GREAT fears prevail all over England," says a London dispatch, "that the harvest will be a total failure, and the Archbishop of Canterbury has ordered prayers for fine weather to be offered in all the churches." Why does not this Big Medicine Man pray for good crops regardless of the weather, and produce a miracle worth recording?

A FAITH-HEALER has been held in Omaha for causing a woman's death through negligence, and the "Chronicle" thinks that "if she can be well punished her fate may discourage other medical frauds who live on public credulity." Permit us to remark that it will do nothing of the kind. Fanaticism feeds on opposition.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH and Mr. Hyndman, the Labor advocate, are to debate the "Eight Hours Question" in an oral discussion. Mr. Bradlaugh, it is understood, opposes Mr. Hyndman's Eight Hour law. As it is proposed to have fifty stewards on each side to maintain order, a lively debate is doubtless anticipated.

SUMMERLAND, the Spiritualist colony in Santa Barbara county, is vaunting itself with good reason over a natural gas discovery that will furnish the inhabitants all the fuel they need. There is no class of citizens who deserve better luck than our Liberal friends the Spiritualists.

MADAM DIS DE BAR, the medium now under bail in Rome for fraudulent practices, threatens that unless she is discharged she will proceed to compromise several eminent clergymen in the Eternal City. There is not much doubt that she can make her charges good.

PRISONERS at San Quentin went without their spiritual provender last Sunday, their chaplain Richard Creighton, having been sentenced to ten days in the dungeon for thrashing a "trusty." Creighton was formerly a state senator, and got into jail for bribing a jury.

JULY 14 is the Frenchman's Independence Day, as it marks the fall of the Bastille. The French citizens of San Francisco celebrated the event last Monday, and their literary exercises were not disfigured by prayers or other superstitious observances.

CHARLES WATTS, editor of Secular Thought, has gone to Europe for a few months' vacation. Mr. Watts is a hard and faithful worker, and he is fortunate in being able to take a rest.

T. V. CATOR's Fourth of July oration, delivered at Metropolitan Temple, is published in full in the last number of the "Weekly Star."

S. P. PUTNAM's lecture dates for John Day City and Prairie City are July 23 and 24 instead of July 24 and 25.

OBSERVATIONS.

The trouble between the members of the Nationalist Society, of which mention has heretofore been made in these columns, is getting serious. Not content with expelling Mr. Sinz for his damaging financial report, wherein he accused the financial secretary of irregularity, the offended officer, Mr. T. G. Ashton, has had Mr. Sinz arrested for criminal libel, and the courts of our effete system must settle the dispute between the advocates of the Era of Peace. It grieves me somewhat to know that the publicity given Mr. Sinz's charges through FREETHOUGHT has aggravated the unpleasantness, and that if I had minded my own business the difficulty might have ended with the wager of battle between the discordant persons, and thus no harm been done. But it is worth the cost to see the serenity with which Mr. Sinz accepts the issue. At liberty on his own recognizance, he still does fine watch and clock repairing at the old stand, and not a wave of trouble rolls even to Montgomery street.

About the time that Anthony Comstock, with the Vice Society behind him, was arresting people for imparting useful information on certain physiological subjects, somebody discovered that Mr. Colgate, president of the society, was recommending his celebrated vaseline as an effective application for the discouragement of offspring. Of course Mr. Colgate was not indicted, but when the exposure came he called in his vaseline pamphlet and had all surviving copies of it destroyed. The president of the Vice Society, it is believed, thereupon ceased to break the law which he was elected to enforce.

The treasurer of the society then was, and presumably now is, Mr. Killae Van Rensselaer, an innocuous youth of no apparent intelligence. It now becomes the duty of this person to look after his erring wife, lest she be found occupying a position as inconsistent as that of President Colgate. Mrs. Van Rensselaer is an officer of the International Medical Missionary Society, which society has recently issued a tract, written by Mrs. George D. Dowknot, that upon close inspection proves to be a trifle more off-color than the letter that sent Harman to jail for five years. Indeed, it describes atrocities committed upon women of a similar but if anything worse character than those mentioned in "Lucifer." They are, however, located in India; they are used as a lever to raise missionary funds with, and the publisher, like Colgate, is protected by association with the Vice Society. The Medical Missionary Society has not exceeded its right in publishing the facts which it lays before the world, but it has no claim to a monopoly of the business. We have trusts enough in this country without an obscenity trust run by Anthony Comstock and the Bible Society.

Dr. Jerome A. Anderson lectured last Sunday evening before the Theosophical Society at Red Men's Hall on the "Scientific Evidence of the Existence of the Soul." I was there by invitation and enjoyed myself first-rate. The hall was packed with an audience that had to be attentive or lose the thread of the speaker's discourse. There was no applause and no stir, for the subject of the ego, of Karma, of reincarnation and self-consciousness, is not one calculated to arouse tumultuous excitement. These Theosophists are curiosities to me. They are well-dressed, evidently well-fed, and of commercial aspect. They cannot be distinguished from Materialists either by the length of hair as to men, or the shortness of it as to women. They are mainly Free-thinkers in religion, and Liberals in their doctrine; and thus far I can comprehend them, but when they talk Theosophy I fall down. To be told that matter is crystallized spirit does not excite my antagonism; neither does it interest me, and I am equally indifferent to the assurance that I do not think, but that some previously existing spirit converts my thinker to its own use and purposes. I do not see how these facts alter the present condition of affairs, and I fail to apprehend the exact result of discussions on the subject, since, if demonstrated, the Stanford Loan Bureau would still float upon the horizon and the tariff would remain a tax. The Catholic church would continue to run our city government and grab the best pieces of property; every poor man must pungle his poll-tax and pay more for water than for bread, and the competing railroad would tarry beyond the Sierras.

Among the things that Dr. Anderson discussed was the question whether a stone had consciousness, and whether such consciousness was of the same kind as that manifested by human beings. He also dealt at length with dreams, the value of which he defended; and with hypnotism, which, he averred, had a bearing upon the soul question. The doctor held that the trance state of spiritual mediums was not caused by spirit control, nor was there such a thing as spirit manifestations; all the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism being the result of self-hypnosis on the part of the medium; which is quite as tenable a theory as any other.

Auditors were permitted to ask questions, and one man came directly to the point by inquiring where the first soul came from if it was not the result of organized matter. Dr. Anderson replied that the question was of its own nature unanswerable. No one could tell where the first soul came from—it was a ray from the absolute. "A ray from the absolute" is good, but it is not equal either in force or clearness, as I view it, to Stephen Pearl Andrews's "fulguration from the occultism" to which he was in the habit of referring mysteries.

The chairman of the meeting, whom I suppose to be Mr. Allen Griffiths, has at his command a large vocabulary of indefinite terms. With predicate, postulate, ego, plane, condition, environment, development, consciousness, and so forth, he can put together a series of remarks calculated to faze the questioner if not convince him.

Dr. Anderson believes that he has met scientific Materialism on its own ground, and slain it with its own weapons. He has moreover placed the manuscript of his lecture in my hands, and I believe it should be printed. Readers of this paper may therefore prepare themselves for a large dose of strong argument next week.

A GERMAN Presbyterian church in Brooklyn has recruited a new choir because the members of the old one were unduly fond of beer. Every Sunday, it is said, they took up a collection among themselves and bought a keg.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The state of Washington has an estimated population of 350,000.—Santa Clara county's loss by the hard winter foots up over a quarter of a million, attributable to death of trees and overflow of land.—A silver bill has passed House and Senate which, being signed by the president, will add $70,000,000 per year to the circulation.—San Francisco's death rate last week was 151, an increase of 50 over the corresponding week of 1889.—John W. Mackay offers $1000 reward for the detection of the person who attacked the character of his wife.—Assistant Secretary Tichenor has directed the deportation to China at the government's expense of twenty-four Chinamen, recently convicted at Tucson, A.T., of having illegally entered the United States from Mexico.—Mrs. Mary J. Holmes, the distinguished novelist, is in San Francisco.—Two men were arrested in this city last Saturday for trying to bring into disrepute a large clothing store which does not close on the first day of the week. They had on their backs signs reading "This store keeps open on Sunday." They stood intently gazing in at the windows of the store in such a manner as to expose their signs to passers by until a police officer took them in.—John White, late business manager of the "Call," and James P. Kerr, ex-cashier, have been arrested under a charge of embezzlement.—The population of Oakland will reach 50,000, according to news received from the census bureau.—Our local post-office, it is said, will shortly be lighted by electricity; an innovation that will startle the inhabitants of a city unused to government favors.

A cyclone struck the steamer Sea Wing on Lake Peppin, Minn., last Sunday. The boat became unmanageable, and it is reported that more than one hundred passengers were drowned.—Many persons were injured and much property destroyed by a cyclone near St. Paul on Sunday last.—Gen. John C. Fremont, the first presidential candidate of the Republican party, and California's first U. S. Senator, died in New York city July 13. He was 77 years of age.—The Rev. Oliver J. Booth, rector of Trinity Episcopal church, Lincoln, Ill., has lost his pulpit by over indulgence in liquor. Booth is the man who in 1886 came near being shot by Gen. William Sooy Smith on account of intimacy with Smith's young wife.—Although John Lennon paid $8000 for the privilege of running a saloon in Dracut, Mass., he has just been fined $50 and costs for selling liquor.—The Rev. John Arney, a Methodist preacher at Sarnac, Mich., has challenged the neighborhood to a horserace. He has engaged a track and will drive his own horses. There will be no purse.—While Samuel Walker, of Avondale, Ala., was returning from church late on the evening of July 11 with Susan Williams, he was waylaid by the Rev. Daniel Martin and his head split open. Jealousy was the cause of the deed. Marshal Fitzgerald, in attempting to arrest the murderer; was fired upon and wounded. Martin made good his escape.—A big book trust has been formed in New York which will raise the price of what is now cheap literature.

Stanley, the explorer, was married July 12, but he is sick and confined to his bed.—Mrs. Frank Leslie is returning to America without the Marquis de Leuville, whom she promised to marry five years ago.—Failure of the English wheat crop will place the American product in high demand. Prices are already on the rise.—London postmen went on strike recently, and the government discharged 435 of them. The others resumed work, and the strike is over.—Theodore Tilton has been made master of an English lodge of Freemasons.—Three Baptist clergymen, one a naturalized American, have been imprisoned at Havana for holding meetings without a license.

THREE years ago the London Trades' Council issued a leaflet on "sweating" in religious circles, from which it appeared that while all the Freethought printing offices paid the Union wages, many of the biggest Christian journals were printed at "sweating" offices where lower rates prevailed. Yet some of these Christian journals make very large profits. They gush about the working man, and what Christianity has done for him, but they pay him as little as possible for his work, leaving him to be properly paid by the "infidels."—London Freethinker.

THE DISCUSSION OF GOD.

It is a real pleasure to correspond with Otto Wettstein. He seems desirous of reaching the truth, of getting at the milk in the cocoanut, if it were possible, and discusses the matter of a God with a polish and easy temper that puts you at your ease. No carping in Otto, no seizing on the merely marginal skirmish line, the vice of all unskilled disputants, and the reason why so much time is lost, and disputation has got into such bad repute. We want a better method which will shoot at the center of the target and not waste time on mere side issues.

Our favorite method would be the form of a trial in court, where all irrelevant matter was ruled out, all redundant testimony refused, and every point, once settled, admitted and entered on the record as proved up. Then we might hope to reach some wise and definite conclusion.

Even with friend Wettstein we feel that we have failed to make our God well understood, or he has failed to understand us as we meant he should.

We are indeed mice in the cathedral, both of us. It has stood a million of years, and we have lived to observe not as many seconds. We must speak modestly of its great secrets, its recesses, its shadows, its purposes and contents, because there is so much we have not explored. But of the two mice, the one who has seen God walking there is the best witness. The affirmative is easier to attain than the negative. It requires less knowledge. Two witnesses who can say, "I have seen God walking here, or have seen that God has been here," are better than a hundred who have not seen, unless they can say, "We know the whole cathedral and know that there is no God in it." A very small, short-lived mouse might have seen the God of the temple, but it would be a grand mouse indeed who could say, "I have been all over it for a thousand years and have seen no God, and there is none."

It is the story of the Irishman over again, who, when two witnesses saw him steal a loaf of bread, wanted to offset them by twenty who had not seen him do it. The judge ruled them out.

Otto seems to think I must show the form of my God, and whether he, she, or it. Suppose I reply that I don't know. Indeed I have not seen God at all. I don't affirm any such thing. I only say I have seen traces, footprints, evidence of a superior presence, work done, things left behind, or taken away, that no power in nature or not intelligent and having a purpose could accomplish.

"In what form," asks Otto Wettstein, "of what sex? Was it a person?" I do not know whether he, she, or it; or a person, except as knowledge and conscious existence makes personality. And in man it is not the material arm, or heart, or head that is the person; it is the conscious self. There is no person when that is gone.

"In what form is it?" says my friend Otto. I do not know. I have not found out; I am trying to discover. There are so many subtle forces in the universe that I know and yet cannot understand, that I have reason to suspect more that even evade a mere knowledge of their existence. Some of them may be intelligent.

It might be a diffusible essence like heat, light, or electricity, aroma, or something finer than them all, a spirit. All that is to come.

Were I on a journey in a desolate region, with many desirable things, among the rest some bank notes, and in the night my goods were all broken up and scattered, but nothing eaten or taken but the notes, I should infer that some high intelligence had done it. But could I name the form or sex? Impossible!

But what do I see in this world that so surely indicates this higher intelligence? Many things. But I rest my case on this one alone—this man, this human race. It exists in at least five parts of this globe; in each part widely different from each other; and yet all one species, readily recognizing that fact, marrying, breeding together, speaking, inventing, looking to God, hoping for a future, and expecting reward or punishment from a God.

If not planned by a superior intelligence it is the most stupendous miracle ever thought of. If friend Otto can instruct me how that could be, by any mere process of evolution, I am his pupil. And I infer that God is just, wise, and good because these creatures are endowed with these qualities.

Then he infers that God also must have had a creator. Not at all. There is no creator. Time, space, matter, motion, the properties of matter, and God are all eternal. Only beings that end ever begin. The body of man is eliminated from nature. The spirit of man emanates from God. Man is God and nature, combined, to work results reachable in no other way. As a grand building is impossible without man, so is man without God.

Is this God a comfort? To me an unspeakable and ever-present comfort and joy, more than all mankind, an ever-present companion. I am never alone, never misunderstood. God knows all just as it is.

H. L. KNIGHT.

THE CLERGY IN POLITICS.

The clergy just at present seemed possessed with a desire to enter into politics. The reformed Presbyterian ministers are circulating petitions to Congress asking that God shall be formally recognized in the Constitution as the only supreme ruler, and refuse to vote until their request is granted. The Methodists and Presbyterians demand that religion shall be made a part of the public school education. They are illogical enough to insist that the schools must be protected against the clerical influence of the Roman Catholics, and yet protest against the complete secularization of the schools. The Catholic denounces our schools as "godless" and for this he is denounced by the Presbyterians and Methodists, who nevertheless confess that they are "godless" by insisting that religion must be taught in them, and protesting against their present secularization.

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, of the New York Presbyterians; Dr. Elmendorf, of the Dutch Reformed, and Rev. Dr. Heber Newton, of the Episcopalians, with the assistance of Bishop Potter, are trying to persuade their congregations that changing the present municipal government of New York is a "profound religious duty." These ministers are busily at work trying to organize a clerical party in municipal politics. The republican leaders, Collector Erhardt and ex-Senator Tom Platt, and a leading light of the democracy, ex-Mayor Smith Ely, all belong to Dr. Parkhurst's church. Of course, the only effect of this attempt to bring the clergy and the churches into politics will be to burden the church with a needless and worthless quarrel, for intelligent Americans are no more disposed to take their politics from their pulpit than Catholic Daniel O'Connell was inclined to take his politics from Rome.

There is at least one minister in New York that has not lost his head or his heart to this clerical party in politics, viz. the Rev. Dr. R. F. DaCosta, of the Episcopal church.

Dr. DaCosta evidently agreed with Ralph Waldo Emerson, who, when asked once to join a moral reform association, replied that it took about all his time and attention to reform himself; that when a man had reformed himself he was sure of one thing that he never could be sure of in a moral reform association, viz., there was one scoundrel less in the world. Dr. DaCosta pointed out that the first difficulty in the way of municipal reform was that of finding genuine political reformers, since the list of prospective reforms included the "bankrupt who has become rich through bankruptcy, the merchant who has thrived by swindling the customs, the real estate and railroad wrecker, the Stock and Produce Exchange gambler tossing up for chances of people's bread, the politician who spends his thousands in demoralizing the franchise, and the bloated philanthropist who pays his dues to charity organizations out of rents of dens of infamy and vice, the leprous debaucher, the adulterous millionaire, and the pious bookseller who pirates the works of unprotected authors and publishers."

Reformers of this kind full of virtuous zeal against official offenders, will join this clerical crusade organized by preachers who never dare to rebuke the gross sins of their gilt-edged communicants, and who could profitably employ all their energies in reforming themselves. This is very plain, blunt speech on the part of Dr. DaCosta, but it is instinct with truth. He defines the present crusade as the "attack of the unscrupulous wealthy against an unscrupulous class that want to be wealthy."—Portland Oregonian.

In 1881 a Methodist Mission was opened in New York city, which has since developed into the International Medical Missionary Society, a Christian institution, which sends medical missionaries to India, China, and Africa. The society has published a tract called "Our Suffering Sisters," detailing the barbarous treatment of women in Burmah and Siam when giving birth to children. In the account there is an exact parallel for every feature in the Markland letter which was objected to in the trial of Moses Harman, and the account is much stronger and in more minute detail. A peculiar thing about the society and its circulation of this tract is that one of its officers is the wife of wobble-jawed Killaen Van Rensselaer, treasurer of Anthony Comstock's Society for the Suppression of Vice; and it suggests the query whether the Comstock law is to be enforced against heretics by a penalty of five years' imprisonment, when their charity begins at home, while the mails are free for Christians who express similar ideas in similar language, but confine their efforts to work among the heathen abroad.—The Truth Seeker.

CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER is quoted as saying that the difference between the "faith cure" and the "mind cure" is that the "mind cure doesn't require any faith, and the faith cure doesn't require any mind."

DONATIONS.

The publishers of FREETHOUGHT acknowledge with gratitude the following donations from stockholders, subscribers, and friends:

Henry Dopman	80	J C Purdy	1.60
Geo Hinrickson	80	L Schlegel	80
L F Long	1.00	N Schroeder	80
R Butterfield	3.20	P VanHoeter	1.60
J H Lindsay	80	W F Freeman	80
R H Bliss	3.20	W S Fowler	80
R Laramore	5.00	J C Gage	80
I K Garrett	1.85	John Huntley	80
Ed Wegner	8.00	Jos Blabon Jr	8.00
S Gracey	80	C G Caspary	80
G H Purdy	1.00	H Crumrine	80
John Bell	1.00	M Miller	1.60
John Keren	1.00	Fred MacMillan	1.60
Chas de LaBaume	1.00	J E Crane	1.00
E S Lemme	80	L Magenheimer	1.60
J M Doan	80	G W Doane	80
W H Eastman	1.60	W Shine	80
R Barcroft	1.60	Geo Dietz	80

BROTHERHOOD OF MORALISTS.

REPORT FOR JUNE.

During the month twenty-one membership certificates were issued, making a total enrollment of 1064 members. The new members are, from Texas, 8; Minnesota, 5; Michigan, 2; New York, 2; Kansas, 2; Missouri, 1; Ohio, 1. F. H. RAU, Sec.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Balance from May report	$10 70
Thomas Wilber, Michigan	50
W. A. Aisenman, Michigan	25
Dr. F. Robertson, Ohio	1 00
For constitutions	20
	<hr/>
	12 65
Mailing constitutions, etc	2 85
	<hr/>
Balance	9 80
Hannibal, Mo.	A. R. AYRES, Treas.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Prairie City	July 25	Plaza	Aug. 14
Baker City	July 26, 27	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
Union	July 28	Spokane Falls	Aug. 17
New Bridge	July 30, 31, Aug. 1	Davenport	Aug. 18, 19
Summerville	Aug. 2, 3, 4	Colville	Aug. 21, 22, 23
Heppner	Aug. 4, 5, 6	Buckley	Aug. 29
Dayton	Aug. 10, 11	Puyallup	Sept. 5, 6, 7
Rosalia	Aug. 13

THOMAS PAINE.

BY WILLIAM HENRY BURR.

III.

WAS HE JUNIUS?

Chief Justice Mansfield was "that Scotchman" whom Junius hoped in his next and last letter to be able to "pull to the ground."

The knowledge of Junius's intention to write no more had got to the king, and believing that the actor, David Garrick, was the medium of communication, Junius, on the twenty-seventh of November, inclosed another letter to Woodfall addressed to the Duke of Grafton, and in the accompanying private note said:

D. G. has literally forced me to break my resolution of writing no more.

The letter of Junius to Lord Mansfield did not appear till January 21, 1772, and it was his last, with an appended appeal to Lord Camden.

The private letters of Junius to Woodfall and John Wilkes, were first published in 1812. To Wilkes, September 18, 1771, he says:

I willingly accept of as much of your friendship as you can impart to a man you will assuredly never know. . . . I speak from a recess which no human curiosity can penetrate.

And again, on the sixth of November:

No man writes under so many disadvantages as I do. I cannot consult the learned, I cannot directly ask the opinion of my acquaintance, and in the newspapers I am never assisted.

In a private letter of Junius to Lord Chatham, dated January 14, 1772, and inclosing a proof-sheet of the letter to Lord Mansfield, Junius says:

Retired and unknown, I live in the shade, and have only a speculative ambition.

And in the dedication of Woodfall's authorized edition of the letters, the author says:

I am the sole depository of my own secret, and it shall perish with me.

The secretiveness of Junius is repeated in the life of Paine, and the promise never to disclose the secret of Junius was fulfilled by Paine.

On the twenty-first of January, 1872, exactly one hundred years after the date and publication of the last letter of Junius, the discovery that he was Thomas Paine was first made public in the city of Washington, and the first printed copy of the book containing the proof was exhibited to an audience of forty people. The book, which had been stereotyped several weeks, opens with these words:

One hundred years ago Junius wrote as follows. . . . Washington, D. C., January 21, 1872.

The writer of this article, who made the announcement, did not hear of the discovery before January 2, 1872, when Joel Moody, Esq., of Kansas, was introduced to him as about to publish a book entitled, "Junius Unmasked; or Thomas Paine the Author of the Letters of Junius and the Declaration of Independence." Mr. Moody did not wish to be known for a while and I voluntarily became god father to the bantling.

One most remarkable characteristic of Junius was his refusal to receive any pay for his work. When Woodfall issued a complete edition of the letters, with a "Dedication to the English Nation," and a preface, both prepared by the unknown author, he tendered to Junius one-half the profits of the book. To this Junius replied as follows:

What you say about the profits is very handsome. I like to deal with such men. As for myself, be assured that I am above all pecuniary views, and no other person, I think, has any claim to share with you. Make the most of it, therefore, and let all your views in life be directed to a solid, however moderate, independence. Without it no man can be happy, nor even honest.

This extraordinary characteristic is strikingly paralleled in Paine. He was never without "a solid, however moderate, independence," and he never received any profit from his literary work. In his "Plea for the Excisemen," published in the same year that Junius completed his work, he says:

Poverty, in defiance of principle, begets a degree of meanness that will stoop to almost anything.

This parallels with the sentiment expressed in the private letter to Woodfall, that without a moderate independence "no man can be happy, nor even honest."

And in regard to working for profit, "Casca," in The Crisis of May 15, 1775, says:

These lines, inspired by Churchill's laurel'd shade,
I write, unknown, unpatronized, unpaid.

And here, by the way, comes in a parallel in Paine's "Crisis" No. II., addressed "to Lord Howe," and beginning with this couplet:

What's in the name of lord, that I should fear
To bring my grievance to the public ear?

CHURCHILL.

But now mark what Paine himself says about writing for profit:—
In a great affair, where the happiness of man is at stake, I love to work for nothing.—(1802).

I take neither copyright nor profit from anything I publish.—(1807).

His biographer, Gilbert Vale, says there is no other known example of a poor man refusing to receive the profits of his works. Is there an example even of a rich man? Not one writer in a thousand would act thus. But here are two contemporary examples. Multiply one thousand by one thousand and you have a million to one that Paine was Junius.

Another most prominent characteristic of Junius was hatred of the Scotch. For this no parallel was found at first in any of Paine's writings. The expression "Scotch and foreign mercenaries," in the draft of the Declaration of Independence, which so offended two gentlemen of that country that it had to be stricken out, was doubtless penned by Paine, for Jefferson had no antipathy to the Scotch. But that kind of evidence was scarcely admissible without other support.

It was not long, however, before a passage was found in Paine's "Prospects on the Rubicon," which showed his strong animosity toward that people. Speaking of the policy of embracing the Scotch in the reign of George III., he said it was justly reprobated, and added:

The brilliant pen of Junius was drawn forth, but in vain. It enraptured without convincing, and though in the plenitude of its rage it might be said to give elegance to bitterness, yet the policy survived the blast.

This was sufficient proof that Paine, like Junius, hated the Scotch; but then the somewhat embarrassing question arose if Paine was Junius, could he have thus alluded to that writer? There was but faint praise of Junius in the passage, but why should he have mentioned him at all?

In 1881 I discovered that the publication containing this reference to the Scotch and to Junius, was anonymous. When Paine became famous as the author of "Rights of Man," the critics detected his authorship of "Prospects on the War," published in 1787, and it was republished in 1793, entitled "Prospects on the Rubicon," and accredited to Thomas Paine.

CHRONICLES OF SIMON CHRISTIANUS.

CHAPTER XVII.

ENTITLED OBLIVION.

Simon grows Weary, and is Swallowed up by the River.

1. And Simon wandered about many years seeking the city, even the city of Sanctification, and could not find it, for though he did often see it by means of his glasses, yet did it vanish as he approached.
2. And he sought the city with great pains, and suffered many tribulations, and waded and wallowed through very much filth, and slime, and mud, and had many contests with hobgoblins and ogres, and came off wearily.
3. And the hair of his head departed from its allegiance, and his eyes revolted, and his ears grew rebellious, and his feet were of two opinions, and his knees were at enmity and battered each other, and his shadow shook in the sun.
4. And his chariot wheels were worn off, and he drave heavily.
5. And the hand of Time was heavily upon him, and led him towards the bleak river, even the river Oblivion.
6. Sad and weary and with dread forebodings, he drew near the desolate shore, for he knew that time whose prisoner he was.

would shortly give him into the hands of the chilly monster which haunted the river, even Death.

7. And Simon drew near to the river, and stood on its brink.

8. And several of the guides were by him, saying, Fear not, for thou wilt find the bridge.

9. And they gave him great abundance of glasses that he might see the bridge, and he looked, and thought he saw it, and put forth his foot.

10. And as he put out his foot, the monster seized upon him, and there was no bridge, nor any such thing, and he plunged into the river.

11. And the leaden waves thereof received him and swallowed him up, and he was seen no more.

12. And the sullen waters pursued their course, and stayed for none.

THE END.

GUILTY OF "HERESY."

The Rev. Henry Frank, of Jamestown, N. Y., has been pronounced a heretic, and expelled from relationship with the Western New York Association of Congregational churches. The association met in the little town of Ellington the last week in June, and unloosed its pent-up vengeance to the extent that when Mr. Frank appeared in response to an invitation to show cause why he should not be expelled he found that he had already been tried and convicted without a hearing, and, figuratively speaking, thrown out beyond the limits of Christian fellowship into the domain of a worldly world. Generally, when a man is on trial for an offense against the statutes, or ecclesiastical laws, he is aware of the situation and given an opportunity to brace up for the ordeal. But this is where the trial of the Rev. Henry Frank by the Western New York Congregational Association was different from the ordinary affair. There were no harrowing scenes, such as keeping the accused in suspense, no wearisome delays, no tedious examinations of obdurate witnesses, no excruciating conflicts of prosecution and defense.

The judge, jury, and prosecuting attorney were all one, the evidence was all in before the court opened, and the verdict rendered before the accused had time to recover from his astonishment. Nothing in the history of ecclesiastical procedure can be found to compare with it for the unrelenting speed with which every movement was executed.

Briefly, the facts are as follows: A few days previous to the meeting, Mr. Frank received notice from the association committee to appear and show cause why the association should not formally withdraw fellowship from him. The committee appointed at the last meeting to investigate the alleged heresy of Mr. Frank had prepared a series of resolutions charging him with a "lack of faith in a personal God, the deity of Jesus Christ, and the inspiration of the Bible; with holding up to derision doctrines and views dear to the hearts of the Evangelical Christians;" and also recommending that all fellowship and ecclesiastical connection with him be severed, and that the resolutions be published in all the denominational papers. No evidence was produced to substantiate the charges, no form of a trial was permitted, and when Mr. Frank, who had responded to the invitation to be present and defend himself, had recovered from his astonishment at the summary proceedings, he arose and protested against such arbitrary, star chamber action, contrary to all precedent, fairness, and justice. In substance, he spoke as follows:

"Gentlemen: I am so amazed and horrified at the summary and peremptory procedure which you are here instituting that I can hardly express myself. Are you aware of the madness of your action? I was advised to come here and defend myself; but I am not given the decent opportunity of a trial—not so much as the semblance of one—and still you accuse the Jews, who at least procured a mock trial for Jesus. I came here simply to ask for a postponement of the case, not suffering myself to believe you could be so inhuman as to insist upon my undertaking my defense at this juncture when you know you have given me but a week's notice of this proposed action though you had resolved upon it six months ago. If you proceed at once in the manner in which your committee request you I can assure you your course will not be only unwarranted and unprecedented, but beyond even the clearest scriptural injunction. Let me remind you that this whole procedure is of the 'dark lantern' nature or the star-chamber kind, resorted to only by the basest politicians in our day and by the maladorous ecclesiastics of the days of shameless tyranny. Your course can be equaled only by the usages of Torquemada and Jeffreys. You are preferring no set charges against me; you do not even give me an opportunity to hear the nature of the supposed evidence on which you rest your actions; you utterly ignore my position in society and treat me like a common bully or coarse rowdy. Even the meanest felon in the land has more rights which the public weal is compelled to respect than you are willing to grant me here. Now let me remind you that your own scripture, of which you claim to be the especial custodians, enjoins upon you not to cast one out of your fellowship until you have first endeavored with every possible means to bring him back to the rule of your authority. But which one of you has ever visited me and spoken one kind word, striving with me to retrace my steps, if you believe, as you seem to, that I have gone astray? Not one of you. You have only listened to cowardly rumors and have nerved yourselves with all manner of revengeful feelings, watching the hour when you might leap upon me and crush me to the earth. Gentlemen, I am here not to defend myself. I am afforded no opportunity for that—but I am here to appeal to your sense of right and justice, to your common decency—and to ask you to postpone this case until I can be given a fair chance to explain myself."

The Rev. E. B. Burroughs, who succeeds the Rev. Henry Frank as pastor of Jamestown, was acting as moderator, and when Mr. Frank had concluded his remarks Mr. Burroughs vacated the chair, and began a denunciation of Mr. Frank, whom he referred to as "that person." He then read extracts from Mr. Frank's public utterances, giving his own interpretation. Mr. Frank arose and strongly protested against this kind of procedure and abuse, claiming that he was not on trial, and yet he was being publicly accused without a just opportunity to defend himself. He asked for a postponement of the consideration of the case, and upon a motion to that effect being seconded, he again spoke as follows:

"You have brought me here without an opportunity to get counsel to defend me, utterly defenseless, even without my published sermons or sufficient matter to contradict the insinuations to which you have just listened. You have voted me, out of the extreme generosity of your heart, just ten minutes in which to explain myself. You do not ask me to defend myself, for you have already, through your committee, pronounced judgment upon me. You do not know the man you are dealing with, if you think I will so degrade the cause I present as even to attempt a defense under these dishonorable and disgraceful conditions. How can I defend the object and purpose of my life work in ten minutes, especially when it is to no purpose for I am already prejudged.

"But you have heard from the gentleman, Mr. Burroughs (I will not insult him as he did me by referring to him as 'that person'), that my course is notorious and scandalous. But if so, gentlemen, what do you fear in the issues of a fair trial? If my course is beyond any defense, why do you fear to allow me the opportunity of a defense? Let me remind you the same charge was once made against Horace Bushnell, the great heretic of Hartford, who was said by Congregational ministers to be scandalizing the church, but they gave him a fair trial, and when they heard his defense they were only too glad to honor themselves by his continued association. Do you not all remember how Henry Ward Beecher but a few years ago was everywhere charged among bigoted Congregationalists as notoriously overturning the foundations of Christian belief, but when they heard him before the association, even the most conservative changed their opinion? Look at Lyman Abbott, the most radical preacher in the Congregational church to-day, there were some who actually frothed at the mouth, because of his audacious and scandalous antagonism to certain well established doctrines of the faith. But when he appeared before the council and explained himself how glad they were to receive and honor him, and exonerate him from all prejudicial rumors. Are you afraid that something like this possibly might come to pass in my case? It is very evident you are. You are afraid to give me a trial, and you will write yourselves down as inquisitors worthy of the age of Jeffreys. This action of yours will rebound upon you and belittle your influence and disgrace your cause. Col. Robert Ingersoll with all his eloquence could not in a century so prejudicially affect the popular cause of Christianity as this outrageous, unwarranted, unscriptural, and tyrannous procedure of yours. If that Jesus whom you pretend to worship were here to-day he would pronounce upon you all the judgments which he did on the scribes and pharisees of old. But I pity your ignorance, and I forgive your barbarity. You know not what you do. Let me only say as I leave you, I still have faith in the paramount power of love, and I believe the day will yet dawn whose resplendent rays of justice will pierce the murky mists of earth's darkness, and so mingle the fair and the foul, the true and the false, the just and the unjust, in the one white ray of purity and love, as to teach us all how to be brothers and walk in that heavenly light in the fellowship of freedom, and by the dictates of truth. Forgiving you because of your ignorance, I bid you all farewell."

Mr. Frank then withdrew from the meeting and the motion to postpone consideration was rejected. Then the resolutions severing relationship with Mr. Frank were passed.

SINGLE TAX.

Lately I have been much interested in the various discussions on taxation. The economical question underlies the whole reform movement. Once move a government on a basis of just and equal taxation, and such will be a government as far just and justifiable as any government can be. Personally I do not feel as if I should be governed at all, but the surrounding of Christians and heathens, Theists of all kinds, in which I am placed, seems to make some kind of government necessary.

Nobody can expect that the politicians and other gentry, who do us the favor of governing us, should perform their arduous duties without being well and richly compensated for their labor.

Taxation therefore is necessary, but it behooves us to find a means by which it should be equally and equitably divided on all the burden-bearers.

Henry George, in his Single Tax scheme, tried to get rid of all inequality by taxing nothing but land. It has been shown over and again that this would never equalize the burden, because it would not do away with speculation, and yet according to my views the Single Tax idea is correct. If we must pay taxes, it is only fair that all should pay equally for the privilege of being bulldozed. It is not moral that I should do all the paying and receive all the bulldozing, while my neighbor, who is better able to do the first than I am, should escape this, and at the same time perform all the bulldozing.

In all communities where taxation has been brought down to a fine point, it has always been a maxim to tax those goods the most which nobody can spare. Flour and salt were heavily taxed because the poorest needed them. Those that could not raise enough money to pay their bread tax, well, they might simply starve. Anybody who cannot pay for the privilege of being governed has no business living, is the principle underlying the governmental idea.

Now if we bring H. George's humanitarian scheme—whether he stole it or not does not make any difference—in conjunction with the European idea that tax on the common necessities of life grinds the pennies the best out of the poor, we come soon to the conclusion that if we can find an article indispensable to everybody and we put our single tax on that one article, we solve the question.

Nobody denies that all the land which does not belong by paper title to individuals is owned by the government. Well, since nobody has a paper title to the air, nobody can logically deny that it belongs to the government, and since everybody has lungs and must breathe, the enforcement of the single tax on air would be the solution of the question.

To avoid the tendency of some wretches to let their sacred taxes run in arrears, we could simply make them payable one year in advance. Nobody has a right to breathe the government air without paying for the same, and if he could not possibly pay—well, he might choke. It would be a congenial and pleasant occupation for our gentle police force to choke the wind out of delinquent tax-payers' throats, and from a legal point of view as just as the selling of a poor man's home for taxes. It would give delightful items in the daily papers how Captain This or Policeman That had been speedy and dextrous in his legal choking duties. Then the air would be inexhaustible in its tax-bearing qualities, because it could never be taxed out of existence, and always equally needed if ever so heavily taxed. Free scope would be offered to all industries; free land, free trade, free money, free love—everything free except the small item of air. Think of the wear and tear it would save to senatorial and congressional brains in their struggling with economical questions. If a deficit in the governmental strong box occurred they could remedy the same by simply adding another per cent on the taxable staple.

And since nobody can raise a corner on air, the great and crowning glory of this scheme is that everybody would either have to pay his legal share or choke.

DE LESPINASSE.

Orange City, Iowa.

THE COST OF THE U. S. SENATE.

We have made a study of the incidental expenses of the United States Senate. It shows some curious and suggestive results. There is this difference between the incidental expenses of the Senate and of a man whom we are trying by this means to size up. The man presumably spends his own money—the Senate, we know, spends other people's.

The Senate, fat, lazy, luxurious, has surrounded itself with an army of flunkies. There are eighty-four Senators and four salaried employees for each Senator. Even the great House of Representatives, with four times as many members as the Senate, has not so many servitors. Such a place for clerks, assistant clerks, and messengers, and pages, and laborers, and other attendants, as the Senate, probably exists in no other place on this continent. To begin with, the Senate has a secretary. The secretary has a chief clerk, a principal clerk, a principal executive clerk, a financial clerk, a minute and journal clerk, an enrollment clerk, an assistant financial clerk, and no end of ordinary clerks, undisguised by titles, under his direction.

Fifty Senate committees have clerks to attend to their routine matters and to do the bidding of the chairman. A number of these committees have assistant clerks, and ten of them have messengers. "Messenger," the reader should know, is the term which in the Senate stands for waiter, servant, attendant, mixer of drinks, purveyor of personal comfort, etc. The number of these messengers rapidly increases year on year. Some of these committees which have clerks and messengers do not have any business. They do not meet once a year. No legislation comes before them demanding attention, yet they occupy gorgeous rooms and are served like princes of the blood at the seaside.

There is a serjeant-at-arms who has deputies and assistants to the number of a dozen. They are the keepers of doors, the guardians of dignity. Besides these, there are thirty who appear on the rolls as simple "messengers," probably the men who watch like hawks at all the apertures of the sacred chamber to see that no profane eye gets within a measured ten feet of the walls of the Senate during the majestic secret sessions. There is a postmaster, and he has no fewer than seven assistants. Eight men to handle the mail for eighty!

But this is not all. There are a half-dozen riding pages, to carry notes from the Senate chamber to the residences of its members, and other places. One of the curiosities of Washington society is a Senate riding page, mounted on a Senate horse from the Senate Stables, going about the city leaving a bagful of social communications for madam, the Senator's wife.

A list of all the Senate's employees would fill three or four of these columns. There are superintendents of document rooms and their numerous assistants, chief folders, and many helpers, chief engineers and a staff of assistants, and no end of laborers, carpenters, and machinists. Then each Senator has a clerk all to himself—a faithful servant who attends to his affairs, public or private, for $135 of government money per month. Perhaps it would not be fair to go over this list of employees and pick out by name the sons of Senators, the sons-in-law, the nephews, the cousins, and other relatives who are provided for on this pay roll, but one-third of all the employees of the Senate are relatives of the grave and reverend fathers who sit within the chamber.

Notwithstanding its dislike of newspapers, the Senate evidently believes the pen is mightier than the sword. In one day, not long since, there was purchased for its use 84,400 pens, at a cost of $226.88. This was 200 pens for each Senator and employee, but in a month or two the stock of pens had run so low that another order had to be sent to the stationers. The Senate is a famous customer of stationery, and whatever it uses must be of the best. Such items as these may be found in the Senate books: "Twenty dozen papeteries; $169.45;" "ten dozen papeteries, $81.26." Even in its inkstands the Senate is somewhat luxurious, as is shown by one of the many orders of a similar nature, this one reading: "Eight and eleven-twelfth inkstands, $119.64."

The Senate is a place in which many cards are used. One of the Senate employees testifies: "The wives and daughters of the Senators send to us the orders for their calling cards, and we give the order to the engraver and pay for it out of the Senate funds, charging the cost of the cards to the stationery account of the Senators. A few years ago we had printed at one order 3000 cards for the family of a certain Senator, with five engraved plates."

In the stationer's account, we find many such entries as this: "10 doz. card cases, $165.45." Nice pocket-books are also affected by the millionaire club, as such entries as the following would indicate: "5 doz. pocketbooks, $108.75." Pocket knives are likewise popular and expensive, per such entries as: "19½ doz. pocket knives, $336.06;" "17½ doz. pocket knives, $268.11;" and "14½ doz. Wostenholm penknives, $548.49." The Senate appears to be an industrious user of shears, for we notice many such entries as these on the account books: "8 doz. pairs of shears, $61.20;" "9½ doz. pairs of scissors, $58.31;" and "50 cases scissors, $158.64." Or do the shears and scissors, like the cards and card cases, find their way to the homes of senators?

Here are some entries in the account which will explain themselves.

8½ doz. corkscrews.....	$20 65
2 doz. apollinaris.....	3 00
1 box lemons.....	6 65
1 case apollinaris.....	11 50
50 pounds granulated sugar.....	3 75
100 2-grain quinine pills.....	75
100 3-grain quinine pills.....	1 00

The books show that during the months of July and August, 1888, when Congress was in session, the lemons, sugar and apollinaris used by the Senate cost the government of the United States $482.42. The ice used the same months cost $990. It thus appears that it costs money to keep the Senate cool.

An interesting item is the following: Isaac Bissett, for 5 pounds Copenhagen snuff, for use in Senate chamber, $5.50.

In a month the Senate uses about four hundred dozen towels, the washing of which costs the government $200.

Here are some more entries which explain themselves:

Three doz. French soap, $950; sponges, $110; 6 gallons bay rum, $16.50; 3 gallons cologne, $21; 6 bottles hair oil, $2.40; 6 bottles hair tonic, $14.40.

Of such items there are scores.

When the Senate buys thermometers it buys none but the best, as the books show: "Aug. 10—1 thermometer, $15; 3 thermometers, $15; 2 thermometers, $6."

When the Senate has a funeral to attend, it goes in style. For the funeral of General Sherman, ten pairs of silk gloves were purchased at $2 a pair, and nine sashes at $7 each.

When the Senate buys furniture, either for the chamber or for the luxurious committee rooms, it makes money fly. Here are a few items in that line, taken from hundreds: Wilton carpet for committee on public lands, $370; three pairs lace curtains for committee on manufactures (a committee that has not had a meeting for three years), $97.50; Turcoman cushion, same committee, $40; walnut lounge, committee on enrolled bills, $70; antique oak desk, committee on centennial, $60; walnut desk, committee on labor, $65; one Japanese screen, committee on agriculture, $35; four chairs, committee on agriculture, $40; twenty-one yards carpet, committee on interstate commerce, $187.

Evidently the committee on agriculture intends to have something nice for the horny-handed son of toil to sit on when he comes before the committee to tell why he has to burn his corn for fuel out on the prairies, or why he cannot lift the mortgage off his place down in New England.

To wind and clean the Senate clocks costs the government about five hundred dollars a year. Even street-car tickets are purchased at the government expense for the use of the Senate. During the last year the Senate has bought a score of type-writers, at a cost of nearly $3000.

It will be noticed that the Senate has a way of making the government pay for nearly everything which a Senator needs or uses. The government must even help him re-elect himself, and defray the expenses incurred by him in cultivating popularity among his constituents. During the five months preceding the last presidential election, Senators sent out, at the expense of the government, nine millions of their speeches. The government printed the speeches at bare cost, in the first place, and then it had to pay men at a dollar a thousand to fold them, buy the envelopes or other wrappers, and finally carry the many tons of stuff through the mails free of charge. During these five months the government purchased for use in sending out the more or less valuable speeches of more or less famous statesmen, no fewer than eight million envelopes, at a cost of about sixteen thousand dollars, and to prepare this enormous mass of stuff for the mails, seven barrels of paste and four barrels of flour for use in making paste were purchased.

Ten or twenty years hence, probably, the incidental expenses of the Senate will show items of house rent for each of the members of that august body, horses, carriages, and grocery bills. The tendency is now in that direction—Weekly Star.

HE COMETH NOT.

The Catholic Apostolic church is one of the religious organizations in this city which has remained obscure, and its regular service, which was held last evening in "an upper chamber" at 741 Natoma street, says the Chronicle of July 9, was one of those in contrast with the worship supposed to ascend from rich chancel and frescoed naves. Five men of righteous mein, twelve silent ladies of all ages, and three or four children who supposed that everything was all right, were gathered in a neatly furnished little parlor of an up-stairs flat on the side street, and the boards of an extension table combined with chairs were used as benches. Four tallow candles on the family organ, just beyond the folding doors, gave an attractive suggestion of religious symbolism, and when the young lady touched the keys and a few fervent voices rose, a familiar hymn filled the room with its melody.

H. W. Wood, the evangelist, who is the resident leader of the little organization, rose behind a little stand in one corner, and talked for three-quarters of an hour without eloquence or learning, but mentioning incidentally at times some of the beliefs peculiar to the church. Redemption became the preacher's theme for a few moments and a very practical observation followed.

"Then the serpent came," said he. "He tempted the woman first because she was the weakest, and came while the man was away, which was very contemptible. The serpent does the same thing to-day. Many a weak woman gets into trouble because she is tempted when her husband is away."

This church was organized in 1835, when twelve apostles were believed to have been "restored," with powers equal to the original twelve. Only one, Apostle Woodhouse, of London, survives. The church expects Christ very soon, but fixes no date.

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

Minister and Maiden.

We understand, says the Cottonwood Register, and it is alleged upon what we deem good authority, that recently, at a protracted Methodist meeting at Ono, wherein Rev. Shibrow, presiding elder of the conference, residence Chico, assisted by Rev. Dr. Dillard, pastor of Ono district, were preaching to the multitude, and endeavoring to have the sinners accept the faith that they might seek the forgiveness and blessings of the meek and lowly Nazarene, the elder requested that all who desired to be saved "arise and come forward." Several parties did so, among the number a comely maiden of the not far distant "Western Antipodes," who had been affected by the eloquence and earnestness of the minister's speech. The good Mr. Shibrow was so zealous in behalf of the young seeker of religion that he put his arms around her and whispered words of consolation and religion; in fact, so earnest was he in his goodness that he did not discover the male cousin of the young lady, who came up in the rear, and in a stern, not-to-be-misunderstood voice, said: "This is a h—l of a way," and taking his cousin from the house of worship, marched her home. It is said that the consternation reigned, much to the chagrin and indignation of the elder, and that many left the place in disgust. It is not necessary to state that there is at least one who will not again seek religion at the hands of Mr. Shibrow, who, for aught we know, may have been sincere, but there are others in attendance who thought he was rather familiar on that particular occasion, when naught but propriety should have been indulged in.

Shouldn't Wait.

Little Johnny (to his father)—I told ma what you said to our Sunday-school class to-day about knowing everything in the next world after we are dead.

Pa (uneasily)—What did she say?

Johnny—She said she wished you would try and know a little of this world while you are alive.

'Tis Often Thus.

"Onward and Upward" will be the maxim of the new paper, said the editor, proudly. And it proved a happy maxim, too. For three short months the paper went onward, and then it went upward.

The Hardy Lover.

She jilted him. The doctors said
He'd never survive the shock;
Yet next day he got out of bed
And put the ring in hock.

A ST. PETERSBURG doctor is stopped late at night by a policeman, who asks why he is out so late. "To attend Mr. Popoff, who was taken suddenly ill." "Did he have a permit to be taken suddenly ill?" "No." "Then you will have to go to prison."

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
BY FREDERICK MACDONALD.

404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

The Humboldt Library—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words. Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geographical Sketches. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
39. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
45. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
46. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. Illusions. James Sully.
57. The Origin of Species. Two Double Numbers. Charles Darwin. 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10 c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archaeology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
77. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
78. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
82. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
84. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
85. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
86. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
87. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
88. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
89. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
90. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
91. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen.
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No., 30c.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Taing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

Letter-heads,

Bill-heads,

Programmes,

Envelopes,

Business Cards,

Postal Cards,

Tickets,

Placards,

Receipts,

Posters,

Dodgers,

Circulars,

Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address: Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology. BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

In Spite of the Funny Man.

Theater hats aren't always high,
In spite of the funny man;
And hayseed chaps are sometimes fly,
In spite of the funny man.
Her father's dog's not always wild;
Sometimes you find a well-bred child;
And mothers-in-law are sometimes mild,
In spite of the funny man.

Prohibitionists don't always yearn to drink,
In spite of the funny man.
And the dude occasionally thinks a think,
In spite of the funny man.
Chicago feet aren't huge at all;
The plumber's bill is sometimes small,
And messenger boys don't always crawl,
In spite of the funny man.

The poets don't have to live on air,
In spite of the funny man.
Those front-row men sometimes have hair,
In spite of the funny man.
Sometimes a brand-new joke is sprung;
Sometimes the ballet girl is young;
And sometimes wives are not all tongue,
In spite of the funny man.

Society girls at balls wear clothes,
In spite of the funny man.
Sometimes a man pays what he owes,
In spite of the funny man.
Sometimes the type-writer's plain in face;
Sometimes the church deacon's not at the race;
In fact this world's quite a decent place,
In spite of the funny man.

A Discouraged Enumerator.

A dusty, weary, and foot-sore census-taker rang the door-bell of a house on Fortieth street late yesterday afternoon.

"I am tired. I am not used to walking," he said to the man who opened the door. "I am taking the census of this part of the city, and will have to trouble you for a chair to sit in while I ask you the questions. Thank you. Your name, please?"

"Sforvinstivos Brutkiewicz."

"What?"

"Sforvinstivos Brutkiewicz."

"Have you a large family?"

"Fifteen of us, altermegadder."

The census-taker turned pale, looked at his watch, closed his book, got up, put on his hat, went slowly down and out, boarded the first street-car going northward, and wrote out his resignation as soon as he got home.

"I am a man not easily discouraged, Caroline," he said to his wife, "but I've concluded there's no money in taking the census at two cents a family."—Chicago Tribune.

Unknown to the Business World.

"Oh, Mr. Smith, help me out," exclaimed a young lady at a church fair. "I sold a tidy for $15 that cost only 15 cents. What percentage is the profit?" "Percentage, madam," cried the lawyer, with merriment. "That transaction is beyond percentage; it is simple larceny."

Self-Defense.

Colonel Yerger—Is your clergyman going to take a vacation this summer?

Judge Peterby—Yes; we raised a purse for him without any trouble. If we hadn't he would have kept right on preaching all through July and August.

A THOUGHTLESS YES.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Price, 50 c. Address Freethought 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents. Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

THE Wilson Cancer Hospital,

OAKLAND, CAL.

Established in 1886.

Drs. G. H. and M. D. STOCKHAM,

The only Institution for the especial treatment of Cancer, and other humors, on the Pacific Coast. Address as above to 765 Thirteenth Street.

A pamphlet on "The Causes and Treatment of Cancers," containing epitomy of the treatment will be sent on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps by the above, or at this office. 4t29

Strong in Death.

Said the doctor, as sadly he took his stand
By the editor's dying bed,
"He's nearing the happy, happy land—
One minute and he'll be dead!
He is going away to that better clime,
Where he'll meet with the rest of his tribe;
Ah! weep, good friends, for now is the time!"—
Gasped the editor—"To subscribe!"

An Editorial Incident.

The editor of this paper, says the San Joaquin Valley Argus, while feeding his horse this morning stuck a tine of a pitchfork into the calf of his leg, making a painful wound but not a dangerous one.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."
—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."
—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."
—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."
—Boston Investigator.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.
PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD and ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less.

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm, large profits, quick sale, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. Janes.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

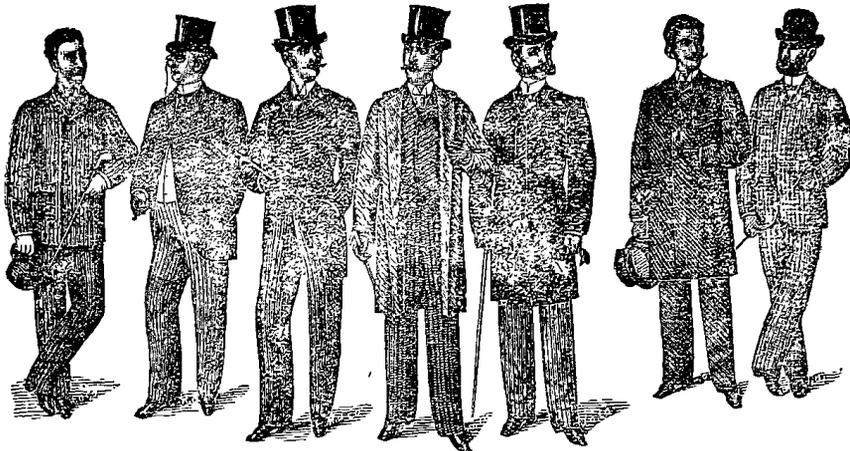

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

Works by Alexander Bain.
English Composition and Rhetoric.....	$1.75
Education as a Science.....	1.75
Works by Charles Darwin.
Origin of Species, 2 vols.....	$4.00
Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....	2.00
Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin, 2 vols.....	4.50
Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....	2.00
Works by J. W. Draper.
History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....	$1.75
Works by Ernst Haeckel.
The History of Creation, 2 vols.....	$5.00
Works by Huxley.
Lay Sermons.....	$1.75
The Advance of Science.....	.25
American Addresses.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin.....	.50
The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.00
Works by John Stewart Mill.
Principles of Political Economy, 2 vols.....	$4.00
On Liberty.....	1.25
Works by Richard A. Proctor.
Other Worlds than Ours.....	$1.75
Our Place among Infinities.....	1.75
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.75
The Moon.....	2.00
Works by Herbert Spencer.
Studies of Sociology.....	$1.50
Man versus the State.....	.30
First Principles.....	2.00
Principles of Biology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Principles of Sociology, 2 vols.....	4.00
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.00
Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....	2.00
Education.....	1.25
Organic Evolution.....	.75
Works by Andrew D. White.
Paper-Money Inflation in France.....	$.50
The Warfare of Science.....	1.00
Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
Body and Mind.....	$1.50
Responsibility in Mental Disease.....	1.50
Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
Handbook of Household Science.....	$1.75
Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....	1.75
MISCELLANEOUS.
By Carl Marx.
Capital.....	$3.00
By Asa Gray.
Darwiniana.....	$2.00
By L. L. McLaughlin.
Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....	$3.50
By John B. Henck.
Field-Book for Railroad Engineers.....	$2.50
By C. Marcel.
Study of Languages.....	$1.25
By Lester F. Ward.
Dynamic Sociology, 2 vols.....	$5.00
By Frederick Overman.
A Treatise on Metallurgy.....	$5.00
B. F. G. Fairfield.
Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....	$1.25
By W. B. Carpenter.
Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....	$1.25
By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
Evolution.....	$1.50
By Sir John Lubbock.
Origin of Civilization.....	$5.00
By Charles A. Abbott.
A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....	$1.50
By Garrett P. Serviss.
Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....	$1.50
By Nathan Sheppard.
Darwinism Stated by Darwin Himself.....	$1.50
English as She is Spoke.....	$.30
English as She is Wrote.....	.30
Thos. Carlyle—His Life, Books, Theories.....	.30
Comedies for Amateur Acting.....	.30
The Distracted Young Preacher.....	.25
Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR..... $25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.
 TAILOR,
 —101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK

OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
 By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1 25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5.....	6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....	$1.50
Six Months.....	.75
Three Months.....	.50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth $1.50.

== NOW READY ==

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

FOR—
RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,
Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica,
Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all
Kidney, Liver, and Stomach
Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.
Sole Proprietor and
C.H. WEBB, Manufacturer, No. 40
O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.
NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely.

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H. Webb's Hæmony.

- Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S.F.
- Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres Sather Banking Co S.F.
- Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
- S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco
- Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
- John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S.F.
- James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1.
- Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
- Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed and shipped by Express to all parts of the world. Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells, Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

Best Place to Draw It.

A lawyer gave a dinner party, after which the gentlemen retired to smoke and chat. All at once he got up, took down a sword which formed part of a trophy, and, brandishing it in the air, exclaimed:

"Ah, gentleman, I shall never forget the day when I drew this blade for the first time!"

"Pray, where did you draw it?" said an inquiring guest.

"At a raffish," was the lawyer's rejoinder.

Belonged to the Farmers' Alliance.

Washington correspondent (to visitor from Kansas)—I understand you are in Washington in connection with a movement to—

Stranger (with an air of mystery, interrupting)—No' sir, I cannot be interviewed. I'm here on business of importance, and I've got to finish it and get back home in time to plant my spring hay.

Correspondent (who used to live on a farm)—Plant your spring hay? Ain't you a little off?

Stranger (indignantly)—No, sir, I'm not. I'm a member of the Farmers' Alliance of Kansas and I think I know what I'm talking about.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,
Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,
Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.
HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m. 25tf

Health AND Hygienic Works.

- Eating for Strength. By M.L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.
- How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. $1.
- Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.
- Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.
- Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer. $1
- Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M.A. Ciccolina. Ills. 50.
- Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
- Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE
Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

LIFE RENEWER

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT THIS SIGNATURE.

Dr. Pierce's Galvanic Chain Belt is guaranteed to be the latest improved perfect Body-Battery. The electricity from it can be instantly felt by the wearer.

This celebrated Instrument will cure, with out medicine; Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diseases of the Liver or Kidneys, Lame Back, Female Weakness, General Debility, Spinal Disease, Sexual Weakness, Impotency, Etc. A Suspensory for men free with every Belt. N. B. The Electricity goes directly to all Weak Parts and restores them to Health and Vigorous Strength. For particulars call or send 4 cts. in stamps for sealed Pamphlet No. 2. Address MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS CO. Y. 704 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal. If troubled with Hemorrhoids or Piles, send stamp for Pamphlet No. 3.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 30.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1890.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JULY 26, 1890

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Sunday morning, July 6, with Wagner's gentle steed to bear me on, I set forth from Rye Hollow on my pilgrimage to Mitchell. It was a wild and lonely scene that presented itself to my view. I went for miles without seeing a house or any other sign of a human being, except the traveled road. I was to keep the "traveled road," but it grew so faint at times that I could scarcely judge which was the right way, and it was the easiest thing in the world to be lost amidst these endless hills. I might drift for miles over the billowy landscape and find no home or man from which information might proceed. I lost my bearing at one time and knew I was wrong, and how to get right was the question, with neither a guide-post nor an angel to point the way. Fortunately, in the far distance, I beheld a wandering cow-boy. I shouted at the top of my voice for directions to Mitchell. He pointed in an exactly opposite direction to what I was pursuing; I was to "go through a gate and keep alongside the fence." I obeyed the instructions, and pushing on came to Fophana's Ranch, and here I received precise directions as to the course, and thereafter I went on my way rejoicing, as happy as Bunyan's pilgrim when he saw the "Delectable Mountains." It was a bright and beautiful day, and the solitary ride was entrancing. Over the sky was a splendid retinue of clouds which kept the sun from being too oppressive. Scenes of loveliness mingled with scenes of wild and desolate grandeur. Occasionally I passed smiling harvest fields and homes with green trees about them, while along the horizon the mountains towered in every variety of form. I am five thousand feet above the level of the sea. Gradually I leave the broad table lands and plunge into a winding canyon. Just about noon, all at once, I see Mitchell, its houses huddled together at the foot of Rocky Butte. It seemed like a "Deserted Village." Not a single inhabitant was visible as I passed over the brook by the grist-mill. Was there anybody here, I wondered, and would there be any lecture in this far away corner of the world, where it seems as if humanity might have stranded ages ago. I could almost imagine myself in one of the primeval epochs. However, on I wended, and the hotel appeared in view with two or three individuals reclining on its ample porch. I wondered who they were, and they wondered, likewise, who I was, for they were not expecting the "preacher" on horseback, or by this route. As I came nearer doubt vanished, for the genial face of A. J. Shrum, pioneer Liberal of this country, was before me. I was happy, for I was no longer "a stranger in a strange land," but among my "own folks." I descended from the saddle, although with no very great agility, for the morning's ride of more than twenty miles had not ameliorated the stiffness of my limbs. It did not take long, however, to recover my ability to walk. I had been expected the night before and there was some disappointment. Things, however, were soon under way for a lecture in the afternoon and evening. Shrum is a worker, and puts vim into Freethought wherever he is, and it is bound to go. He came from nearly thirty miles off, with all his family, to be at the lecture. He has one of the best ranches in the country, which he won right out of the heart of nature by his energy. He has brought civilization to the wilderness, and keeps up with the times although he is more than a hundred miles from the whistle of the locomotive. No shadow of superstition has ever been upon his broad acres, and his cattle and sheep have survived the hard winter because he knows how to take charge of them and does not trust in providence. So everything went off smoothly and brightly at Mitchell, and I found here a splendid element of Liberalism. Although far away among the hills, it has the life of progress, and nowhere have I enjoyed a more appreciative audience. They come from a circle of fifty miles and don't consider that anything of a journey to hear a Freethought lecture. It gives one boundless faith in humanity to have such a gathering as this on the frontier. Mrs. Shrum was present, and Miss Gertrude Shrum, who did the singing for us, and Wade and Da Shrum, the boys. Mr. Shrum used to be music teacher in the Willamette Valley, years ago, and I guess many remember him unto this day, for they used to have fine times making music from Scio round, and the soul of melody is not dead yet, and the voices of our friends cheer the campaign. Mr. and Mrs. Lee Smith were also in our ranks. Mrs. Smith is sister of Mrs. Shrum. These are daughters of Mrs. Wells, a Liberal who came fifty miles last year to attend the lectures at Fossil, and whose husband, now dead, was one of the foremost advocates of Freethought in the Willamette Valley. In the sunset of life the heart of the morning glows within her. Our bright ally, Eugene Loony, was with us side by side for work, with shoulder to the wheel. Mrs. Volney Shrum and the baby were there too; J. S. Hays, formerly of Coos county; Placodore Bravo, from the "Castles in Spain;" Fred Loony, James Oaks, Henry Stephenson, Charles Carroll, R. E. Misenor, Woods and Chamberlain, with others, made up as good a company of Freethinkers as heart could desire, and the meetings both afternoon and evening were splendidly successful. The hotel was crowded, but mine landlord, Mr. O. S. Boardman, gave hearty welcome to man and steed, for he is a Liberal. Mitchell is named after Senator Mitchell, and is getting to be quite a center of business for this country. I found it a lively point after I once got acquainted. There is an excellent school here and the people are up with the times.

I experienced the same difficulty here as at Wagner. The mail contract was let so low that no stage could run on the line from Mitchell to Prineville, and the mail had to be carried on horseback. I think Wanamaker had better quit praying and do a little watching. Uncle Sam is not so poor that he need play the Shylock in letting the mails. In a country like this contracts ought to be let to resident competitors who know what the works, what it can be done for, and who has an interest in doing it well. For the mere purpose of screwing a little money out of the contracts, outside parties, who have no regard for the convenience of the public, have bid so low that it is impossible for the mails to be properly carried, and there is confusion and uncertainty. No one knows whether he can make a point or not by the usual stage lines. It is like getting to heaven. Fortunately my good genius was with me, and although the alfalfa was ready to be cut and he could scarcely spare the time, A. J. Shrum, with his splendid team, drove me from Mitchell to Prineville, a distance of fifty-five miles, in one day. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. I had a delightful trip, far preferable to a journey by stage. We followed along Bridge Creek. In open view was Black Butte, a towering mass of desolate precipitous rock, flung there by some volcanic force. To the left, among the folding hills, was White Butte, with smooth and glistening sides, to the very top, like a pyramid, as if some master hand had chiseled its glowing pinnacle. As these drop out of sight, upon the far horizon mighty mountains appear in blue radiance. Then we plunge into the extensive forest, striking a vast spur of the Blue Range, which we slowly climb. The pine trees shoot up one and two hundred feet. Delicious green glades appear. Occasionally vast views open through the spreading canopy. The gorgeous sunlight amidst the dancing leaves is like burnished silver. Then we descend to where the Ochoco glitters. We pass the placer mines, where they are still hunting for gold, though the cabins have a somewhat abandoned look. A couple of brawny miners invite us to dinner, and the invitation would be gladly accepted but for the welfare of the horses, who need a good dinner likewise. So we go on to Thompson's, where a square meal is waiting for us, and the horses eat their grain. Refreshed, they start off on the afternoon journey of twenty-five miles, to Prineville. Following the Canyon of the Ochoco, when the sun is about half an hour high we reach the broad valley where Prineville, three thousand feet above the sea, lifts its front in the splendor of the evening. A lovely view is before us. The valley reaches to Grizzly Butte, over which Mt. Jefferson, in a lustre of clouds, shows its magnificent brow. To the left, in a mass of billowing gold and crimson, beyond the encircling "rim rock," edged with fire the Three Sisters appear, adding majesty to the beautiful picture of the valley and bluffs.

It is golden twilight when we enter Prineville, a city of about a thousand inhabitants, the county-seat of Crook county. A large territory, about one hundred and fifty miles across, makes this its business point, and it has a pretty vigorous trade. I guess, for its size, it sells more goods than any other place in Oregon. It is also about the farthest of any town from the railroad, The Dalles, the nearest point, being a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. It is two day's travel by stage, and through the roughest country on the continent. But it is a good place when you get there. The climate is fine, the scenery varied and attractive, and the soil productive. The crops are in a promising condition—wheat forty bushels to the acre in some places. A great many cattle, horses, and sheep were destroyed during the past winter, but still enough are left to stock the country well. Taking the taxable property of the country it would average $1,900 to each voter. On the whole it is a pretty wealthy district and has stood the hard times as cheerfully as any portion of the country.

The lectures were advertised to begin on Tuesday evening; but there were so many in town from distant places, who expected to leave on Tuesday, that it was thought best to have the lecture on Monday, the night of my arrival. The lectures were given at the court-house, and, although the notice was short, the house was nearly full. The attendance has increased from evening to evening. It is evident that there is a large Liberal element in this community. The Rev. Mr. Grant, Baptist clergyman of this place, was ready for a debate, and an opportunity was given him on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. There was a manifest interest in the proceedings on both sides. My opponent was gentlemanly and conducted the debate in a fair manner, although he did not stick to the question. He left the argument, and gave a sermon. In fact he rarely touched the point at issue, which was, "Is the Bible a Divine Revelation?" He admitted that he could not demonstrate the existence of God, and that the whole thing was after all a matter of faith. This enabled me to contrast Freethought with orthodoxy, and show that reason is superior to faith, and that human morality, which means universal brotherhood, is better than a "divine morality" which sanctions war, slavery, polygamy, and the murder of little children.

I have not had better audiences anywhere than in Prineville. In fact, I think I must place it in the front rank, so generous and so cheering has been the response.

C. Rogers, one of the old settlers of the coast, is a vigorous worker here. He keeps the Truth Seeker and FREETHOUGHT a-going. It was a pleasure to meet him and his family, and to partake of his hospitality.

A. L. Allen, formerly of Coos county, with whom I traveled on the Coquille, was here, from fifty miles away, with his wife. That is the kind of Freethinker to make things move. I am repaid for all my toilsome journeys to grasp the hand of a comrade like this.

Knox Huston, county surveyor, was chosen chairman of the meeting. He is a leading citizen, and a Liberal who is not afraid to stand by the colors. As an entertaining companion, with reminiscences of the frontier, he can't be beat.

Representative-elect Thos. J. Stevenson was present with his wife and children, from Mitchell. He is worthy of the honor the people have conferred upon him, both for his Liberal views and his business ability and success.

Thanks are due to Sheriff Booth and his deputy, Ed. Slayton, for kind attentions, and the Liberal spirit in which they were given.

S. R. Slayton, county commissioner, an old resident, is a cordial supporter of the movement.

I. F. Moore, attorney, is also of Coos county, and many friends in that section will remember him and be glad to know that he stands in the front rank. Among the pleasantest memories of this place is the hospitable entertainment of Mr. and Mrs. Moore.

The festive board never was more attractive with beauty and intelligence.

B. F. Nichols has always been on the frontier. The locomotive has tried to keep up with him, but couldn't. He is an independent thinker. He doesn't agree with me altogether, but he is far from the orthodox side. He has the habit of using his brains.

Comrade A. W. Powers and wife, and children, are at all the lectures, and the work of to-day is mingled with the promise of the future in the faces of happy childhood.

W. H. Rowan is on the roll of Freethought, and a better soldier will not lift the standard.

Ed. N. White, county treasurer, is also a "comrade true," and his "round table" will long be remembered for the wit, romance, music of guitar, sparkling story, and hours of mirth that soften labor and, with merry companionship, prepare for work.

J. A. Douthit, of the Ochoco Review, is a Liberal-minded editor, with ideas of his own but ready to give a fair field to all sides. His reports of the lectures and debate were fearless and impartial.

I. L. Lucky, whose brothers, of Eugene City, are on the Liberal roll, keeps the family name on the banner here. I guess all who have the Lucky blood are born to be Freethinkers.

I am "chumming" with P. B. Davis and I am well taken care of, whatever may be the blows of fate. Davis is a Liberal of the broadest kind. He takes in Spiritualism in a wise sort of fashion, which don't diminish his interest in the progress of this world. He is a striking exponent of Western life. He left home in Iowa when fourteen years of age and has made his own way by hard work and self-reliance; and that kind of a career doesn't make much for the orthodox faith. With all the ups and downs of this present campaign, I must confess that with a chum like Davis I can stand anything and keep off ill fortune with a cheerful spirit. Davis will feed, clothe, and give you half his bed to sleep on if necessary, and in the present case I have had to depend on his generosity.

I have just heard that my baggage, wherein are all my worldly goods, is now stranded at Hay Creek, twenty-five miles off—the stage en route breaking down at that point. It seems as if I were destined to live and dress "on faith" for the rest of my trip. I should like to hire a praying machine in order to express my sentiments. I have a journey of one hundred and twenty miles on horseback before me because of the lack of stage accommodations, and this because the mail contracts are let to speculative bidders. This is the hardest luck I have struck yet. If I could get somebody to knock me into the "middle of next week" I should escape a great deal of weariness.

I give my closing lecture to-night, Sunday, July 13, making seven lectures in all at this point.

I have the pleasure to report that A. C. Palmer, postmaster, and C. M. Crane are on the Freethought roll. Also C. D. Hardesty, of Parlina, who came sixty-five miles to attend the lectures. This is a "specimen brick" of the Liberals of Crook county.

Henry Hahn, president of the bank, is among our generous supporters, Liberal in all things, and it was a pleasure to meet him. J. H. Templeton, J. A. Campbell—who couldn't come, but was on hand in spirit and pocket—J. N. Blair, P. B. Howard, I. Sichel, D. F. Stewart, W. H. Fuller, John Van Houten; all have helped in cordial manner to make the days bright with good-fellowship, so that the sunshine far exceeds the shadow, and my memories of Prineville are among the most delightful of my far wandering pilgrimage. It is proposed that I return here a year from next September, when there will be a bigger campaign than ever and the colors will fly for a hundred miles about. We can make rainbows as well as the "deity." S. P. PUTNAM.

MEDIUM REID'S CASE.

The Sacramento "Daily Record-Union," in a forcible article condemning the trial and conviction of Medium Reid, of Grand Rapids, Mich., criticises very severely the action of the judge in refusing to allow Reid to demonstrate his ability to read sealed letters without opening them. The "Record-Union" says:

"Suppose a priest had been before the court on the charge of defrauding, in accepting alms for the church, in payment for services at the altar in offer of prayers for mitigation of the pains of purgatory visited upon the souls of the dead. Should not the court with just as much of reason hold the claim that such prayers are efficacious is fraudulent, because of the supernatural idea? Has there ever been given any proof, acceptable in a court of justice, that such results follow as are claimed for the offering of such prayers? Yet if the priest offered to introduce testimony to convince the jury of the genuineness of his claim, would it not be his right to do so?"

That is the point always maintained by FREETHOUGHT—that Reid had as good a right to humbug people as had priests. It is not a question whether or not Reid could get communications from the spirit world, or whether a priest's prayers can mitigate the pains of any alleged purgatory. The question is whether both do not stand on exactly equal ground, and whether one has not the same rights as the other before the law.

But there is a different statement of Reid's case which puts him in a more unfavorable light. According to a paper called "Christna," whose editor, Mr. Vincent, first called the attention of the postal authorities to Medium Reid, the latter gave nothing, either genuine or fraudulent, for the money which he received. Mr. Vincent states, whether truthfully or not we are unable to say, that Reid's mediumship was not on trial. He was charged with receiving money under agreement to return to the sender thereof some kind of a communication, instead of which he pocketed the money and returned nothing. Even if this is true, the parallel with the priest still holds good, for the person paying for masses has no way of knowing whether the masses paid for are said as agreed or not.

The whole proceeding is too contemptible to occupy the attention of a court of justice. Supposing Reid advertised himself as a spirit postmaster. Nobody who did not believe in spirit communication would patronize him. All Spiritualists are intelligent enough to know that some mediums are fraudulent, and that they run the risk of being swindled in sending money to strange ones. And if they are swindled they have no one to censure but themselves. They can console themselves with the thought fools and their money have been speedily sundered for several thousand years, and that all valuable experience costs something. The person who buys a lottery ticket, stakes money on a horserace or a prize-fight, consults a fortune-teller or a medium, or bets on some other man's game, knows that the chances of getting a satisfactory return for the outlay are very slim. Lotteries are mostly swindles, races are "thrown," fights are "faked," fortune-tellers are crafty, mediums are imaginative to say the least, and professional sharpers have a "sure thing" when dealing with the uninitiated. All people of intelligence know this, and they deserve little sympathy if, in attempting to get something for nothing, they are disappointed. The loser in such cases is for the time being as culpable as the winner, since he must know that if he wins he will get more than he pays for. Nearly all mediums testify that they are consulted mainly for purposes of gain. The sitter expects to have a valuable mine located, or to receive some "pointer" whereby he may get the advantage of somebody else, or to learn how stocks are going, or what number of the Louisiana lottery will "draw." It is not a legitimate method of doing business, and those who get left, and nearly everybody does, should take the consequences without asking others to share them or to redress their grievances.

It is to be observed that in these games of chance the priests have the advantage, since, as in life insurance, the player must die to win.

"FREETHOUGHT" AS A LIAR.

The appended communication to the Kaweah "Commonwealth" will be seen to refer to matters discussed to some extent in these columns:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., July 3, 1890.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE SAN FRANCISCO NATIONALIST CLUB, }
106 McALLISTER STREET.

To the Officers and Members of Kaweah Colony:

DEAR COMRADES: I am especially instructed by a unanimous vote at a fully attended meeting of this club, held this evening, to notify you of the following facts:

First, That three weeks ago charges were made that affected the financial integrity of Thos. G. Ashton, our financial secretary, and against Burnette G. Haskell, charging him with usurpation of power, and of having made false statements to the club.

Second, Two committees were appointed by us, one of them upon finance, and the other to deal with the charges generally.

Third, Said committees reported to-night. The finance committee found that the charges against Mr. Ashton were entirely without foundation and it appears, instead, that the club is really indebted to him for cash advanced.

Fourth, The committee reported that the charges against Mr. Haskell were entirely unfounded, and that no foundation ever existed on which they could be based.

Fifth, The reports of the committees were adopted and approved unanimously.

Sixth, Mr. Otto Sinz who made the charges was then expelled by unanimous vote and escorted to the door by vote of the club. The corresponding secretary was instructed to notify these facts to you.

Seventh, A committee of three was appointed to visit the editor of FREETHOUGHT, which had published in its issue of the 28th of June a false and scandalous and libelous article concerning Mr. Haskell and demand its retraction.

Eighth, I am further instructed by the club to inform you that Mr. Haskell was never accused by anybody of any financial irregularities; that no committee ever reported that he was short in his accounts, and that the whole paragraph in FREETHOUGHT is a malicious Lie.

Ninth, The matter of fact is, that the club owes Mr. Haskell nearly $700 instead of he owing it a cent.

Tenth, It appearing that enemies of Nationalists have sent to Kaweah Colony marked copies of the published libel, the club earnestly requests that this reply thereto be given the widest publicity.

The club has the fullest confidence in and the warmest friendship possible toward Mr. Haskell.

This letter is official by order of the club.

MATE A. HILDEBRAND,

Cor. Sec. San Francisco National Club, 609 Polk street.

We do not care to prolong this painful subject, but as the foregoing letter, or a similar one, has been published in other papers it is right that the matter should be fully understood. Here is the paragraph complained of, the various statements in which we have numbered for more convenient reference:

(1) It is feared that the Nationalist club of San Francisco will hold no more receptions. (2) At a business meeting last week a committee appointed to examine the books of the club reported (3) a shortage in the accounts of the financial secretary and (4) charged Mr. Haskell with embezzlement. (5) The organization is deeply in debt, (6) the president, Mrs. Addie L. Ballou, contemplates resigning, and scandalous revelations are foreshadowed. (7) The business meeting broke up in a violent row.

(1) The club has held no reception to our knowledge since the above occurrence.

(2) Otto Sinz, who made the charges, was a member of the Finance Committee, and as such examined the books.

(3) Mr. Sinz charged the financial secretary with embezzlement.

(4) He charged Mr. Haskell with making false entries and misappropriating funds.

(5) "Deeply in debt" is a relative term; but the organization owes Mr. Haskell about $700 and Mr. Ashton about $30, and has small assets. We are also informed that it owes the proprietor of Metropolitan Temple for the use of the hall.

(6) The president, Mrs. Ballou told our informant that she was ready to resign. She has attended no meetings of the club between the time the statement was made and the time of this writing.

(7) Whether or not "the meeting broke up in a violent row" must remain a question of veracity between those who think it did and those who think it did not.

If the paragraph in FREETHOUGHT is a "lie" it is a lie that fits the facts remarkably well. We deny in toto the charge of malice. FREETHOUGHT has not said that Mr. Ashton embezzled or that Mr. Haskell misappropriated the funds of the club; but reported as a matter of news in which many readers are interested, the facts as furnished. That charges were made, and that the paragraph was justified by occurrences, is shown by the arrest of Mr. Sinz. The matter now being in the hands of the court, further discussion would be premature.

SUNDAY AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The resolution of the World's Fair Committee to keep the exhibition open on Sunday is a step gained for Liberalism and Freethought. And not only for these, but for science and progress. As might be expected, therefore, the clergy are already up in arms against the innovation. Indeed, before the question of opening on Sunday had been raised, they took time by the forelock and several months ago registered their protest against it. Again last Sunday, in Chicago, the ministers held a meeting in Farwell Hall, and by a rising vote adopted resolutions that the legislature about to meet in special session be earnestly requested to see to it that the Exposition be closed on the first day of the week. The resolutions declare that "the injury to city, state, and nation of an open European Sabbath cannot be estimated, and that the American institution of a quiet Sabbath must not be trampled in the dust." Proceeding, these religionists announce that the example set by the United States at Philadelphia in 1876 and Paris in 1889 should be continued, and they "deem it just to the working people of the world, and especially to those of our nation, that this most precious boon of a rest day be saved for them."

The example of Philadelphia, that is, the Centennial exposition, is not one to be followed, as the puritanical Sunday there enforced excited the astonishment and ridicule of half the foreign nations. And the action of our exhibitors at Paris, who insisted upon having their meagre exhibits covered on Sunday while those of other nationalities were left open to the inspection of visitors, added all that was necessary to make America's part in that exposition appear wholly contemptible. Neither American enterprise nor American liberty was fairly represented in Paris in 1889.

The declaration that Sunday must be saved for the working people expresses exactly what the framers of the resolutions in question did not mean. Sunday can be saved for workers only by devoting it to that recreation and liberty which the Sabbatarians deny. To shut them out of the exposition on Sunday will not be giving them the day, but robbing them of it. Of course it is to the ministers', especially the Chicago ministers', advantage to have the doors to everything shut except those leading into the churches. They want to get the people and the visitors where they can preach to them; and bracing up for the occasion, they will be prepared, during the fair, to astonish not only the natives but such foreigners as may be unfortunate enough to stroll into their various sanctuaries. The course of the Fair Committee threatens them with disappointment, but it is to be hoped that the members of the committee will stand by their resolution, so that the Liberals of the country may be able to point to one step which their principles have taken in advance since 1876.

FREETHOUGHT notes "with regret" that the recent Sixteenth Annual Commencement exercises of the San Jose High School were opened with prayer. What a "red rag" prayer is to the average Materialist, or in fact the expression of anything indicative of the spiritual nature of man! It may not be wise to offer prayer to a personal God, as a subject would supplicatingly appeal to a king upon his throne; but an expression of out-reaching aspiration for something higher and better than one's imperfect self—for an inflowing of a prompting to a truer and purer life—we cannot understand what there is in this kind of prayer that even a "Freethinker" should "regret."—Golden Gate.

It is not the prayer, especially, that FREETHOUGHT objects to, though prayers are little else than superstitious incantations. What we protest against is the introduction of prayers and other religious ceremonies in the public schools. The clergyman in his pulpit, the devotee anywhere, and Brother Owen in his sanctuary, may pray or "aspire" to their heart's content, but that is not what schools are for.

THE Secular Pilgrim finds occasionally a clergyman who will take up the cudgels for the Bible. The Ochoco, Or., "Review" of July 12, reports: "On Monday evening S. P. Putnam, of San Francisco, began a series of lectures here that has been continued throughout the week, with the exception of Wednesday and Thursday evenings, which were devoted to a joint discussion between Mr. Putnam and the Rev. J. H. Grant, on the subject, 'Is the Bible a Divine Revelation from God?' Mr. Grant taking the affirmative and Mr. Putnam the negative. The subject was ably handled by both gentlemen. Mr. Putnam is a forcible, logical reasoner, courteous to all opponents and liberal to a fault to those who may differ with him in matters of opinion, and his lectures are listened to with the utmost attention by the large audiences that attend each evening."

THE English press seems to be no fairer toward Bradlaugh than American papers are toward the reformers here. In his "Parliamentary Jottings," July 6, Mr. Bradlaugh says: "The London papers deem it necessary to so suppress all that I do and say in the House of Commons, that I must, in justice to myself, ask my friends to circulate these jottings as widely as possible. My work in the House is made rather difficult by the fact that on the one hand there is, by the Socialists, the grossest misrepresentation of what I really do, and on the other, scarcely any report of my questions or speeches appears in any of the Liberal papers."

FATHER LAMBERT, the priest who gained notoriety by his "Notes on Ingersoll," may now believe that there is something in religious freedom. According to Dr. McGlynn, Lambert was censured by his superior, and upon appeal to the propaganda the sentence of the archbishop was approved, new indignities were heaped upon him, and he wishes he had never appealed to the tribunal. With Burtzell, McGlynn, and Lambert tugging at their bonds, it looks as if even priests were at last learning that the ecclesiastical collar is not compatible with American citizenship.

DR. MCGLYNN, the eliminated priest, will lecture in San Francisco. The doctor still announces himself a Catholic, though not a papist, but he should know that Catholicism without the pope is like the Harrison administration without Wanamaker. News comes from Rome that Dr. McGlynn will not be received back into the church. However, as the church does not want him, and as he does not want the church, this arrangement is doubtless satisfactory to all parties.

THE following contributions to the Freethought Society have been left at this office: Frank Butler, $1; W. H. Eastman, $1; C. E. Spofford, 50 cents; Mrs. Hakius, $1; John Beaumont, $1; A friend, 50 cents; Joseph Larsen, $1; Mr. Sullivan, 50 cents; F. Luce, 50 cents. There are still a few dollars due the treasurer, which members are cordially invited to contribute at their convenience. Funds will be received and acknowledged at this office.

WE publish this week the first part of Dr. Jerome A. Anderson's "Scientific Evidence of the Existence of the Soul," and bespeak for it a careful and candid perusal. Dr. Anderson is eminent in his profession, a superior scholar, and admittedly scientific in his knowledge of material things. It is doubtful if any more thorough statement than his has ever been made on the affirmative side of the proposition with which he deals.

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND has assured an Associated Press reporter that the Catholic church does not contemplate a union of church and state, and doubtless he is correct. What the church desires is to make the state the servant of the church. It wants to control the schools of the country and to have the state pay the expense. It is not a union where there is supremacy on one side and subserviency on the other.

BELL has gone lecturing in the upper country, and his address until further notice will be 100 South First street, Portland, Or. The Liberals of the northwest should cultivate Bell. He will give them what they want in the line of Freethought lectures, and they will find him a genial companion, full of new thoughts that will set them to cogitating on various subjects.

THE farce of taking the census on this coast is to be repeated; that is, Superintendent Porter has ordered a new count. In what respect it will be more trustworthy than the previous one we are not informed, but perhaps Mr. Porter knows. Certainly the count should be honest or it has no value.

DR. HARCOURT, of the Howard street Methodist church, has announced himself a believer in the substitution of cremation for the present form of burial. The Catholic church will soon remain the last enemy of this civilized method of disposing of dead bodies.

WILL our city readers help FREETHOUGHT by sending us the names of Liberals in business in San Francisco who might desire to place their advertisements in this paper? There are doubtless many such.

OBSERVATIONS.

The original Pacific Nationalist Club is holding regular meetings at 909½ Market street, and last Sunday evening the ex-Rev. J. E. Higgins lectured on "Poverty: Its Cause and Cure." This is the club of which Mr. C. F. Burgman, the philosophical tailor, was formerly president. Last Monday I saw Mr. Burgman and asked him if he had attended the meeting and learned how poverty could be caused and cured. He said, "No: I have resigned the presidency of the club. For the past ten years," he continued, reminiscently, "I have devoted much of my time to the solution of that great problem. I have investigated Anarchism, Socialism, Communism, Nationalism, and other isms."

"Did you find in any of these isms a specific calculated, when judiciously applied, to produce the desired result?" I asked, speaking with unusual grammatical accuracy.

"Yes," said Mr. Burgman, "I have struck one ism that contains more promise than I can see in all the rest."

"And that is—"

"Tailorism. It is the only ism that ever contributed a nickel toward abolishing my poverty, and I am going to devote myself assiduously to developing it. If I succeed I shall then have contributed my individual share toward the general result."

In which allegory many who believe that theories will save the world may obtain a hint that practice sometimes serves as a temporary bridge over present difficulties.

BIBLE STORY.

And it came to pass as the Son of Man journeyed from the water front to the Barbary coast, he came nigh unto the house of Matthew the publican.

And being athirst he entered, and smote his stomach against the bar.

And having been served he saith unto the keeper, whose name was Matthew, Now will I cast dice with thee, that he who throweth the highest number may win; and it shall be doubles or quits, as is said amongst the sinners.

So Matthew brought dice, of the number of five, and when he had cast them thrice, behold he had five sixes.

And Matthew smiled, secretly saying unto himself, Verily the throw cannot be exceeded.

Then the Son of Man took the dice and having cast them once, lo, there were six sixes upward upon the bar.

And Matthew the publican was astonished; likewise was he wroth, and he swore an oath, saying, Get thee hence, for I will have none of thy damned miracles. And he sought to lay hands on him; but the Son of Man took counsel with himself and departed hastily, and being filled with the spirit he went on his way rejoicing.

And his fame spread abroad throughout the coast, and from that day no publican durst serve him until he had first pocketed the dinero.

N. F. Ravlin, ex-reverend, who has been lecturing for some time at San Hosay, and whose addresses have been frequently forwarded to this office by Mr. L. R. Titus, is now speaking for the Society of Progressive Spiritualists at Washington Hall, in San Francisco. I heard him last Sunday evening for the first time. Mr. Ravlin is an older man than I had judged him to be, having a gray moustache and a bald spot on the back of his head. He is also rubicund, yet eloquent. He has a nervous and impatient way of stepping about the platform, as though he thought his audience ought to know beforehand what he is about to tell them. I have heard the word querulous somewhere, and without stopping to look up its exact definition I should say that it describes Mr. Ravlin's manner at the opening of the discourse. That, however, soon passes off, and as the perspiration gathers upon his brow he gets more flexible, and makes good speed. He was talking about harmony among Spiritualists, and union between them and Freethinkers. He remarked at the outset that there was nothing in common between Spiritualists and Materialists except opposition to ecclesiastical aggression. He could see signs of a growing tendency toward union of church and state, to resist which it would be necessary for Spiritualists and Freethinkers to unite; but beyond their common interest in the welfare of humanity their ways diverged and their philosophies led them asunder. But Mr. Ravlin also noted divergence between Spiritualists. There were partisans of the many phases of mediumship. Some Spiritualists cared more for the phenomena than for the philosophy, which tendency he deprecated. Spiritualists should spend less money on mediums and more on the expounders of Spiritual truth. Phenomena were on the gross material plane, while the philosophy expanded the soul and promoted spiritual development. Mr. Ravlin closed with a lofty peroration relative to the future state, the vividness of which was added to, I thought, by the lady soloist who at once seated herself at the piano, and turning a beaming face upon the audience, sang "Castles in the Air" in a melodious tone of voice.

After the song the hundred people present arose and bowed their heads while Pastor Ravlin stretched out his hands over them and pronounced the benediction, in which he expressed a desire that the love of truth, the grace of the higher life, and the fellowship and communion of the angel world might be and abide with them for an extended length of time.

Mr. Ravlin speaks again next Sunday night, and those who enjoy good strong Spiritual doctrine, instruction in righteousness, and a benediction as cordial as any to be found on the coast, can get them all for ten cents.

The "Evening Post" has moved into the old "Chronicle" building at the corner of Kearny and Bush streets. It has also adopted the "Chronicle's" old bulletin board, which formerly bore the legend, "The Chronicle has the Largest Circulation." The painter had only to obliterate "The Chronicle" and insert "The Evening Post." It now reads, "The Evening Post has the Largest Circulation." There is reason to believe that both papers employ the same liar.

Accounts of the trouble in the Nationalist camp are further confused by Miss Hildebrand's statement that Otto Sinz was escorted to the door by a vote of the club. Mr. Sinz avers, and stands by his word with Teutonic persistency, that it was the sergeant-at-arms who attended him at the time of his involuntary exit. The conflicting statements serve to show the unreliability of human testimony.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The army and navy will take part in the celebration of California's Admission Day, Sept. 9.—Mrs. Holmes, the famous novelist, is studying phases of San Francisco life in order to get material for a new story.—There will be a three weeks' camp-meeting of Spiritualists at Fruitvale station, East Oakland. It opened July 21.—The German order called Sons of Hermann held a grand Jubilee last Sunday and Monday in honor of Hermann, who, 2000 years ago, is credited with liberating the Teutons. The celebration was a great success, several thousand people being in attendance.—Joseph F. Valentine, leader of the striking ironmolders of this city, has been elected first vice-president of the Ironmolders' Union of North America.—The Prohibitionists of San Joaquin county held a convention in Stockton last Saturday and nominated a full county ticket.—I. N. Choynski, of this city, publisher of the weekly paper called "Public Opinion," was last week convicted of attempted extortion. He is at large under $5000 bail. Mr. Choynski evidently does not understand the business so well as some other publishers who have grown rich by the blackmail method.—Mayor Pond has issued an address to the citizens of San Francisco asking for contributions to the expense of representing the city and state at the World's Fair.—Seven girls have been ejected from the Young Women's Christian Home in this city for the offenses of eating in their rooms and absenting themselves from worship.

A man named Bauer, at Woodhaven, N. Y., has sued his priest, the Rev. Father Steffens, for appropriating his wife. Mrs. Bauer lives with the priest, who will not let her husband see her.—The World's Fair Committee has voted to keep the exposition at Chicago open on Sundays.—Eugene Schuyler, the American consul-general at Cairo, Egypt, died on the 18th inst.—The Rev. Geo. Lewis, a local preacher at Jamaica, N. Y., was thrashed last week on account of his marked attentions to a sixteen-year-old girl.—Big frauds have been unearthed in the census enumeration of Minneapolis, Minn. The populations of some precincts were doubled by stuffing the reports with fictitious names.

War has broken out between Guatemala and San Salvador, two states of Central America. The Guatemalans suffered the first defeat.—Bismarck differs with Emperor William on the subject of Socialism. The emperor, he says, decided to try to induce the Socialists to maintain a peaceful attitude by means of concessions, but he (Bismarck) believed in fighting them as blackmailers. The sooner they were defied the better. The time would come when Socialism would be found to be a military question, and in place of the present mild state of siege there would be a universal state of war.—Many people in Ireland are threatened with starvation on account of potato blight.—Continuous rains have discouraged English farmers. In spite of the Archbishop of Canterbury's prayers, bad weather still prevails, fields are flooded, and crops are rotting.—Sailors in the English navy have petitioned for a Methodist instead of a Church of England chaplain.—Italians are leaving their native land in great numbers. During the year 1889 nearly 175,000 Italian laborers sought homes in other countries. Of these 88,000 emigrated to the Argentine Republic, 36,000 to Brazil, and 40,000 to the United States, the remainder going chiefly to England.—Colonel Olcott has resigned the presidency of the London Theosophical Society and Mme. Blavatsky will succeed him in that office. Olcott will continue to preside over the Indian section of the society.

LITERARY NOTES.

The July-August "New Ideal" is a double number containing all the speeches and proceedings of the Free Religious Association Convention.

We have received the speeches of the Hon. John H. Mitchell and of the Hon. Francis G. Newlands on "Silver." Both favor unlimited coinage of that metal.

Lucifer Publishing Company, Valley Falls, Kansas, issue in pamphlet form Moses Harman's camp-meeting talks under the title of "Digging for Bedrock." 10 cents.

The proceedings of the late Convention of the Woman's National Liberal Union are now published in a large pamphlet, sold by Mrs. Matilda Joslyn Gage, Fayetteville, N. Y., at 50 cents per copy.

Dr. G. H. Stockham, of the Wilson Cancer Hospital advertised in FREETHOUGHT, issues a ten-cent pamphlet entitled "Cancer: Its Cause and Treatment," which, like all the doctor's writings, is full of instruction on the subject of which it treats.

Benjamin R. Tucker, who translated Tolstoi's "Kreutzer Sonata," has just published Felix Pyat's "Rag Picker of Paris." Mr. Tucker never fails to send FREETHOUGHT printed notices of his various publications, which we have faithfully reproduced, but he quite forgets to mail us the book under review.

"Practical Sanitary and Economic Cooking adapted to Persons of Moderate and Small Means," by Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel, is a prize essay on the subject of cooking. It will prove of worth to many housekeepers. Price, 40 cents; sold by the Public Health Association, P.O. drawer 289, Rochester, N. Y.

To the second edition of the pamphlet, "Robert Burns: Was He a Christian?" by Saladin, is added the same author's prize poem written for the competition in connection with the Dumfries Burns' Statue movement. Saladin makes it appear that Burns was in no sense a Christian. The poem will be deeply appreciated by Scotchmen.

"Fact and Theory Papers," Nos. I. and III., are at hand from N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette Place, New York. The former deals with "The Suppression of Consumption," and is by G. W. Hambleton, M. D.; the second with "Protoplasm and Life," by Charles F. Cox, M. A. The books are handsomely printed, and bound in limp cloth, at 40 cents each.

We have received from the News Company another lot of Lillian Leland's "Journey Around the World," making nearly a half thousand in all. Leaving out S. P. Putnam's "Religious Experience," the first edition of which is now exhausted with the exception of one hundred and twenty-five copies, Miss Leland's is the best selling book ever handled by the Freethought Publishing Company.

The address delivered by Marie Lesquoy Farrington before the Nationalist Club is published in a pamphlet, "Our Prison System, and the Need of a Free Bureau of Justice." The talented author believes that young convicts should be kept apart from old and hardened criminals, and that the proceeds of prison labor should be paid to those who perform it. The pamphlet will be forwarded upon receipt of 10 cents.

Everything that Samuel Putnam writes is exceedingly interesting and readable, and in his easy and flowing style he places pleasantly and chattily before us a feast of thought and an evoker of thought. His last work, "My Religious Experience," has been nicely printed and bound by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal., and is sent by mail upon receipt of the price, twenty-five cents.—Hastings Plaindealer.

The "Freethinkers' Magazine" for July contains as a frontispiece a good likeness of Mrs. Lucy N. Colman, whose reminiscences of slavery days are now running through the same publication. The rest of the contents are interesting as always. Mr. Green has missed it, we believe, by discontinuing the monthly contents card whereby each publication of his magazine was formerly preceded. Such a card, mailed to editors of Freethought papers, was almost sure of publication and aroused seasonable interest in the forthcoming number.

The autobiography of Gen. M. M. Trumbull, who writes over the signature of "Wheelbarrow," is the most interesting portion of a collection of "Articles and Discussions on the Labor Question" just published by the Open Court of Chicago. This is presumably because General Trumbull has a clearer understanding of himself than of the great economic questions upon which he writes. He is one of the "unlabeled" labor reformers. Neither Socialist, Anarchist, nor trades-unionist, but a free lance, he is first of all a most interesting writer, and his book is well worth a dollar, which is the publishers' price.

DONATIONS.

These additional donations have been received since the last acknowledgement. Nothing could be more gratifying than the "pocketfelt" interest evinced by these voluntary contributions to the work of FREETHOUGHT:

L Z Coman	$1.00	John Mewhinney	1.00
F Shodl	1.00	M Lueders	1.60
J A Jurgenson	80	W Jordan	1.60
Lewis Kaiser	1.00	John Engstrom	4.00
Rosa Kaiser	1.00	C Rogers	80
Jonas Meyers	1.00	S H Hazard	1.60
A H. Hoyt	1.60	R H Scott	1.60
P B Davis	80	Dr Botsford	1.60
Daniel Williams	1.60	Mrs M E Botsford	1.60
C E Spafford	1.00	J H Ostello	80
Mrs Brady	1.00	G A F de Lespinasse	3.20
C M Saunders	80	S B Jones	1.60
A Schell	8.00	N F Griswold	80.00
John Hubblel	4.00

A Reflex Reform.

Jeness Miller Magazine: If the reflex achievement of the divided skirt shall be to do away with the ungraceful and vulgar habit of crossing the legs, we shall have scored an unexpected triumph.

THE SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE OF THE EXISTENCE OF THE SOUL.

This paper is an attempt to present in as compact and brief a form as possible a resumé of facts and deductions therefrom, to be found in Du Prel's "Philosophy of the Mystic." In this work, marked throughout by evidences of profound thought and painstaking, intelligent investigation, the writer takes up the problem as to whether or not man has a higher ego, or soul, from the standpoint of pure reason, based upon biological, physiological, psychic, and scientific facts alone. There is no appeal to any religious emotionalism, nor demand that anything be accepted upon "faith" of any kind whatever. Such a work is extremely opportune, appearing, as it does, at a time when the old formulas of thought have lost their cohesive power; when the scientific world finds itself blocked by mental "no thoroughfares," and religion, so-called, confronted by problems for which it seeks in vain for a solution.

Without being definitely so arranged by the writer, the evidence of a higher ego, or soul, in man seems to naturally group itself in psychic, physiological, biological, and scientific divisions; each of necessity merging into all the others, but still, perhaps, possessing enough distinctive matter to enable a reviewer to best follow the argument along these separate lines, and which will be the method of treatment adopted in this paper.

Beginning, then, with the

PSYCHIC ARGUMENT,

we find a higher ego directly pointed at by the fact of self-consciousness. While consciousness of some degree accompanies every step of evolutionary development, in man alone it first reaches the condition of self-consciousness, or consciousness of consciousness. Man analyzes and examines his own consciousness. Now, analysis necessitates two factors—an analyzer, and a thing analyzed. Therefore, self-consciousness implies most conclusively that man has become at least dual in his nature; that something has been added above and beyond the physical consciousness which knows no "I," common to the kingdoms below him. One constituent of his being calmly steps aside and critically examines other constituents. Is the body capable of this? Can "molecular motion," the materialistic source of thought and consciousness, isolate itself, and observe the mechanical details to which it owes its own existence? Such a process is inconceivable. Only a higher ego, independent of the physical organism for any psychic or spiritual functions, satisfies the conditions of the problems of self-consciousness and self-analysis.

Further consideration shows us, also, that self-consciousness does not exhaust its peculiar and proper object, which is self. If consciousness were the product of the chemico-vital processes going on within the body, it ought, as the mere expression of this, to express it fully. It would be a simple question in mathematics—a case of two and two making four. Instead of this, our ordinary consciousness finds itself occupying a body of which it knows next to nothing. Our ordinary consciousness, take notice. That there is a higher consciousness, or ego, and that this ego is intelligently conscious of every process going on within the body, is abundantly proven by recent experiments in hypnotism. This state, in which the ordinary consciousness is suspended to a greater or lesser degree and an inner permitted to function, shows that a very illiterate, ignorant person will display a familiarity with the anatomy and physiology of his or her organism, and a recognition of diseased conditions, together with a knowledge of the remedies necessary to their alleviation or cure, far exceeding that of the most learned and experienced physician. That this information and knowledge proceeds from an inner source, and is not due to thought transference or suggestion on the part of the physician, is proven by unsuspected physical conditions thus described having been verified by post mortem. This strange phenomenon can only be accounted for by admitting to man a higher consciousness than that which functions on the ordinary or waking plane, and which consciousness can only exist as the functions of a higher ego.

All future progress implies facts which we do not now know, and these facts of necessity lie as largely in psychic as in material directions. Therefore, there is nothing improbable in the fact of a higher ego having until now eluded the grasp of scientific inquiry. Nor is there anything strange in the difficulty which this new truth finds in obtaining scientific recognition. That to which we are accustomed is "common sense," and all intellectual progress really consists in thought overcoming this common sense or tendency to mental inertia. Moreover, there is absolutely nothing impossible in nature, excepting self-evident absurdities, such as a "crooked-straight" line, for example. The hostility of science towards anything which exceeds its own crystallized formulas is one reason why so many discoveries, notably medical, are made by "unscientific" men.

Again, organism and consciousness are parallel. It is not probable that man will evolve any absolutely new psychical organ which will relate him to new phenomena of facts of nature. But this is not necessary, since those he has are capable of almost infinite expansion along lines they now subtend. And that no new physiological organs are in process of evolution points plainly to the inference that future development must be in psychic or mental directions. This will certainly be the case unless we refuse to predicate any further advance as possible to the human ego—a conclusion to which the egotism of self-satisfaction is very prone. If one wears blue "specs," all nature assumes a blue hue. Materialism has looked at the universe so long through material lenses that it has become spiritually color blind. And just here, suggested by the last thought, it would be well for Materialists who think sight mere molecular motion to explain how it is that those born blind see in somnambulism and dreams.

Materialism confounds the condition of thinking with the cause of thought; it mistakes the physical brain, which is the battery by means of which the operator beyond transmits thought messages to this physical plane, for the creator of that which it merely transmits. It is exactly the same as if a countryman were to insist that the instrument which ticks off his message was the source of the intelligence displayed. The scientific electrician would no doubt smile in a superior manner, yet the next instant himself fall into the very same error if he were called upon to receive a message over the line of which the brain is merely a storage battery, and the nerves and muscles the transmitting and recording instruments.

Self-consciousness, then, together with reflective thought, constructive imagination, volition, even to the extent of deliberately abandoning the body by suicide, all prove a higher ego, and, as a necessary corollary, reincarnation, or the repeated occupation of successive bodies by this ego. The may be fittingly prefaced by the words of Aristotle. "It is decisive of the question whether the soul exists if among the activities and emotional states of our being, there are to be found such as do not belong to our bodies."

PHYSIOLOGICAL ARGUMENT

Physiology only shows the parallelism of psychic and organic conditions; not which is cause nor which is effect; nor that both are not effects. The physiology of modern science, also, has deliberately ignored at least one-third of our existence, or that portion we spend in sleep. Now, if there is a physiology of waking life, there is also one of dreaming life, and it is towards this domain, heretofore practically abandoned to charlatans and fortune tellers, that Du Prel directs his chief inquiries.

As a basic parallel, we have to bear in mind that the projection of images during sleep is exactly equivalent to perception in the waking state, both placing objectively something we perceive subjectively. A tree, for example, is not seen actually where it is, nor is its size nor color, nor any of its attributes perceived externally. The perception is entirely internal; the location and definition of the object externally is an after operation belonging to experience and judgment. A blind man, suddenly restored to sight, as has been done by operation, is at first utterly unable to estimate the distance, perspective, and other qualities of objects, except as the result of painfully-acquired experience, in which perception plays no further part than to furnish the primary data. Therefore there is, ipso facto, nothing in dreams which excludes their phenomena from the domain of actual perception. As continuously occurs in waking life, these perceptions may be wrongly interpreted, but they are none the less true perceptions, and have their psychology and physiology; our ignorance of which is no warrant for their non-existence. Neither is there anything to warrant us in the assumption that these dream perceptions may not have extension in subjective space, just as we know the objects of our waking perception to be extended in objective space.

Of course, this applies to the true dream, in which the "I" is consciously functioning on the dream plane. The senselessness of most remembered dreams is due to a mixing of the waking and dreaming states, when objective stimuli are partly dramatized on the subjective plane, and vice versa. We have to remember that in dreams all stimuli are dramatized; thus resembling somewhat a play where the actors are limited to pantomime for the expression of their ideas. And the cause of the dramatization not being perceived, the judgment necessarily rests on false premises. It is to be borne in mind, too, that the waking state is partly objective and partly subjective. Dream is the same. Only between the two states the threshold of consciousness is greatly displaced. In the waking condition the consciousness is engrossed by the stronger stimuli of physical life, and the subjective threshold recedes accordingly. In dream the objective threshold recedes, and the consciousness responds to an entirely different class of stimuli, of a subjective nature. It is not claimed that these minor stimuli are not present in the waking condition. They are; but are crowded out of the attention, or displaced by the stronger. It is the same as when a feeble chord in music is so lost in louder and higher pitched ones, that we are unaware it is being sounded. It is only as objective stimuli fade or are suppressed that we can become conscious of the subjective. In both states it is of course the same consciousness, but responding to different stimuli.

If, then, the physiology of dreams carries perception and consciousness to the dream plane, the importance of studying this and its allied unconscious—so-called—conditions cannot be overestimated. For once we show that ordinary dream and the higher dream states, such as somnambulism and trance, are merely gradations of the same consciousness, responding to new stimuli, we not only establish the fact of another consciousness than the waking, but we also prove that this consciousness is very greatly superior to the waking in knowledge and functions, or power. In other words, we prove a higher ego, or soul. In demonstration of this connection, if we pass but a single step above the ordinary dream, and admit significant dreams as possible—and who does not?—we are in contact with a consciousness which is capable of forewarning or prophecy; powers far surpassing its waking capacities. Again, sleep-walking is but the dreamer acting out the dramatization of his own dreams, as this reviewer, who was in youth a somnambulist, can personally testify. Many, if not all, the phases of natural somnambulism are so plainly identical with those of induced somnambulism, or the hypnotic states, that we are enabled to connect these conditions beyond any doubt. And in the hypnotic, or induced somnambulism, whether self-induced or by the will of another, we forge the last and strongest link which binds the waking consciousness to one almost infinitely higher than itself in function and power, which is yet truly its own self, only functioning above and beyond the limitations of its material envelope.

In examining the further evidences of this higher consciousness, or ego—for the one implies the other—we note that in all these states, viz., dream, somnambulism, trance, etc., the memory is very greatly increased. This is also the case in fever and many forms of madness; all of which have one common factor—the suppression of the ordinary sense consciousness. Especially in somnambulism, which is simply an inner awakening that permits of responses to finer stimuli, the memory is marvelously quickened. It is similarly increased in the exalted sensitiveness accompanying fever and madness. Indeed, it is highly probable that the delirium of fever and that of many forms of madness is entirely due to the disturbance caused by the mixing up of the dramatization of these finer stimuli, which in normal conditions fall below the waking threshold of consciousness, with the ordinary waking content, which they thus partly displace, to the confusion of the judgment.

Another common denominator, to use a mathematical term, of these fractional functions in whose whole or sum lies the proof of the higher ego, is, as has been pointed out, the use of new concepts of time and space. For if, as we have shown, perception can turn to entirely new fields of consciousness, there is no reason for assuming that the physical laws of time and space hold on these planes. On the contrary, and of this the proof is abundant and always at hand, it is a well-known and admitted physiological fact that dreams which on the waking plane would require years of time for their enactment, find on the dream plane that even a moment is sufficient for the dreaming consciousness to appreciate them in their most minute details. Thus De Quincy had one dream which apparently extended over some sixty years, but which actually occupied scarcely as many moments. Uxhill, also, on three successive nights not only saw his whole life pass in review, but appreciated its moral bearing.

Now the fact that the relation of the thinking ego to time conceptions is changed in dream, is one whose importance cannot be overestimated. The exact speed at which objective stimuli are transmitted from the periphery to the brain centers is well known. In like manner, the time required by the consciousness to record visual perceptions is also subject to accurate measurement, as has been pointed out by Helmholtz and Fechner. Now, since it is the same "I" which perceives both in the waking state and in dreams, and since perception in the former can only proceed at a definite, measurable rate of speed, then if we find this same "I" recording perceptions at a rate a million times greater than that of which its physical organ, or brain, is capable, it follows that it can not be using this physical organ, and is therefore not limited to the latter for its manifestations of consciousness. This alone proves that we possess a higher consciousness, and therefore a higher ego, beyond all cavil or dispute.

Again, changing our point of view slightly, a careful examination must convince any one that thought comes into the consciousness ready made; that is, that we do not consciously create it, but receive it as though transmitted to us from some source outside or beyond us. From a perception of this poets have always claimed to be inspired by a "muse." This reception of completed thought shows plainly that the physical brain is only an organ to relate thought to the physical plane, and not to create it in any sense of the word. The whole of nature's so-called creative processes is simply unconscious thought. That is, unconscious to us. Could we attune our consciousness to that of nature, we would know what is going on in the mind of an ant, as also in the mind of a flower or stone. And that the higher ego is so attuned, in a degree at least, is proven by the fact that in deep hypnotic states it knows nature's thoughts or processes going on within its own physical organism, and can and does recognize and prescribe for diseased conditions therein. This is just in accordance with what must be predicated of an ego which, being independent of the body for all except one class of purely material functions, and which, passing from body to body by means of reincarnation, must accumulate a sum of consciousness which cannot of necessity find full and complete expression in any one body, as a small engine is insufficient to afford full expression for the energy of a series of boilers. To turn on the full force would in both instances be to destroy the vehicle which affords it expression.

Of the nature of dreams are the cases of partial drowning, where the whole life of the individual passes in review to its most minute detail during the brief interval in which the higher consciousness is permitted to function through the suppression of the lower by the physical asphyxiation and psychic exaltation which accompanies the act. In the same category are the well-authenticated facts of the entire suppression of pain during the burning of both witches and martyrs. Through the tremendous arousing of all the faculties upon such occasions, the consciousness is transferred to the higher ego, and the body burns without giving this higher ego any concern; it knowing that its existence is not dependent upon the body in any degree.

Again, if the threshold of consciousness is displaced to any marked extent, the new stimuli relate it to such unfamiliar phenomena that it often seems even to itself to be another consciousness; to belong to some other person. This has been well shown by the recent experiments of Binet and Janet, in France. This non-recognition of the functions and powers of a higher ego accounts for most, if not all, the cases of "spirit guides" and "controls," in mediums and hypnotics. For the ordinary mediumistic or trance "control" or "guide" is only a case of hypnosis, where a dramatization of the higher or dreaming consciousness takes on the part of such guide, or adviser, or prevaricator, according as the medium or hypnotic rises to a higher or lower plane of his or her own consciousness. And because the physical consciousness of the higher ego is limited largely to its own internal conditions, the attempts of hypnotics or of "spirit" guides to prescribe for any but themselves is strongly discouraged by those who have most thoroughly investigated the subject.

It may be objected, in this relation, that this manifestation of the powers of the higher ego is morbid because it is connected with morbid conditions. But this does not follow.

As well hold the light which passes through a lens to be abnormal and not really light because the process of polishing and shaping the lens which permits of its being focussed is unusual, and the capacity to focus light not a property of the stone in its natural condition.

The somnambulistic self-prescribing of the higher ego can also be shown to be directly connected with natural processes. Idiosyncrasies are plainly of this nature, and are unconscious medical prescribing, just a step below the hypnotic. Ordinary hunger and thirst, too, are of the nature of mild diseases, in which food is a prescribing, for if we deepen them to the extent of partial starvation the hallucinations which occur are only the dramatization of the physical wants, exactly as takes place in the dramatization of dreams, and the self-prescribing of hypnotics through their "guides."

If we remember that none of these psychic faculties are necessary to physical existence, but are evidently an ever-increasing after-product, we at once see that they are prophetic of powers yet to come to the human ego. Just as we can trace the prophecy of future sight and hearing in the first faint gropings of the amoeba, so are these so-called psychic faculties, now held unworthy the notice of science, prophetic of new senses, before the perception of which the veil of Isis shall be widely withdrawn and we shall penetrate to the innermost heart of nature, instead of as now skimming over her shallowest superficies.

To be Concluded.

SECULAR GOVERNMENT.

I.

The claim put forward for the Christianization of the government of the United States, both state and national, is that Christianity is part of the common law, and where that is in force, it is part of the law of the land. Hence, that by adopting the common law, we have adopted Christianity as part of our law, and are a Christian nation.

The ministers who make this claim have failed to inform themselves of the facts.

There was a common law of England, founded upon custom, and enforced by the decisions of the village moot, the shire moot, and the folk moot, which was the highest law court of the nation. The folk moot was called the Witanegemot, or council of the wise men. When the kings were converted to Christianity, the bishops procured their recognition as of a rank equal to that of a thane or lord, and by grants of land exercised a species of lordship over their tenants, and were entitled to sit in these courts on an equality with the lay lords. They assisted in the trial of civil cases in these courts. As they had embodied in the Anglo-Saxon codes provisions protecting the priests, bishops, and the church the village moot, the shire moot, and the folk moot took jurisdiction of spiritual as well as of civil cases. This continued until William the Conqueror separated the civil and spiritual courts. Even then, the priesthood had a large control of the secular courts, and called upon them to enforce their decrees of excommunication and other penalties.

Its abbots, bishops, and archbishops had procured by gifts from the king, or by wills from the pious, or relinquishments of land from impoverished land-owners, large grants of land tilled by tenants who recognized the prelates as over-lords who possessed the same rights as the thanes or lay-lords exercised over their tenants. This ownership of land and over-lordship grew to such an extent, that when the kings called upon the barons for an army to put down rebellion or repel invasion, the prelates led their tenantry into the field in battle array as the lay barons did. Upon their estates there were no lay courts, except those absolutely under their control.

After the separation of the secular and lay courts, the king assumed to be the fountain of justice—the highest law court of the nation. He appointed a chief justiciar, always a prelate, who acted upon petitions to the king, and supervised the administration of justice. In his absence, the queen often exercised the judicial functions of the king, and was superior to the justiciar. As the crown asserted absolute power over the barons, the power of the church grew apace, until the pope claimed to be absolute in power over the king, with power to absolve any of his subjects from allegiance to him, and to outlaw the king. This continued until the time of Henry the Eighth, when he defied the pope, and declared himself the head of the church and solely authorized to declare the true faith of Christianity. He defined orthodoxy and heresy. Implicit belief in the king supplanted implicit belief in the pope. He was the head of the church as well as head of the nation. But under Henry, under Edward, under Mary and Elizabeth, outward conformity alone was required.

Under church influence, a body of ecclesiastical law grew up, which governed the morals, the habits, the domestic and social relations, and the beliefs of the people. The lay courts enforced the orders and decrees of the ecclesiastical courts. The Court of the Star Chamber was an ecclesiastical court, and compelled those brought before it to furnish the evidence to convict themselves, by what was called the ex officio oath, or by confessions procured by torture. It created new crimes. When this court was abolished, the Court of the King's Bench claimed its broad power to define crimes, and to extend its jurisdiction.

The church establishment of England was, in fact, created by ordinances of the kings, or by statute law.

If we go back to primitive custom for the common law of England, it takes us to the sixth century, when England was purely pagan. Then the equality of the freemen was the basis of society. Individual freedom and individual responsibility for wrongs committed upon another were the leading features of the primitive customs. It is true each individual belonged to some maegth, or kindred, and the kindred were responsible for the payment of the fines assessed upon him. The common law doctrine that no one shall use his own property or physical power to the injury of another, has its foundation in the Anglo-Saxon customs. This was equally true in regard to religion. When in the sixth century, the pagan king Ethelbert wooed and won the Christian princess Bertha, he pledged freedom of religious belief to her and her followers. After his conversion to Christianity, the pope urged him to force his people to accept Christianity, but he refused to do so. He recognized the right of every free-born Englishman to believe in Christ and the Christian God, or not, as he pleased. For this grand exhibition of intellectual freedom, we are indebted to the Germanic tribes who conquered England, and transferred to it bodily the customs, the laws, the principles of government, and the religion of that part of Germany inhabited by the Angles and the Saxons.

Under those primitive customs, the folk moot elected and deposed the king. The people owned the folk lands, and not the crown. When his term of kingship ended, the share of the public domain which he had the use of as a king, reverted to the people again. The crown was not hereditary.

According to primitive custom, the powers of the king came through the consent of the people. No state church was established until the priesthood came into power in the sixth century. It was not fully established until Henry the Eighth usurped absolute power in religious matters.

In the settlement of this country the people did not bring with them the state establishment of England and its body of laws. The colonists organized local governments, and in most of the colonies refused to accept the established church of England. There was a constant struggle against royalty and royal governors. They—the colonists—claimed the rights of free-born Englishmen. In New England, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, North Carolina, and New York, the supremacy of the king of England in church matters was not recognized, and when the royal yoke was thrown off, the despotic claims of the church went with it. It is true that in some of the colonies there had been religious persecution.

So, too, the theory in England of a state religion was not always carried out in practice. Cecil, Queen Elizabeth's counsellor, held that no man should set up a worship in opposition to that of the nation; but that there was no need for prying into the actual beliefs of those who conformed to the religious laws of the realm; and he boldly asserted the right of every Englishman to perfect liberty of religious opinion. Elizabeth indorsed this. At the same time the Calvinistic Presbyterians demanded that all spiritual authority, and the supervision of the morals, should lie wholly in the hands of the presbyters. All toleration of practice or belief was to end. They were strong enough in 1648, to pass an ordinance against the protest of Vane and Cromwell, for the suppression of blasphemies and heresies, punishing with death all who denied the trinity, the deity of Christ, the authority of the scriptures, the resurrection of the body, or the future day of judgment.

W. S. BUSH.

The Assembly of Progress.

To the Editors of Freethought:

A correspondent, "who gives the name," as the mediums say, of C. B. Reynolds, has expressed his disapproval and doubts regarding the Assembly of Progress recently organized in this city. If this writer is the same person who came to Los Angeles and encountered a concatenation of circumstances resulting from a busted boom, which led him to shake off the dust of Southern California and proclaim to the world the general meanness of people residing in this section, we can readily account for the milk in the cocoanut; or, to drop the symbolical and use plain English, the animus which fills his soul and stirs his brain. If this is the same gentleman, I feel to say: Thanks, awfully! for his private opinion publicly expressed.

Now, in regard to the Assembly of Progress: It has come to fill "a long felt want," and must in the very nature of things succeed; for it is a universal law, everywhere in action, that what does such an important thing cannot fail. This fact, that what does fills such a want must find general, prompt, and ready acceptance, is also recognized and defended in philosophical Anarchy; and such being the case, failure is impossible, and all predictions to that end are false, erroneous, baseless, and unreliable. The Assembly of Progress has come to stay, despite the opinion of Mr. R. and the depressing effect that came over us when we read in the associated press dispatches that the Presbyterians who met to revise their creed, were strongly opposed to secret societies. This was a damper that quenched the heat of enthusiasm almost as much as Reynolds's letter, but the movement went on, and will so continue, for fate has thus decreed.

But levity aside. There is a cohesive power in secret societies not found elsewhere; and in thorough, practical organization is a power that produces results. It is time that more thorough and extended organization existed among that class of people who have bid good-bye to the Gods, risen out of the fog of superstition and stepped to the front in all reform movements. The foes of freedom are organized in churches, which, though divided by denominations, are ever ready to unite for a common purpose that shall result in the increase of religious power and influence; and when we see the unorganized forces of Liberalism in no shape to meet the encroachments of religious tyranny and persecution, it seems high time that unity of numbers and action should be realized. All results spring from small causes, and no society was ever born with ten thousand members. Size results from growth, and everything must have a starting-point.

This society was created for the personal benefit and aggrandizement of no person or clique, and its founders never entered into the movement with that mercenary spirit which Mr. Reynolds sees in a mind distorted by disappointments two years old. That perfection in all plans and details has been attained no one claims, but a start has been made, and made in the right direction; and now, if those who realize the benefit resulting from a union of forces; who see the need of organization to cope with the enemy successfully, will give this movement their attention and their aid, we will see something done. In united counsel is much wisdom, and suggestions for improvement are always in order; therefore if imperfections are discernible their remedy is among the possibilities. Let us all kick, but kick in the right direction; kick to advance improvements and not to retard them. Investigate the plans and purposes of this society, and suggest desirable changes and additions, but don't seek to retard its growth and progress without presenting something better. Yours for liberty, science, and progress,

C. SILVERANCE.
Los Angeles, Cal.

The Services of Mrs. Slenker.

To the Editors of Freethought:

As a matter of course O. S. Barrett has read all of Elmina's books, otherwise he would never be so illiberal and bigoted, not to mention being narrow-minded enough, to condemn her contributions on hearsay evidence. I am willing to aver that she is read with avidity in the columns of the Freethinkers' Magazine, Truth Seeker, etc. See her letters of "Eminent Women" in the Truth Seeker. Her "Darwin" letters with her Children's Corner in the Investigator made the brightest spot on its pages. To speak so flippantly of a woman who has spent a long and useful life in the interests of scientific Liberalism savors of a close relationship to Madam Grundy. We should be pre-eminently respectable—or nothing. I have held a correspondence with Aunt Elmina for four years and have never seen an improper thought or word. On the contrary she urges purity of life and right living to secure the highest happiness, purity for fathers and sons as well as for mothers and daughters, maintaining that children should have the advantage of being born right, with as much care bestowed upon their pre-natal existence as farmers and sportsmen give their live stock. People who are too modest for this sort of teaching should at once enter a convent and take the veil, a white one. When Elmina can count Eugene and George E. Macdonald, Ed. W. Chamberlain, H. L. Green, and the Drs. Foote and Parkhurst as her friends, she will come out unharmed from the unjust criticism of Mr. Barrett, especially when her female friends are legion.

To pass on to his strictures on J. D. Shaw, I will say that of all editors I consider the Pulpit editor one of the fairest and most gentlemanly toward opponents, and at the same time one of the most vigorous workers in the Liberal camp. One would think from Mr. Barrett's view that we were looking backward to 1864 or '65 instead of living in the year 1890. The words "secession" and "rebel" were dropped from my vocabulary when the boys came home from the army. They are now obsolete and I hope I shall never be guilty of using them again. Let us try to be magnanimous whether we succeed or not. To write to an editor like George E. Macdonald and mention the fact [?] that he doesn't want to "dictate," and then proceed to tell him what's what and who's who, is ludicrous if not logical. I should be morally certain of getting into George's "Observations," which would be equivalent to getting into "perrint." Parenthetically I would ask why not have the "Observations" brought out in a book? It would save dyspeptics the trouble and expense of pepsin. With good will toward all, I am yours for the truth and nothing but the truth,

MARY BAIRD FINCH.

Clearwater, Neb.

"I WILL make you fishers of men" is a queer title for the frontispiece of the "Young Women's Christian Association's Almanac."—The Freethinker.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Prairie City	July 25	Rosalia	Aug. 13
Baker City	July 26, 27	Plaza	Aug. 14
Union	July 28	Oakdale	Aug. 15, 16
New Bridge	July 30, 31, Aug. 1	Davenport	Aug. 17, 18, 19
Summerville	Aug. 2, 3, 4	Colville	Aug. 22, 23, 24
Heppner	Aug. 4, 5, 6	Buckley	Aug. 29
Dayton	Aug. 10, 11	Puyallup	Sept. 5, 6, 7

THE Freethought Publishing Company keeps in stock an assortment of Otto Wettstein's justly famous watches. Those desiring anything in this line are invited to call and inspect the goods.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39½ Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemaun-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

BRAIN AND THE BIBLE.

Conflict Between Mental Science and Theology.

BY EDGAR C. BEALL.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

We can recommend this as one of the most valuable works in the list of Freethought publications. Printed in large type on fine paper and elegantly bound. Price $1. FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A THOUGHTLESS YES.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Price, 50 c. Address Freethought 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,

For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, - - - 30 cents. Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

Dr. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. . . . Price, $1. Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

THE Wilson Cancer Hospital,

OAKLAND, CAL.

Established in 1886.

Drs. G. H. and M. D. STOCKHAM,

The only Institution for the especial treatment of Cancer, and other humors, on the Pacific Coast. Address as above to 765 Thirteenth Street.

A pamphlet on "The Causes and Treatment of Cancers," containing epitomy of the treatment will be sent on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps by the above, or at this office. 4t29

In Memoriam.

"The true grandeur of Humanity is in moral elevation sustained, enlightened, and decorated by the intellect of man."

Died at his residence in Monroe township, Iowa, June 16, 1890, Wareham G. Clark, aged 77 years and five months. The funeral, which occurred on the 18th inst., was largely attended by sympathizing friends and neighbors who came from far and near to pay their last tribute of respect to the departed. His remains were laid to rest near the old homestead under the trees he had planted and cared for during his life. The services were conducted by G. W. Stamm, who delivered a brief address commemorative of the life and character of the deceased.

W. G. Clark, one of the earliest settlers of Monroe county, was born in Middle Haddam, Conn., January 16, 1813, where he enjoyed the usual advantages for an education afforded by the common schools until he was sixteen years of age, when he left home to seek his fortune.

Arriving in New York, he obtained employment as clerk in a dry-goods store and continued until he had accumulated enough to go into business for himself. He followed the dry-goods business until 1840, when, his health becoming impaired, he decided to give up mercantile life, and in company with his nephew, John Clark, came to Iowa when the territory now embraced in Monroe and Wapello counties was still in the possession of the Indians. He remained in Van Buren county from 1841 till 1843, when the Indian title having been extinguished, he removed to Kishkekosh county—now Monroe—and settled about two miles northwest of the present city of Albia, at Clark's Point. In 1855 he disposed of his farm at "The Point" with the view of going to Texas; but owing to the illness of one of his children he abandoned his purpose and purchased his present homestead.

In 1846 Mr. Clark was elected a member of the State Convention for the framing of a State Constitution, to represent the counties of Monroe and Appanoose, and took an active part in the work of the convention. He has occupied several offices of trust in the county.

He devoted all his time thereafter to farming and horticulture, producing the finest fruit in largest variety of any one in southern Iowa. Mr. Clark was married in 1843 to Miss Jane L. Rankin of Davis county and reared a family of twelve children, eleven boys and one girl, all of whom are now living. He visited the Pacific coast twice for his health, once in 1886 and again in 1887, spending the winter in San Diego, accompanied by his wife and son, James F. Clark and family. He was a man of extensive information, bright intellect, sound judgment, and a profound thinker. His sympathies were broad, and his views enlightened by a conscientious regard for the truth. As an old friend of his remarked recently "he was one of those rare men who could always give a reason for his belief or action." Once having determined that anything was right he advocated and practiced it regardless of public opinion or popular clamor. He was a vigorous hater of sham and pretense in all its forms, and took no pains to conceal his contempt for religious or political intolerance. Although reared in the strictest school of orthodox theogy, he early in life abandoned it, taking reason and conscience for his guide, exemplifying to the world that beliefs and creeds were but adjuncts, and not at all necessary towards building up a spotless character, or living a noble, blameless life. As a father, husband, and friend, he proved himself kind, affectionate, and loyal. As a citizen, enterprising and useful, as a neighbor, accommodating and generous. He has left a record that can never fade, an influence that will always be felt, an example of truth and courage, helpful to those who are left behind.

It was a fitting and appropriate thing that this man should pass away quietly and peacefully in the full enjoyment of his faculties and surrounded by those who loved and knew him best. Death held no arrow of fear or remorse in his quiver for him, but like unto a peaceful slumber the summons came, and he passed to his reward.

"His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him, that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, this was a man!"

G. W. STAMM.

None of It in His Soul.

Angry advertiser—If you think I'm going to pay you for this ad, you're mistaken.

Advertising clerk—What's the matter with it? "You promised to put it next to reading matter and you've got it right alongside a column of poetry."—Chicago Tribune.

His Definition.

Schoolmaster—Now, Master Sharpshins, what is the equator?

Master Sharpshins—The letter O, sir.

Schoolmaster—How is that?

Master Sharpshins—Because it is a circle which divides the gl-o-be into equal parts, sir. —Jester.

An Omission.

Editor of agricultural paper—Look here; here's a man who asks the silliest questions!

Assistant—How about it?

"Why, he asks me the best way to cure hams, and doesn't state in his note what's the matter with them."

Short of Matter.

Great Magazine Editor—We are very short of matter. All the great generals, notorious politicians, famous lawyers, popular variety actresses, eminent physicians, and prominent scientists seem to be too busy to write for us just now.

Assistant, meditatively—Perhaps we might get some articles from literary men.

Great Editor—Good idea! I'll make a tour of the poorhouses to-morrow.

"Now, boys," said the enthusiast, "let's give three cheers for the speaker and then go have a drink." "Excuse me," said the prohibitionist; "I cheer, but I do not inebriate."

A boy of nine handed in the following composition on George Washington: "George Washington was the father of his country one day he went to his fathers yard and cut down a tree. What are you doing asked his father I am trying to tell a lie and can not when he grew up he was president and was killed by a man named getto who was jellish of him and the no 9 engine house was draped in black."—Harper's Bazar.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
8. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
7. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. } Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalle Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. } The Study of Words.
31. } Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R. A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. } (Geological Sketches.
39. } Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W. M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. } The Dawn of History.
45. } C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. } Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. } Illusions.
57. } James Sully.
58. } The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. } Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowles, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T. H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archicology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
77. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
79. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
82. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
84. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
85. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
86. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
87. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
88. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
89. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
90. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
91. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S. S. Laurie.
92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No.) Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T. H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haeckel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present. Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. III. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. III. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

- Letter-heads,
- Bill-heads,
- Programmes,
- Envelopes,
- Business Cards,
- Postal Cards,
- Tickets,
- Placards,
- Receipts,
- Posters,
- Dodgers,
- Circulars,
- Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident, and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foot's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Ret. Pacific and Broadway.
DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY
Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

God in the State. By F. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper. PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—10 better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not utterly satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Hardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4 50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks. Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address, Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND, N.J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm for large profits, quick sales, SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Fotts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25
- Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
 BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.
 404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities.
E. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.
 TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
 By W. R. GREG.
 Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
- 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 0
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
- 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
- 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
- 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " " Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address PITNAM & MACDONALD, 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

- Per Year.....$1.50
- Six Months......75
- Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
 12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1.00; cloth $1.50.

NOW READY

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.
AN INFALLIBLE CURE

FOR
RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,
Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica,
Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all
Kidney, Liver, and Stomach
Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C.H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and
Manufacturer, No. 40
O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S
HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H.
Webb's Hæmony.

Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S.F.
Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres Sather Banking Co S.F.
Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco
Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.
James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1.
Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose
Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy
HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed
and shipped by Express to all parts of the world.
Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells,
 Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against
LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—
causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures,
embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE
APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,

Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,

Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.

HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m. 25tf

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D., $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook. M. D. $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer
and Herbert Spencer. $1

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache.
By M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Ills. 50.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Len-
nox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices
and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank
and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes
and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc.,
built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz
Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time,
therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered
on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

RUPTURE

In advertising Dr.
PIERCE'S Patent MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS,

the assurance is given that we are offering the Best
Truss in the World.

This Celebrated Appliance has been extensively sold for many years and has

Radically Cured thousands of cases of Rupture! This is an Electric Truss (the only successful one ever invented); has no Iron Hoops or Steel Springs about it, and being elastic, can be worn with ease and comfort Night and Day. It's a perfect retainer! For further particulars of Truss, send 4c. in stamps for Pamphlet No. 1 and that Dr. Pierce's Genuine Electric

REMEMBER Trusses contain our Private Signature exactly like that shown at top of this advertisement. Beware of inferior imitations!
Address:

MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS COMPANY,
704 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. III—No. 31.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1890.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal.: as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1884

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 2, 1890

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

I leave Prineville on Monday, July 14. My baggage, which finally came on Sunday night, I was obliged to divide up and send part by express, via. The Dalles, to Baker City, and pack the rest as best I could upon the horse who was to take me a hundred miles across country to Wagner's. I did not like the prospect, but was obliged to make the best of it, for there was no other way to meet my appointment. At half past eleven I set forth with a day's journey of forty miles before me. Two or three miles out of town I passed by Slayton's ranch, where the green trees presented an alluring aspect. I had been advised to stop here for dinner, and I was sure of a most hearty welcome. But an hour's delay would prevent my reaching the night's destination, so I passed on in the sun and dust. At about two o'clock I found a place for lunch, beside the road, and took a half hour's rest with the horse. I passed Thompson's at about five o'clock, and if ever the "solitary horseman" wanted to stop for a night's lodging, I was the man. But I had fifteen miles still before me. I could not have had a more beautiful journey so far as the scenery was concerned. The soft sunlight of the decreasing day was falling amid the broad arches of the forest. The Ochoco was singing merrily along. At six o'clock I passed the mines. It was ten miles before I would reach another house, and the mighty hill lay before me. I must climb and descend this before I could arrive at the happy valley where weary limbs could repose. They do have enormous hills in Oregon. When it seemed as if I were at the very top still the vistas stretched before, and on I must go another winding way to the next summit. When at last the towering point was reached and I could look down upon the other side, over the Bridge Creek country, the sun was just on the verge of the glowing horizon. I was miles away from any habitation and only for a moment could I gaze upon the entrancing view. I must keep on or night would overtake me. It was nearly nine o'clock when, through the black trunks of the trees, I saw friend Hayes's house and the green fields. The little children greeted me as I rode up to the door. The cows were coming from the woods. I was once more among men. Good-bye to the solitude and hail to the fireside. Mr. and Mrs. James Hayes are from Coos county, where the Coquille flows along and the boom is now awakening, from Myrtle Point to Marshfield. Our friends have a cozy place among the trees, delightful in summer, away from the dust and heat, and I could not find a more agreeable shelter along the route. I had a good night's sleep, and the entertainment was given with generous hospitality. I would have enjoyed a day's visit in this mountain home, but when the morning light appeared I must forward go. It was only fifteen miles to Mitchell, and I anticipated an easy ride. I did not know what cumulative misfortunes the day was to bring forth. At half past eleven I was within four miles of Mitchell, and within an hour or so I should have a good dinner at Boardman's. The prospect was cheering. I hurried on. I did not know the trap laid for the unwary traveler. I had not been instructed to look out for the turning off place to The Dalles and I unfortunately drifted into it. I went down the creek; and many a man before me has made the same mistake, and it is hoped that hereafter the powers that be will put a guide-board at this unfortunate point. Only those thoroughly acquainted with the country would know the right road. At about the time I thought to strike Mitchell a broad, desolate scene opened as I left the canyon. I felt that I was in a strange land not at all like what Shrum and I had passed through the week before. Blazing red hills stretched along a gray expanse of plain. I shall call that place, hereafter, hades. I did not think I was really off the track until I came to the toll house. I then asked the way. Mitchell was ten miles off. The hot, mid-day sun was pouring down. The ghastly plain seemed to laugh at my despair, and the red hills grew more lurid. Twelve miles off the road, hungry and tired, sweltering in the glaring sunshine, I was tempted to dismount and take a good half day's rest. But it would not do. I must get to Rye Hollow that night. So I turned my horse and pursued my weary way to Mitchell. How I hated those blazing red hills and that bare plain. I believe it was the nearest to hell I ever got in my life. I should not have been surprised if I had met the devil himself. I reach the canyon and turn off at Meyers's and climb the hills to the right. I was somewhat repaid for this roundabout trip by a most magnificent view of White Butte. I could see almost the whole of its splendid and massive form rising right before me like an enormous wave. It glittered against the dark blue background of wooded hills like smooth marble. To the right Black Butte flung its contrasting brow athwart the intense splendor of the sky. There could not be a grander picture than this—so wild and strangely beautiful. It was sublime, desolate, lovely. It was like a painting on the infinite canvass of the past, wherein the history of centuries was limned in superb and delicate portraitures. Near by, along the bare brown rocks shivered as if by some mighty stroke, a thousand flowers of richest hue, blue and gold, adorn the scene. Over eighty varieties of flowers have been discovered here, mingling their radiance with the melancholy grandeur of the fire-blasted precipices.

At two o'clock I arrive at Mitchell. The cheery welcome of Landlord Boardman was enough to offset many a disappointment. I eat a good dinner and rest for two hours. At half past four I set off for Straub's, twenty miles away. I expected to make it about dark. I reach Foppiano's ranch just at sunset. It is five miles to Straub's. I miss the road once or twice traversing the plain, but find it again, and reach "the brook," one of my landmarks, in safety, three miles and a half from Straub's. My next landmark was a wire fence and a pair of bars. If I hit this I could find my way in the dark. Alas! in the deepening twilight I take the wrong turn, and after a while it is impossible to retrace my course. I am lost without the slightest idea as to the direction I should take. I could simply keep on and trust to luck. I may find a house and I may not. Houses are far apart in this country, and when one cannot see more than a couple of rods ahead they are about as hard to discover as a needle in a haystack. Finally I strike a fence. I conclude to stick to that fence. It is the only company I have, save the horse. I turn to the left and after going about half a mile I find a gate. Through the gate I come into an immense pasture, but not a house is to be seen. I travel on, it seems to me an unconscionable length of time, but still no house. The dark mountains loom in front, and it appeared as if I was plunging right into their bosom. I turn back toward the open plain. I discover the next morning that if I had gone fifty rods further on I should have come to Lee Smith's, and then I should have had no further trouble. But daylight is one thing and midnight is another in an unknown land. I re-pass the gate and follow the fence in the opposite direction. Peering through the gloom I would imagine that a rancher's cabin was just over the fence, but further examination would prove that it was only a piece of black earth or rock or tree-stump. It looked as if I must camp out with only a saddle for my pillow, and the sky for my roof, and not a blanket to roll up in; and nights are cold on this plateau five thousand feet above the sea. However, the good star prevails. After careful scrutiny I discover a gate. Through this I venture and find a little cabin. I knock. All is silence. I halloo, but nobody responds. I try the door. It is unlocked—a fashion in this country. I light a match and discover a kerosene lamp whose cheerful rays soon illuminate the apartment. It is neatly furnished and the pictures on the wall indicate a woman's taste. I could not ask for better lodgings and I instantly accepted them. I unsaddled the horse and tied him where he could eat grass, and turned in and slept till daylight. I had traveled over fifty miles this day, got lost twice, and was camping in an unknown locality. I did not know but the owner of the cabin might return at any time and arrest me for burglary, for I had entered his house and taken possession of his best bed. However, I had a clean conscience. Use gives ownership, and I must sleep here or else upon the "cold, cold ground."

I am up before sunrise and soon find my way. I strike for Lee Smith's and he gives directions to Straub's, two miles off. I arrive in time for breakfast. I have a good appetite and a royal entertainment. I am made happy by the announcement that Emil Straub and Wilson, a comrade from Foppiano's, are going over to the Wagners' and so there is no more danger of losing the way. I shall be landed safe and sound this time. The distance is nearly twenty miles, and the roughest road of all, down the canyon to the John Day river. We descend about three thousand feet. It would seem as if nobody could live in this canyon, and yet half way, in a little green nook, where potatoes, onions, and cabbages flourish, miles from any other dwelling, live two women. It seems a desolate place for woman to keep up the struggle of existence—far from "the glass of fashion and the mould of form," and all those civilized affairs which are so dear to the female heart. But woman has her "freaks," and this is one of them, apparently, trying to make a home in this remote and prison-like canyon, where man is almost as infrequent as an angel. At one o'clock, fording the John Day and climbing the bare hills beyond, we reach Wagner's, and I never was so "clean gone" in my life. I tumble to bed at once, and am soon sound asleep. I couldn't find a better haven than the Wagners'. They let me rest to my heart's content, and I avail myself of the blessed privilege of doing nothing but to eat and sleep. By the next morning I am somewhat refreshed, and able for further locomotion. I don't have to be at Monument until Friday, and so Thursday I visit at Haystack. We go down into the valley to Mrs. Hayden's, the "little mother," as she is called, who takes good care of the boys and girls, and here, with genial entertainment and bright repose, the day passes. Near by is the ranch of the Gates', who were with us part of the time. In the evening we return to Grass Valley, or "Fiddler's Flat," as it is called, for there are eight fiddlers, I believe, in this neighborhood. They do not all play at once, or there might be an earthquake. Max Ramsby is already at hand with his team. He is to take me over to Monument Friday, and there couldn't be a more splendid exhibition of goodwill, for the road to Monument, from Haystack, is about the most blood curdling, up-and-down, perpendicular, torturous, "hold-on" and "let-go" ride that I ever took. I could look down upon the horses as if they were disappearing over a precipice, and then they would hang over me, and I seemed to be tumbling into "the dark backward and abysm of time." Somebody likened this journey to traveling over an immense concourse of bologna sausages. The simile was so apt that the name stuck, and to this day the hills and creeks are called the "Bolonas." We left Wagner's early in the morning. No place do I leave with brighter memories than the home of these loyal pioneers and the picturesque and delightful Haystack valley. We climb the steep hills, and grand and lovely views extend for miles away. We reach Long Springs about noon, where Joe Putnam and I a year ago took our pilgrims' lunch, and Max Ramsby and I do the same this year's journey. The shrubbery affords a gentle shade, the water is cool and clear, and Miss Lavina had generously provided all that we could eat—and that was not a little, for our appetites had grown almost as huge as the Bologna hills, which furnished the table for our ample meal. Round about spreads in rugged variety the most wonderful fossil country in the world. Here once roamed the three-toed horse, and his remains are found unto this day. The elephant also has left his mark. Here also geologists declare was the olive-tree land and the mellow tropical clime. Then came fire and water with tremendous upheavals in wild and wondrous confusion. It seems as if nature in some mad freak had piled ruin upon ruin in order to stop if possible the march of time and make chaos come again.

Descending into the valley of the North fork of the John Day river, at three o'clock we arrive at Putnam's. Putnam at present is living in the mountains, but his ranch was prepared for the lecture and the dance of the evening. The only way to get people out in this country is by the magic of the violin. They don't go to church, and they are not much interested in Freethought, but they like a good time. Joseph Putnam and Henry Buristow are about the only ones to bear the brunt of the battle, and maintain Freethought as a principle. There is no village at Monument, only scattered ranches, and those who attend the lectures must come for miles. Considering all things, the busy season, etc., the attendance was fair. Ed. Allen was present from Long Creek; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Smith and Fred Hunt and others from Haystack; Mrs. Almira Sweek, Will Sweek, and Miss Williams from Hamilton; Miss Rice from Prairie, etc. After the lecture they danced until morning. They sleep out of doors here, and I found my couch beneath the whispering trees, and while the merry feet went round I floated off in dreams. However, I had to get up at sunrise and off to Hamilton with the Sweeks. It was quite coolish, although the thermometer runs up to a hundred in the daytime. A big overcoat was serviceable, and the blankets. We were glad when the sun poured his rays upon us, the journey being half way done. It is an immense hill we have to climb to get to the Sweeks. They dwell almost in the clouds, and can look over all creation, I should think. It is a delightful place in summer, and the views are superb. The vast and rugged scenery glitters in a blue radiance. Immediately on my arrival I take breakfast and seek the familiar couch and sleep until after noon. In the cool of the evening we all go down to Hamilton. Here I find E. J. Allen, of Long Creek, Chas. G. Caspary, of Haystack, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Platter, of Fox, and Charlie Sweek and wife and the little baby, two months old. Not a very great many gather together at Hamilton. A horserace is going on when I arrive. I have to wait until that is over before beginning the lecture. However, the attendance is very good, and I cannot complain of the reception of my discourse. I think it was pretty nearly as well appreciated as the horserace. But to get ahead of a horserace in this country is more than the Secular Pilgrim can do. The Sweeks keep things in a progressive condition at this post: Harvey, Martin, Will, Lawrence, Mrs. Almira Sweek, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sweek. There are some others who are good allies, and so the evening was passed in a very pleasant manner.

A long ride is before me "over the hills and far away." I must be at Fox next Sunday at eleven o'clock. It is thought better to make the night journey and sleep late in the morning than to get up early and go. Besides, we had to take home the little baby, a two-months old Freethinker, who had come into this world to have his own way. It was after ten o'clock before we were all fairly packed into the wagon. It was quite dark, but the combined energies of Sweek and Platter kept the horses in the right road. About midnight we bade good-bye to the baby and the father and mother, and then plunged into the forest and began to climb the long hill. The horses seemed to know the way through the black shadows. Once, however, we lost the track, and the way the wagon went rattling over the stones was something like a small earthquake. We stopped and Platter got out to reconnoitre. A fierce dog-bark fell upon our ears, and from out a neighboring bush, where evidently somebody was "camping," came a sepulchral voice, saying, "The road is up this way." We followed the "Providential guide" and were soon again upon the highway. We could almost see the faint streaks of dawn as we came to Platter's ranch, and the watch dog gave greeting. In five minutes I was in bed and asleep, and did not wake until the sun was high in heaven. Then we went to "meeting." The school-house was full when we arrived. A minister was there, flanked by his deacons. I gave a lecture upon "The Bible and Modern Thought." The minister, a young man, evidently took it all in, but he had nothing to say. I lectured again in the afternoon and on Monday afternoon, and the Fox valley campaign was a success. There are only a small number here to stand by the colors, but they are staunch and true. There are Mr. and Mrs. J. Born, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Smith and their families, which make quite a bright audience in themselves, with Mr. and Mrs. Platter, R. A. Short, of Mt. Vernon, Schoolmaster Cobb, Wm. Shank, Wilson, etc. Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Wainscott and family could not be with us, but all the same came the message of greeting and generous gift.

So this beautiful valley, shining in the sun, with harvests on its bosom, a hundred miles from the whistle of the locomotive, gleams with promise. No church has been erected here, and there are four school-houses. I hope the school-houses will thus keep ahead in the march of time. There are some good placer and quartz mines about here on the hills. There is plenty of timber. There is not a better locality in the state of Oregon.

On Tuesday morning Mr. and Mrs. Platter put up a lot of good things in a box, and we start off for Frakes, where we expect to "hold up" the stage and take our dusty course to John Day, twenty-five miles off. We find some beautiful big trees and a lovely shade, and here we unload, build the fire, make the coffee, and refresh ourselves with a good square meal. R. G. Frakes, who keeps bachelor hall at the "corner," here joined our festive circle. He has just been on the sick list, but he seems to be all well now, and enjoys living on his ranch alone, which is one of the best in the country. He is a Liberal, too, and I have a cordial invitation to his fireside. He is Mrs. Carsener's father, of Haystack, and the Carseners are famous Liberals, as the notes of my pilgrimage will testify.

At half-past two the "buckboard," alias the stage, comes along. Thank fortune, I am the only passenger, and get to John Day without much inconvenience. I have traveled about five hundred miles since I left the railroad nearly a month ago, via lumber wagon, buckboard, saddle, and various other vehicles. I have enjoyed the trip as another man enjoyed the toboggan ride. "Did you like it?" "It was glorious," was the answer; "I wouldn't have missed it for a hundred dollars." "Want to try it again?" "By thunder, no, not for a thousand dollars," was the refrain.

Max Ramsby says that now in order to complete my Oregonian experiences I must ride a bucking horse, provided I could get a soft place upon which to land. I should then know all about it if I didn't break my neck.

I must thank Wagner's faithful animal, Daisy, or "The Yaller Gal," as she is called, for her untiring service to the lost and wandering Pilgrim. If she had deserted me in my troubles I should have been nowhere. She carried me over one hundred and fifty miles. She deserves more than a mundane reward. I sincerely hope she will "hoof it" over the streets of the New Jerusalem. I hope she will have plenty of oats in a golden crib, more substantial than the notes of a golden harp.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE HARMAN PETITIONS.

Those having in hand petitions for the pardon of Moses Harman are requested to forward them at once to E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York, N. Y., instead of returning them to this office. We have had the pleasure of sending several hundred signatures to the above address.

A LATTER DAY PROPHECY.

It is learned in advance by means of the telegraph that the August "Arena," a monthly magazine published in the East—and usually a very good magazine—contains an article of twenty pages by Prof. Joseph Rodes Buchanan on "The Coming Cataclysm of America and Europe." In this article Professor Buchanan predicts terrific disasters to this continent. He says that everything financial and political is in a bad way, and that an unexampled crash is coming. These changes will take place: The Republican party will be hurled from power by the Democrats, who will replace them but give no better satisfaction. The Democratic administration will follow the Republican into desuetude, and a labor party will reign. This, however, will not be any better. Discontent is to be followed, in 1909, just nineteen years hence, by a war of seven years' duration, between capital and labor, intermingled with a religious element. At this time the church shall be shattered, Christianity rejected, and the Bible discarded. "The twentieth century," he says, "will witness the expiring struggles of biblical Christianity, and the twenty-first the existence of a religion in which all that was good in the past will survive." That is quite cheering.

There will, also, according to Dr. Buchanan, be tremendous changes in the face of the country. Large regions of the United States are to become barren; the Mississippi will be a scourge like the Yang-tse-Kiang in China; cyclones will devastate communities; the seasons shall so mingle one with another that crops will be destroyed; the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to New Jersey will be swept away; the Pacific coast will yet see great earthquakes and tidal waves, presumably the ones predicted by Mrs. Woodworth, and general convulsions will knock things endways.

These are certainly dire forebodings, and we shall wait impatiently until the mails bring the "Arena" to the coast, so that we may find out the data upon which Professor Buchanan bases these dire prognostications. We used to know the professor in New York, where he conducted an eclectic medical college on Livingstone place. He is a Spiritualist and a psychometrist; a very learned man, but with a tendency, after Tennyson, to dip into the future. When it is remembered that thousands of years ago men like Professor Buchanan predicted disasters similar to his, and that though their predictions had the added authority of "inspiration," they have nevertheless failed to materialize, people are not likely to let these forebodings trouble them to any great extent. Prophecies pass in this day for what they are worth, which is not much.

PROGRESS DEPENDS ON ACTIVITY.

In order that a Freethought paper or the Freethought cause may be supported it is necessary that all interested in it should put their shoulder to the wheel and do something to forward the movement. We should all remember that Freethought is evolution, not revolution. The world would perhaps be better off if all religious belief were extinguished within the next twenty-four hours, but it would not remain so, for the reason that in the present state of ignorance other superstitions would at once spring up to replace those which had been discarded. Freethought comes with education, and the educational process is a slow one. And yet by this slow process greater good may ultimately be done than could be accomplished by any sudden revolution that should destroy all religion at once. When people are educated out of falsehood they will not return to it.

It is because the educational method of attaining truth is slow that the progress of Freethought is slow, and we should never be discouraged if we do not from one day to another perceive any apparent growth. We cannot always see the shadow move, but it moves nevertheless.

Freethought labors under the disadvantage of being a true system, and of following the course of nature. It cannot enlist the emotional or the sentimental, or arouse wild enthusiasm. It promises no rewards to be paid on a specified date, nor threatens anyone with punishment for rejecting it. It locates no paradise a century hence, offers no nostrum, nor holds out delusive inducements for those who accept its teachings. Freethought alone will not abolish crime, misery, or poverty; yet without free thought no progress toward abolishing these has ever been made or, in the nature of things, can be made. There are, however, people so blind that, while admitting the good that has come through Freethought in the past, they are yet unable to recognize its necessity for future progress. Through Freethought the practice of medicine has changed from a hotch-potch of charms and incantations to a system of scientific practice, thus promoting health; education has passed from the hands of the priests to those of scientists; history has taken the place of tradition; chemistry supplants alchemy; astronomy displaces astrology; reason supplants faith; liberty destroys slavery, and instead of leaving everything to the ghosts men are trying to work out their own salvation.

These advantages have come in opposition to religion and by the exercise of mental freedom; and the same freedom must bring all future benefits. For as one discovery of science but reveals still greater discoveries beyond, so one step in advance only opens up yet higher achievements still ahead. There is but one method of reaching these, and that method is Freethought. Bearing these facts in mind, that the battle is a long one, that though advancement from day to day is slow it is nevertheless sure, there should be an ever-increasing activity among Freethinkers. No day should pass without all its opportunities for work being improved. One reader added to the list of a Freethought paper is a step, two is a longer one. We hope that the friends of this paper realize that fact, and that they are letting no opportunity pass to add to its effectiveness by increasing its circulation. They should not through indifference permit the wheels of progress to be either turned backward or blocked.

LAST year in one week eighty-four human beings died in San Francisco. In the corresponding week this year, the deathrate reached one hundred and twenty-eight. In another week of 1889, ninety deaths occurred; in the corresponding week of 1890, one hundred and fifty passed to the silent majority. The same discrepancy has been maintained thus far throughout the year. When asked to give reasons for this augmented mortality, physicians complain about bad sewerage and a lack of health inspectors. No doubt these unsanitary conditions have much to do with increasing the number of deaths, yet the sewerage is as good as it was a year ago, or better, and health inspectors are just as numerous and active. Some other reason must be given, and there is no need to go far to find it. These deaths occur chiefly among the poor, and they occur because the poverty of the poor denies them a sufficient quantity of wholesome food to sustain life. Bad meat, bad milk, and such fruit as is too miserable to compete with the Eastern product are doing their work, and funerals are the result. Let our newspapers make it known that the city is overwhelmed with the unemployed and the impoverished, to whom a ten-cent meal of spoiled food in a cheap restaurant is a luxury, and a free lunch a godsend; that more energy is being expended to "boom" this section of the country than to develop its resources; and that the only prosperous class are those whose capital in either land or money enables them to cinch the less fortunate. Let the purveyors of information tell their readers that the railroads, the politicians, and the priests have the people of the city in their grip, and are bleeding them for all they are worth, and that the sensationalism mistaken for enterprise is paid for by money that ought to go to pay debts. Let us, in short, get down to facts as they are visible to all, because a wrong diagnosis is bound to lead to a wrong method of treatment. Sewers and health inspectors are of no benefit to a man whose hands have nothing to work at and whose stomach has nothing to digest.

A SUIT of fifty thousand dollars against the New York "Sun" by the Aryan Theosophical Society of that city, will tend to draw attention to the Theosophical movement, whether the society wins or not. The cause of the present suit is the publication of a long interview with Dr. Elliot Coues, of Washington, who, having been expelled from the society, retaliates by making serious charges against its members. If Dr. Coues and the "Sun" have lied about that respectable body of people known as Theosophists, we trust that they will be overtaken with condign punishment.

"THE Ragpicker of Paris," a novel by Felix Pyat, translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker, is as good a story as was ever condemned with good reason by the religious, especially the Catholic, press. Nine-tenths of the late novels that have gained a wide circulation are milk-and-watery compared to this. It drags the covering off a lot of political, religious, and social shams, and reveals them as they are. Nevertheless, it is pretty strong meat for people without a good mental digestion.

THE newspapers are filled with the fame of the Rev. W. Mitchell, pastor of the Broadway Presbyterian church at Fort Worth, Texas. The reverend gentleman has achieved this distinction by forging checks to the amount of two thousand five hundred dollars. He is in jail.

THE Personal Rights League of Chicago demands, among other things, that the "World's Fair shall be open in all its departments on Sunday at reduced rates"—a very good idea.

BAXTER & Co. advertise their portrait work in this week's FREETHOUGHT. In dealing with advertisers in FREETHOUGHT please tell them where you saw their advertisement.

THOSE who read Putnam's correspondence and Dr. Anderson's contribution in this week's issue will not miss the "Observations," which were left on the outside of the form.

A Young Emperor with the Big-head.

Emperor William of Germany: "We Hohenzollerns accept our crown only from Heaven, and are responsible to Heaven only for the performance of its duties. I, too, am animated by this view, and am resolved to act and to govern on this principle."

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The city of Wallace, Idaho, the chief mining city in the state, was destroyed by fire on the 27th. More than a thousand people are homeless. It was one of the most flourishing towns of the northwest.—John D. Fiske, a prominent man of bad reputation, was shot and killed at Fresno July 25 by an eccentric inventor named Stillman, for some real or fancied grievance. Fiske was one of those men to whom a violent death is a natural end.—Sealers in the north report a good season.—A drunken ruffian named Schmid assaulted a Holiness band of worshipers in Commercial street, San Francisco, last Sunday, and came out of the crusade with a broken jaw, which was set in the city hospital.—Last year there were in San Francisco 84 deaths during the week corresponding to that which ended Saturday, July 26. This year there were 128 deaths. All sorts of reasons are given for the increased mortality. Much of it is doubtless due to destitution.—Mrs. O. F. Shepard spoke before the Pacific Nationalist Club last Sunday on "The Curse of Charity." She said that the necessity for charity revealed an absence of justice.—The trial of Foundryman Kerr, who shot young Cogan, a striking molder, is in progress in police court No. 2. Ex-Judge J. G. Maguire is conducting the prosecution.—The weather was so hot lately in some parts of California that the mercury reached three figures.—Editor I. N. Choyinski, of "Public Opinion," convicted of attempted extortion, has got an extension of his time in order to introduce new evidence.

Dr. Burtzell, under censure of the pope, last Sunday bade farewell to his congregation in the church of the Epiphany, New York. Though a Protestant, like McGlynn, he still declares himself a Catholic.—The Rev. Robert Laird Collyer, one of the ablest and most widely-known Unitarian preachers in America, died at Salisbury, Md., July 27. He was stricken with paralysis two days previous to his death. Dr. Collyer began his ministerial career as an itinerant Methodist, but united with the Unitarian church in 1866. He was of English birth, emigrating to this country in 1851.—The amount of Mormon property confiscated by the U. S. government reaches $700,000, but there is said to be from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000 of money belonging to the Mormon church invested in San Francisco and other California cities.—The Rev. Mr. Arney, Methodist, of Saranac, Mich., recently challenged the community to race horses with him. Last Saturday the event came off and the parson won every heat.—A terrible cyclone struck Lawrence, Mass., on the morning of July 26. About one hundred houses were wrecked and several persons killed, mostly women and children. Property loss is estimated at $116,000.—The great strike of cloakmakers in New York is ended, the employees winning concessions.

There is a rebellion in active operation in the Argentine Republic, S. A.—San Salvador, Central America, is reported to be getting the better of Guatemala in the war now waging.—Vienna nuns have just abducted the daughter of a stage singer, and violent religious animosities are thereby engendered.—Stanley, the explorer, is still very sick, but he contemplates coming to America in November.—Poor old Pope Leo XIII. is eighty-one years of age. He walks with a stoop, leans heavily on his cane, and subsists upon broth. There is no hope that ere his death he will confess himself the prince of humbugs, which he is.

AN APPEAL TO THE LIBERAL LECTURER.

DEAR FELLOW-WORKER: The American Secular Union and yourself are both working for the same cause—(1) the right to the expression of independent thought, unhampered by ecclesiastical tyranny; (2) the total separation of church and state. Each of these things is but a different expression of the same right, and the success of the one means the success of the other. The American Secular Union is, however, devoting its energies especially to the second of these things—total separation of church and state. Realizing, as it does, that law is the crystallized expression of the people's will (whether honestly or fraudulently obtained) and that the God-in-the-Constitution party, backed by local legislation, are to-day powerful enough to infuse into the law of the land their own sectarian and tyrannous ideas, the

SECULAR GOVERNMENT.

II.

American Secular Union would urge upon your consideration the need for solid organization among Liberals, and would ask you, as a public worker, to help the national society. We ought to be united into one undivided army. It should be as much of a discredit for Liberals to stand aloof in cliques, and not help fight under the standard of the national organization, as it would be among our opponents to set up an isolated church which should forswear allegiance to the sect to which it professes to belong. The ecclesiastical party gain on Liberals because church people pull together, while Liberals have been hitherto but a rope of sand, wherever public co-operation has been concerned.

As you are striving to bring about the same thing as we, will you not work with us and for us? Will you not speak a good word for the national organization to your audiences? Will you not do what you can to induce Liberals to enroll themselves in the national army of the American Secular Union, so that we may all make a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together in defense of our freedom from church dictation?

We do not ask you to give up your independence as a lecturer to do this. We should be glad, indeed, if you could manage to collect money for us. But, if you feel that that would interfere with your own income, we will not ask you to do this. We only ask that you use the American Secular Union as a background for your lectures; that, when you shall have roused your hearers to a sense of their wrongs under the present unjust union of church and state, and shall have your hearers wrought up to an eager desire for action, you will point them to the American Secular Union as the national army in which they should enlist, if they would help destroy the evils which you are denouncing.

Why should you not co-operate with us in this work?

Such co-operation, if properly managed, would mean a gain both to the cause and to you individually. Think what a solid organization of the majority of Liberals in the country would mean.

First. It would mean co-operation in our attacks upon the enemy. When a wrong anywhere in the country is to be struck at, it would mean that the whole strength of the organization would go into the blows—instead of the matter being left, as now, to a helpless protest from a few Liberals in the immediate vicinity.

Second. It would mean a co-operation which would "carry the war into Africa." The Liberals outnumber the church party, ten to one; and it is only the superior organization of the latter which renders them so bold and aggressive in their onslaughts upon our religious liberties. With equal organization on our side, we could soon cause them to feel our influence for the right.

Third. It would mean that each lecturer in the country would have a regular series of appointments mapped out for him by the central organization (in addition to those which he might make independently) so that he could canvass any given section of country at the least possible expense to himself and to the local societies before whom he lectures. This would mean more dollars in his pocket at the end of the year, as well as a more systematic advertising of the cause: while, at the same time, it would bring him into contact with more people within a given area. Such a plan, of course, should not encroach upon the right of a lecturer to make his own independent engagements.

The tendency of the times is toward consolidation and co-operation where work of any magnitude is to be undertaken; and if Liberals are to hold their own against their opponents, they must be welded into a solid organization. To scatter their forces, after the wasteful methods of guerrilla warfare, is to weaken their effectiveness. Organization, and only organization, will to-day enable Liberalism to successfully resist the encroachments of the church upon the state.

The peril to our religious liberties presses fast upon us. Comrade, you who are out in the field, will you not do all in your power to rally your fellow-soldiers under the one standard of the American Secular Union, that we may march forward without hindrance to the victory which should be ours?

R. B. WESTBROOK, President A. S. U.
F. C. MENDE, Treasurer,
IDA C. CRADDOCK, Cor. Sec.

Philadelphia, July 12, 1890.

Under Cromwell, the church was stripped of power to interfere with faiths differing from its own. Quakers were protected, and Jews permitted to return to England.

Lord Mansfield held: "The common law of England, which is only common reason or usage, knows of no prosecution for mere opinions.

"Bare non-conformity is no sin by the common law; and all positive laws inflicting any pains and penalties for non-conformity to the established rites and modes, are repealed by the act of toleration."

In a later case it was argued that pew rent for a Jewish synagogue could not be collected, because there was no law which legalized the establishment of Jewish synagogues; that "the Toleration Act did not embrace Jewish synagogues of any description, and since the doctrines practiced there were in direct hostility to the Christian religion, such establishments were to be considered illegal." The court required authority to be produced to show that they were illegal, and as none could be produced, held them legal.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that the common law is but "municipal law," and of force in the United States only so far as it has been adopted by the states. At the Revolution it was adopted in various forms in each colony, by statute or by constitution. So far as it was adopted by the colonies, that court held: "Such colonies carry with them only so much of the English law as is applicable to their situation and the condition of an infant colony; such, for instance, as the general rules of inheritance and protection from personal injuries." (Wheaton et al. vs. Perin et al., 8 Peters, 659.)

Delaware adopted the common law, in its entirety, only as to property. South Carolina adopted it generally, but its constitutional court held in 1817 that the act adopting it, "as it has been practically construed, contained rather a privilege than a command to adopt the common law, except in its great and leading principles; and we have in effect adopted it where we thought it reasonable and just."

In another case the same court held: "We take our principles and derive our theory from the English common law. Let us regard it, but principally its reason."

In Maryland, the common law was adopted in 1776, "only so far as it could be made to fit and adjust itself to our local circumstances and peculiar institutions."

The same is true of Virginia and other colonies.

In New York, it was held in a chancery case that the ecclesiastical law of England is not a part of the common law of that country (England) and is no part of the common law thereof adopted in this state.

Kentucky derived its common law through Virginia. In a divorce case Judge Mills held: "When we adopted the common law of England, it was only so far as suited our local situation, and was compatible with the genius and spirit of our government. I would then select from it the most sound and liberal principles, and cast away not only all the maxims of ecclesiastical establishments, but doubt, and also reject, such parts as were tainted by canonical mixtures. In a word, I would say that the common law on this point [marriage] was corrupted by too long a subjection to spiritual usurpation, and that we did not adopt it into our code, and that it is not in this respect obligatory on this court."

Citations from the opinions of the courts of other states might be made to the same effect.

The convention which framed the Constitution of the United States was held when most of the colonies had adopted constitutions declaring equality of rights and religious freedom. Virginia adopted a declaration of rights June 12, 1776, which not only embraced absolute equality of rights, civil and political, but declared "all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience." The Church of England, which had been the state church of the colony, was strong enough to elect a majority of the first assembly, but Jefferson and George Mason procured the passage of a law repealing all the disabling acts, legalizing all modes of worship, and releasing dissenters from parish rates and suspending their collection. In 1784 Washington and Henry advocated a law requiring all persons to contribute to the support of some minister, but it failed. In 1785 Jefferson and Madison, aided by the dissenters, passed the religious freedom act, which abolished church rates and abrogated all religious tests.

In 1787, when the national constitution was adopted, the leading states had guaranteed religious freedom in their constitutions and placed affirmation upon the same basis as oaths. In many cases the official and other oaths omitted the words, "So help me, God."

The Constitutional Convention was composed largely of the conservative element of the colony. Yet the body of the constitution is free from any recognition of God, places affirmation upon the same footing as an oath, and in the form of the official oath of the president omits the words, "So help me, God." Religious tests were prohibited. It protected the people against church-craft, as well as against king-craft. Yet some of these states demanded a bill of rights, and that demand was framed in the form of amendments, which forever prohibited a state church and protected every man in the freedom of thought, speech, and free publication of his thoughts.

W. S. BUSH.

DRINK AND HARD TIMES.

Many besides the Rev. Dr. R. A. Tufft believe that "the poverty and depression of the day are caused by drink," but I think that it would be easy to demonstrate that there would be more of both, if it were, in some miraculous way, made impossible ever to distil or imbibe another drop of alcoholic stimulant. For instance, the closing of all distilleries and breweries would throw thousands upon thousands out of work, who would be forced by their necessities to press for employment in a labor market already overstocked, to the consequent reduction of the wages of those who have always been temperate. Moreover, sober men, who can be relied upon to come up smiling at 7 A.M. on Monday every week in the year, obtain higher wages because there are so many who are liable to be conspicuously absent just at the time they are most needed, on account of too great devotion to things spirituous. Now if sobriety should become universal it is clear that those who are now getting paid something extra on account of it would lose that advantage if none were rendered unreliable by alcohol. Therefore we see that the first result of a sweeping and lasting Prohibitionist victory would inevitably be the increasing of competition in the labor market and the eventual reduction of the wages of those who were not addicted to intemperance previous to the change. Further, the disappearance of alcohol would simply increase the supply of sober men who would further depress the labor market by seeking employment instead of remaining idle, as they did while they were subjects of King Alcohol, and as there is already a surplus of sober labor, it does not require the services of a native of Connecticut to guess that the result of this increase of competition would be the reduction of wages. Now if there were a redundancy of work instead of workers, there would be some truth in the claim of the Rev. Tufft and his mistaken co-believers; but so long as sober men are compulsorily idle while willing and anxious to work, it is seen to be highly probable that the reverend gentleman has been no more careful in regard to finding out the truth about Prohibition than he was in ascertaining the probable or possible truth of theology.

How pertinent, then, is your comment that "a country big enough to feed and clothe the world ought to have a better excuse to offer for hard times than the intemperance of one per cent. of its inhabitants." Our country has got a better excuse than the intemperance of one per cent. of the people, and it is that poverty, so far as it is involuntary, is caused by the fact that something like one per cent. of the people own all the land, if we deduct those who are, through mortgages, merely nominal owners. If this one per cent. would take to liquor and relinquish their hold on the land, poverty would soon disappear, because then it would be possible for those who are now unable to find work to employ themselves on the ownerless land; and that there is enough of it now lying absolutely unused to abolish the poverty of every willing worker is apparent to anyone who has no selfish interest in not seeing the truth. But as there is no probability that those who now hold land idle (by virtue of paper titles and the ignorance of those who really own it) will relinquish the advantage they have so long held, it behooves those who must live on the earth until their wings have developed sufficiently to enable them to pass to that Elysium of happiness and harps which theology promises, to devise or adopt some already devised method of regaining their right to the planet upon which they were born, and to which they have the same natural right as have those who have a legal right to demand the lion's share of all they produce as a condition precedent to allowing them to produce at all. Such an instrument we have already at hand in the single tax on land values. By this method we could stop the advance of the land speculator and force him to release his grasp on the vacant land he is holding for a rise. This releasing of natural opportunities would make it possible for all who want work to find it, and then could be enforced the biblical assertion that "he who will not work, neither shall he eat." Then if we are stopped by the pitiful tale of the able-bodied mendicant who claims to be hungry through inability to find employment, we shall know that his tale is a baseless fabrication and we can proceed calmly and with unharmed mind upon our way, leaving that athletic beggar to hang himself on that horn of his dilemma which requires him to go to work, or on that other hook which demands the intervention of a rope to be fully utilized. Such a consummation might possibly be unpleasant to the reverends, but that fact seems not to offer any valid reason for postponing that day upon which all will be industrious, save those who are physically exempt. Inaugurate the single tax; then let hunger do its perfect work in the elimination of beggars, theological or otherwise.

E. O. ROSCOE.

VIEWS OF A NATIONALIST.

Seeing some articles in FREETHOUGHT on Nationalism and the advancement of the human family in general, I thought, being a workingman, I would write a declaration of principles that I believe would be good for my kind.

I would have all those large buildings that are now erected for the purpose of grinding out superstition converted into lecturing halls where men of science and humanity would inform the people how to make an honest living and treat each other as human beings and brothers and sisters. I would stop all immigration of laboring people, from every country. If a man owned over five hundred acres of land at the time of his death I would have it go back to the public domain for the use of children yet to come. I would have protection for those industries where there is competition of cheap labor in Europe. I would have the government own all the railroads, telegraph lines, and water works. In fact, I believe in Nationalism. I also understand that Nationalism to be a success should be for the universal world. But you can never have "Looking Backward" until there is a foundation to start with, and then if the world sees it is a success it may adopt Nationalism.

By stopping the pope-ridden immigration that is now flooding our country, intelligence and free schools will outgrow superstition in our own country in a few years, and workingmen will begin to learn what honestly belongs to them, which is all they produce, except the necessary support of the unfortunate, which humanity demands should be a comfortable living. I believe licensing all kinds of business as nearly all cities do is a scheme to make the poor man pay the rich man's taxes. In regard to the liquor question, it must either be right or wrong to sell liquor. If right, the license should be no more than any other business. If it is wrong it should be stopped. Now the government receives a large revenue from the manufactories, the cities where Christians abound receive a large license, and the man who drinks the decoction they license to be sold is also fined for drinking it. So it is a money-making business all the way through. These high-license men appear hypocritical. Pretending to be moral, they claim that selling liquor is a crime. But it becomes a lawful business with their consent, if the consumers of liquor will pay their taxes for them.

1122 Wood st., Oakland.

FRANK M. COBURN.

THE SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE OF THE EXISTENCE OF THE SOUL.

BY DR. JEROME A. ANDERSON.

II.

Taking up now the

BIOLOGICAL ARGUMENT,

We note that as physiology explains the conditions but not the cause of human existence, in like manner biology explains the conditions, but by no means the cause of life in general. A brief study at once convinces one of the general correspondence between man as an individual and nature as a whole. Both have a threshold of consciousness, which in both is constantly being displaced under the law of evolution. Neither exhausts its object, which is itself. Both must therefore have a higher consciousness which includes the lower. Each prophesies unlimited potentialities of future development.

And, truly, a biological process is only possible by means of a higher or transcendental consciousness in nature. If we take any division—the vertebrates, for example—we shall find the idea always precedes in time its evolution in matter. The intention of nature is plainly foreshadowed in the notochord which still persists in some of the lower vertebrates; and the prophecy of this insignificant notochord finds its realization in the magnificent elaboration of the vertebral column, with its cranial enlargement, muscular, nervous, arterial, lymphatic, digestive, and other accessory systems, which together constitute the body of the being declared to be “a little lower than the angels in heaven.” Yet science would have us believe that this wonderful result is due alone to the blind groping of natural forces under the impelling influence of unintelligent law! Nay, if there were no other proof of there being a higher consciousness in nature and in man it is shown beyond all doubt by the very facts upon which Materialistic science chiefly relies—those of evolution. No building was ever yet constructed whose model or design was not previously present in the consciousness of its architect, and no biological process ever took place which was not previously present in the mind of a higher intelligence.

Our feeble sense consciousness is a limitation of nature's processes; not an enlarging or divulging of them. There are more things than senses. We have no organs for perceiving magnetism, nor electricity. And the things we do perceive are converted into perception; as vibration into sound and color.

Since we find evolution continuously displacing the threshold of consciousness in nature, we have a perfect right to assume that the same process is taking place in man. And biology plainly shows that for the whole of organic nature, including man, there are two increasingly unequal divisions; that part which sense organs contact, and that portion which is transcendental to or beyond sensuous perception. For an oyster most of the world is transcendental; that man's consciousness is very much widened in area does not by any means imply that he is in contact with the whole. Step by step, the higher, world consciousness, or Over Soul, of Emerson, has evolved organs capable of relating the inner and potential consciousness to larger and larger areas of contact with external things. The design in each instance has preceded the construction of the thing designed. If the brain, for example, were developed by blind force alone, how could it have been adapted for future needs? Yet all the functions of the human mind, all its god-like faculties, were foreseen and provided for in anticipation by the first swelling which, at one extremity of an otherwise indistinguishable line of nerve substance, prophesied and promised the magnificent development of will, intellect, and reason, emotion and intuition, which manifest through the brain of a Spencer or a Shakspeare to-day. And the unbroken sequence of design and thought lie before our eyes all our lives, while we, poor fools, believe that fortuitous chance caused force to take this direction; that all this is the sum of the molecular and chemical action, of blindly working law.

“O where is the sea, the fishes cried,
As they swam its crystal clearness through;
We have heard of old of its ebbing tide,
And we long to bathe in its waters blue!”

This movable and moving threshold of the consciousness, then, appears in all nature. It can only be the result of two causes. Either an inner and a higher consciousness is shaping and transforming matter, with a definite and intelligent end in view, or it is the result of blindly-acting law, working, as we have said, under the despotic need of unintelligent force. And if we are compelled to admit an inner and a higher consciousness in any single effort of nature, the fortress is taken; for step by step we shall be forced to admit a higher consciousness in all; and the question as to whether man has a higher consciousness, or soul, is once more answered by the biological argument in the affirmative. And again we are driven to the conclusion that since this higher consciousness is not dependent in any way upon the matter, which it shapes to further its ends—as a potter might—for its continued existence, then it does not and indeed can not die upon the death or transformation of the latter. On the contrary, analogy points to the fact that, as a man wears out and casts aside as useless many tools or garments in the course of the labors of a life, so his higher ego must wear out and renew many bodies in the course of its infinite pilgrimage. Here once again the fact of and reason for reincarnation meets us squarely as the logical result of our biological investigation. And as the universe is the creation of its Higher Self, or the Creative Logos, of St. John, and which, though as spirit infinitely higher, still as the Absolute includes also its lower self, or matter, so man's lower personality is the creation of his higher ego, which includes without being limited in any manner by it, except perhaps as a mechanic might be limited by more or less perfect or imperfect tools.

Passing now to the

SCIENTIFIC ARGUMENT

We may consider ourselves as fairly within the territory of our greatest enemy. For science has always been the unrelenting opposer of new ideas, as the new ideas in their turn have always been the deadliest foes of the old. It was scientific authority, as expressed in a little body of men, who, having mastered the externals of existing thought, and thus filled the measure of their own capacity, railed when Harvey asserted that the blood circulated through the human body; when Stevenson foretold the speed and usefulness of steam vehicles; and so on through a long list of similar counts, and which to-day looks on with solemn discontent as the birds float through the air in direct violation of the laws of physics, dynamics, and gravitation. For the same force, applied in the same manner, and attached to the same proportion of weight, when put into a “scientific” machine refuses to fly. And yet no field is so full of proofs of the existence and functioning of a divine soul, as that found in the marvelous collection of facts, and deductions of design and intelligence therefrom, which is the result of scientific inquiry.

The heart of the dispute with science is as to whether mind, or spirit, is the effect of body, or body the effect of mind. At the very outset of this contention, science must admit that there are as many indications of the one as there are of the other. Then what is the plain and reasonable inference? Why, that both have a common cause. But science shies at this proposition, and refuses to accept anything as a cause which it can not weigh nor measure.

But the dualism of mind and body is only a special case of the dualism of matter and force. All force must of necessity have a material basis, and all matter must have force as well as consciousness as aspects. The sides of the triangle are equal.

That man has a higher consciousness or ego the physiological argument has already fully shown. Then it follows that the transmission of this subjective energy is demanded by the law of force conservation working in harmony with that of evolution. Thus we see that the higher ego is directly pointed out and connected with the lower by the two greatest generalizations of modern science—the conservation of force and the law of evolution. Either subjective energy, intellect, emotion, will, etc., are stored up in and transmitted under the law of force conservation by a higher ego, such as we have shown to exist, or this law as well as that of evolution is violated; for intelligence can only be conserved by intelligence, and its evolution thus lies necessarily along its own, or subjective lines. In other words, the cause must be equal to the effect: and intelligence can only be the creation of and transmitted by intelligence. One sees at once how immense must be the waste of energy manifesting as intellect or intuition, if the process of its evolution has to be begun anew with each new babe born on earth, to be again cut short by death when perhaps at its very highest evolutionary activity, unless that energy is carried forward from personality to personality by means of the repeated reincarnation of the higher ego. And again we meet reincarnation as the very breath of life of the scientific generalizations of force conservation and evolution.

There is another point overlooked by science. For intelligence to supervene upon unintelligent matter, under the play of blind force, demands as great an effort of the imagination, aided by "faith," too, as the exploded theological theory of "creation out of nothing." In the face of this, science has ever sought to find the source of intelligence in some nook or by-way of matter; forgetting that matter only shows the evidence of the presence of intelligence, not its underlying source. The key to the confusion lies in the fact of unconscious thought. Thought and organization go on side by side unconsciously to us until our plane, or that of self-consciousness, is reached, when we suddenly become aware of both a thinking and a conscious principle within us. This does not imply that either or both were absent on the planes below us. Remember that thought, as we have pointed out, comes into our minds ready made. This must mean that when we think we simply become conscious of nature's thoughts on the plane of self-consciousness. Were our consciousness sufficiently evolved we could contact other and higher planes, both psychic and spiritual, as well as the lower ones through which we have come. Our higher ego is conscious on lower planes, as shown by self-prescribing, etc., and, in varying degree, on higher, as proven by clairvoyance and prophetic vision.

Thus we arrive by pure, logical deduction at the theosophic truth that matter in all its shapes and forms is the result of thought, and not the converse, as claimed by scientists. Matter is crystallized spirit; or thought expressed in material forms.

When man's consciousness is limited to the coarser stimuli transmitted by his physical senses, it can only function on the physical plane, and in this condition it is termed the lower ego, or personality. When these senses are suspended by sleep or death, his consciousness functions on an interior and higher plane, until again aroused, by awakening, in the one case, and by reincarnation in the other, to the old physical stimuli. This latter consciousness we term the higher, or the true ego, because it is not limited by its physical envelope, is untouched by the changes of state we term birth and death, and transmits its constantly increasing increment of wisdom and intelligence from body to body by means of its reincarnation. The threshold of consciousness is the dividing line between the higher and lower ego. As the physical senses and sensitiveness constitutes this threshold, each man has of necessity a differing one, both higher and lower, from all other men. Taken together, they represent the sum of the wisdom and knowledge his ego has acquired through its series of rebirths, or reincarnations. The lower alone is limited by the particular body it is inhabiting. The body, again, is the result of the law of cause and effect, running through the affinities which govern the selection of the new body, and which Theosophy terms "karma," or sequence, or the unvarying succession of cause and effect on all planes, physical, psychic, and intellectual.

If it be asked why man's personal consciousness has not yet reached the point where he is sensible of these finer forces, it is answered that the coarser the force, the quicker the evolution of the organ to express it. The finer, more spiritual forces have not yet had biological time to evolve organs, especially as it would seem that this evolution must largely consist in rendering more delicate and sensitive those man now possesses. By these the eye and ear are not so much referred to, as analogous organs for psychic and spiritual perception, which man now possesses—at least in a rudimentary condition.

Man's faculties are complete or they are incomplete. If complete, further investigation is in soul power; if incomplete, biological. And since a single Archæopteryx, in the Solenhofer slate, was deemed by science sufficient evidence to prove the descent of birds from reptiles, surely the immense amount of available testimony, in the directions we have pointed out, ought to be sufficient to satisfy even a scientist that we have a higher ego, or soul, which functions quite independently of the body, and is therefore not subject to the bodily limitations of birth and death. In this higher ego is the real life, the true consciousness. The lower is but the bundle of sense organs through which we gather experience and wisdom on the material plane, to which we are at present limited. This higher ego represents all that we have become since we assumed control of our own destinies. Being spiritual in its essence, it is of course greatly limited in expression when incarnated in a gross material body, such as we now possess. But it is ever seeking to guide and control its lower self through the spiritual suggestions which we know as conscience.

From the

RELIGIOUS STANDPOINT

this inquiry into the nature and possibilities of a higher ego is amply justified. Blind faith alone fails; creeds are but idle paterings and empty sounds; man must know his destiny, or the incentive to upward exertion is largely paralyzed. Death cannot transport us where we are not now; it cannot act as a kind of moral filter, that in some miraculous way will remove the impurities of our lower nature, and fit us for habitation in some high or "heavenly" sphere. The chain of life is formed of continuous links. We have become what we are by an infinite series of past lives; we have to work out our future destiny by an infinite series of lives to come. Here, where we are struggling in the bonds of matter is our only "hell;" the biological process, our sole punishment, and "heaven" our release from it, either temporarily by death, or wholly, through our evolving beyond biological necessities. The warning voice of conscience is simply the voice of our higher ego, speaking as the result of actual experience and wisdom. And because the seat of conscience is of necessity in the higher ego, it therefore seems to us as though it came from some outside source, when it is in reality our true self vainly endeavoring to guide and control the coarse and unwieldy physical machine, to which it finds itself karmically attached, and with which it is therefore so closely inter-related that the one must ever react upon the other. Out of this action and reaction grows the real battle of life; the tide turning now this way and now that. Submission to the higher self is our only hope, yet so strong is the lower that it refuses to be controlled, too often to its utter destruction. The Bible account, or Book of Judgment, is only the memory of this higher ego, in which is stored up the record of every thought, word, or deed of each of the personalities it ever informed.

In summing up the evidence, then, we find physiology, biology, psychology, and philosophy all requiring a higher ego to satisfy their respective phenomena, and all their agreements and disagreements harmonized by this common factor. Yet all, while equally and emphatically testifying to the presence of this higher ego, or soul, still force upon us one inevitable deduction. We are the creators of ourselves; the arbiters of our own destinies. Still, as human life is the type of all, so in the childhood of our individualization as human beings, we were helped and guided by the perfected humanities of former earths. But the period of responsibility has long since arrived, and we are compelled by karma to take the reins of our own chariots, even though our driving be as disastrous as the would-be charioteer of the sun, in the ancient myth. And yet we are not entirely bereft of guidance and assistance, if in the pride of our self-assurance we do not spurn the offer. There are those who ever watch over humanity, and in the hour of our greatest need, aid is always proffered. He must be but a blind student of history who does not see something more than mere coincidence in the opportune interference with dangerous ethical tendencies, even within historical times. As instances, note that when the Jewish religion became a brutal, self-sacrificing formality, and the Roman, mere Phallicism, Christ appeared. When Greece departed from the pure and elevating philosophy of her older initiate philosophers, and became sodden with Materialism, the Alexandrian philosophers came to the rescue. When Brahminism became corrupt and formal, Buddha stood forth to stay the muddying torrent. When Catholicism offered a mere market place for the sale of indulgences, the mighty monk, Luther, arose. And last but not least, when the scientific Materialism of this nineteenth century utterly routed the already demoralized and disorganized army of sectarian "money-changers," occupying the temples of religion, thereby flooding the world with pessimism and despair, when anxious eyes strove in vain to penetrate the gloom which shrouded the grave, the source of all these timely helps stands forth in its own proper person, and Theosophy illumines the dark places of humanity's despair.

This, then, is the mission of this science, philosophy, and religion—to combat Materialistic science with its own weapons; to meet philosophy, astronomy, biology, geology, and all their congeners and collateral sciences upon the territory of their own facts; to prove that spirit, or intelligent consciousness, underlies and is the source of all their phenomena; and thus to restore to humanity that of which they have robbed it, the belief in a soul, and the promise of a future existence.

CALL ON GOD.

Plato says: "There are few men so obstinate in their Atheism whom a passing danger will not reduce to the acknowledgment of the divine power."

This may have been a fact in Plato's day, but the world moves, and myths and fables are outgrown. Witches, fairies, and gods are swept away by reason's light. To-day there are thousands and thousands who in the direst extremity would no more think of calling out the name of God than they would of Jupiter or Mumbo Jumbo. Every year adds to the number of the enfranchised. Every year puts some old myth away with the has-beens. Every year builds on broader and sounder foundations. We are learning day by day to become more and more self-dependent. To know the good we seek, we must earn. We do not pray for daily bread, but work for it. We do not pray for forgiveness of sin, but strive to overcome evil with good. We are learning that what is has come as an inheritance of the past, and is inevitable. We are learning the futility of punishing, and the beauties of kindness, mercy, and justice. We see that no God has ever cursed or saved; that all that is has developed from matter and could not be otherwise than as it is. The same powers or forces that cause the glories, the goods, and the beauties combine under other circumstances to form the base, the mean, and the vile. Once we realize there is no design, the call upon a designer is impossible. Ignorance creates gods; science destroys them.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Snowville, Va.

THE Freethought Publishing Company has published Samuel P. Putnam's "Religious Experience." It makes a neat little volume of 101 pages, and is interesting from beginning to end. In it the author pleads guilty to having been converted to the orthodox religion and to having preached it from the pulpit. His confession will be recognized as true by all who have experienced that species of hypnotism known as "conversion." It coincides materially with a narrative of my own, were I endowed with the magnificent power of expression of the Secular Pilgrim. Many of Mr. Putnam's admirers will no doubt be delighted to read the history of his emancipation from superstitious thralldom and the concise account of his reformation. Freethought is to be congratulated on having in its ranks so able a man, and one who is acquainted with all the tricks of the trade of theology. Send twenty-five cents for this interesting book to the publishers, 838 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal.—Lucifer.

I THINK even if the creeds, from the so-called "Apostles'" to the so-called "Athanasian," were swept into oblivion, and even if the human race should arrive at the conclusion that whether a bishop washes a cup or leaves it unwashed, is not a matter of the least consequence; it will get on very well. The causes which have led to the development of morality in mankind, which have guided or impelled us all the way from the savage to the civilized state, will not cease to operate because a number of ecclesiastical hypotheses turn out to be baseless. And, even if the absurd notion that morality is more the child of speculation than of practical necessity and inherited instinct, had any foundation; if all the world is going to thief, murder, and otherwise misconduct itself as soon as it discovers that certain portions of ancient history are mythical, what is the relevance of such arguments to anyone who holds by the Agnostic principle?—Professor Huxley.

In Reply to Mr. Reynolds.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Will you kindly give me space in your esteemed paper on behalf of the founders of the Assembly of Progress, to correct the erroneous statements made by Mr. C. B. Reynolds, in regard to the Assembly of Progress, in your issue of July 12.

Had all your readers a copy of the constitution and laws of the Assembly of Progress, no reply to this unjust attack would be necessary from me; and from the statements made by Mr. Reynolds I am charitable enough to believe that he himself has never read a copy of the constitution and laws governing the Grand and Subordinate Assemblies of Progress, else he would not have written as he did. But, inasmuch as constitutions and circulars have not been so freely distributed as thought by Mr. Reynolds, few of your readers have had an opportunity to read the laws governing the Order, and have no means of knowing the objects, purpose, and business principles upon which it is based, and therefore may be misled by Mr. Reynolds's communication, unless his erroneous statements are corrected. Mr. Reynolds says:

"Seven hundred members at $6 per year, $4,200; but there is also membership fees, $5 from males, $3 from females, not less than $3,000 more; over $7,000 with the hope of $10,000 for doing business of society the first year, $20,000 the second year, and $100,000 a year if ever the membership reaches ten thousand."

This statement is intended to lead the reader to believe that the officers of the Grand Assembly receive for their own use fifty cents per month from each member, and $5 for each male and $3 for each female member on initiation. But this is a mistake—all wrong, every word of it. The fifty cents per month paid by the members is what is known as the sick and funeral benefit fund, and is paid to sick members at the rate of $5 per week, and, in case of death, is paid to the legal representatives of the deceased, and not one dollar of it is applied to the use or benefit of any of the officers of the Grand Assembly (see Constitution and Laws of the Assembly of Progress, pages 28, 29, and 30), and the initiation fee of $5 for males and $3 for females, referred to by Mr. Reynolds, is paid into the treasury of the respective Subordinate Assemblies, for their sole use and benefit, to pay their hall rents for their meetings, and such other expenses as may be incidental to the organization, and not one dollar of it, except the charter fee, is ever paid to the officers of the Grand Assembly.

This disposes of Mr. Reynolds's $7,000 for the first year, $10,000 for the second, and $20,000 for the third year, "for doing business of society," as Mr. Reynolds was pleased to put it.

Mr. Reynolds makes a serious mistake in the amount to be paid by each member to the officers of the Grand Assembly for the running expenses of the organization. The amount to be paid by each member to defray the necessary expenses of the Grand Assembly is a per capita tax of $1 per annum for each member, instead of $6, as stated by Mr. Reynolds, making a difference of $5 in $6. Mistakes like this would prove fatal to the banking business. The fees charged by the Grand Assembly for charters and supplies for the formation of new assemblies is $100. This amount is charged for the charter and supplies furnished by the Grand Assembly as provided by the constitution (see page 24), and to defray the expenses of organizing officers who may be either members of the Grand Assembly, or members of any of the respective Subordinate Assemblies, deputized for that purpose by the Grand Perfect. Surely Mr. Reynolds will not insist that an officer of the Assembly can travel, bear his own expenses, and spend his time for nothing in the organization of assemblies, any more than a lecturer can travel, bear his own expenses, and work for nothing.

After furnishing the charter supplies, paying for the transportation, and paying the organizing officer, there is less than five per cent of the $100 charter fees received by the Grand Assembly, and the only source of revenue now provided by the constitution and laws of the Order to defray the expenses of the Grand Assembly are a per capita tax of fifty cents upon each member semi-annually, and what profit there may be in furnishing needed supplies to the Subordinate Assemblies; and the amount of supplies needed by the Subordinate Assemblies, after the charter supplies have been furnished, would be so limited that at a ten per cent profit, which is the profit charged by the Grand Assembly, in all reasonable probability it would not amount to more than $2 to each assembly per annum. And it is a matter of grave doubt with the officers of the Grand Assembly whether the sources of revenue provided by the laws of the Order will be sufficient to pay the actual cost of printing and binding books, formularies, circulars, and purchasing other supplies, correspondence, and the various incidental expenses attending the organization for the next two years; and at that time the officers of the Grand Assembly are chosen from among members of the various Subordinate Assemblies.

Thus it appears from the facts that the statements and insinuations made by Mr. Reynolds of "fat jobs," "the division of spoils," etc., by the managers, as Mr. Reynolds is disposed to call the originators of the Assembly of Progress, are without the slightest foundation, and I consider such an attack by a Liberal very unkind, in the inception of an organization founded in the interest of the cause of Freethought and liberty, and particularly so by one who, from his statements, has never read the constitution and laws governing the Order.

The business and beneficiary workings of the Order are based upon the same principles as those adopted by those old and standard societies, such as the I.O.O.F., A.O.U.W., Royal Arcanum, and Independent Order of Foresters, and the monthly mortality assessment upon death is fixed upon the same basis, not taken from theory but from the long and actual experience of those societies. And while our rate of death assessment is just about the same as those societies named (see table, Constitution and By-laws, page 17, and compare), our initiations are much less than in any of the orders named, and our sources of revenue much less than those of other orders, and yet I have heard of none of them wherein any of the managers grew rich out of the fat jobs and division of spoils.

But the facts are, the Assembly of Progress has been organized by men who are Liberals and have been members of other benevolent societies, and are therefore somewhat acquainted with the work, and in founding this organization they have been actuated by none but the best motives, with a view to form an organization that would become general, wherein Liberals could unite together and advance the cause of truth and freedom undisturbed by superstition and pledges of faith so common to the orthodox creed; and the Assembly of Progress is gaining and growing and will gain and grow in numbers, notwithstanding the opposition by the so-called religious world, and the jealousies, now and then, of a cold Liberal.

J. M. VOSS.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Mr. Luce Takes a Drop.

FRIEND GEORGE MACDONALD: It is so seldom that the great Jehovah gets his work in on the Infidel when he has so many of his own family to wreak vengeance on, that a mismanagement on his part should be chronicled with the many thousand other mistakes and absurdities recorded in his holy nightmare. My brother-in-law, Mark Beal, and myself have had the sad experience of demonstrating to our entire satisfaction the fact of Newton's discovery by the breaking of our swinging stage, precipitating us a distance of thirty feet and landing us with such suddenness as to stop a clock in the adjoining house and sour the water in a passing milk wagon, as well as severely, though I hope not fatally, injuring our internal organs, together with making it very disagreeable for us to recline in a sitting posture for some weeks to come. Our want of mustard-seed faith in providence probably saved us from instant death; while with our abundance of faith in kind and consoling friends and skilled medical assistance, together with your fervent prayers, we hope within a few weeks to turn the other cheek or continue retaliating. However, in the mean time mail me Big and Little Casino [Truth Seeker and FREETHOUGHT] until I am able to call for them myself.

San Francisco.

FRED S. LUCE.

Nautically Put.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Harriet Beecher Stowe says: "The Christian world, just now, is like a ship that is tacking. It has lost the wind on one side and not quite got it on the other."

It is reasonable to suppose she refers to the old gospel ship. Do you think her sails will ever fill again? I don't think they will. She has missed stays; we see her lying, sails flapping, dead in the wind. A moment later we see her trying to wear ship. We see her trying to back round and make her crooked theology agree with science. She never can. She is a doomed ship. She is fast drifting into the breakers and will soon be broken up.

Now just cast your weather eye to windward and see the good ship Infidel as she walks away from a lee shore. She is a good ship, well officered and has an able crew. All is harmony on board. Our skipper's name is Science; first and second officers, Truth and Justice. My name is Dennis. I'm the last man on deck in the second mate's watch. My watch is on deck now. When the officer of the deck deems the tack run out, his order is to stand by the braces. Every man on deck is at his post; not a sound will be heard until the officer of the deck breaks the silence with his "hard alee, let go and haul." Down goes the helm; the yards swing to their places; the ship goes about with a merry bound, and bows away on the other tack. She cocks her weather eye into the wind and seems to say, as with a sarcastic smile, "I am almost as fleet as the devil." Now this good ship, as she sails away with the torch of Reason in her maintop, is bound to drive superstition from the seas.

DENNIS.

The Farmer and Short Hours.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see that Mr. J. C. Weybright is still in the field against me. I should have been willing to let the matter rest, but since Mr. Weybright calls upon me by innuendo to show that Mr. Ingersoll is wrong in regard to what he says on the labor question, I will inform him that if he was a farmer, and hired help, he would be forced to the dilemma that either he was uncivilized, or else Mr. Ingersoll was wrong. At present prices of produce and rates of wages, there is hardly a farmer in the United States who could afford to hire men working eight hours a day. Their labor could not possibly benefit the farmer as much as he would have to pay them. Yet are they on that account uncivilized? I doubt it. I have the highest regard for Mr. Ingersoll's opinions. I often admire his giant intellect, his powerful reason, and his social habits. But, as I said in my former article, "we can only form a correct judgment in regard to things with which we are familiar;" and since Mr. Ingersoll has not seen every phase of life his judgment must necessarily be wrong some times.

I have no doubt Mr. Weybright's ideas are to a great extent my own, but our dispositions are dissimilar. Mr. Weybright discontentedly looks at the flowers in other people's gardens, while I contentedly enjoy the flower I find by the wayside, and suck its golden sweets.

Since the world is not as we would like to have it, let us make the best of everything as we find it, and we will improve the world by doing so and be happier for it. But, for all things, let us deal in facts, face the music, and discard all sentimentalism.

ROBERT GUNTHER.
Eureka, Cal.

Putnam's Experience.

To the Editors of Freethought:

A perusal of the first pages of Putnam's Religious Experience reminded me of Anthony Froude's "Nemesis of Faith," and, like it, I consider Putnam's Experience a valuable addition to religious literature which should be read by every minister of the "gospel" of emotion, which its pages so clearly demonstrate the Christian religion to be. However, I am pleased to say that its final pages record entirely different conclusions to those arrived at by Richard Markham, the hero of Froude's "Nemesis."

Putnam lands on the crest of the tidal wave of scientific Freethought; Markham, in the trough of the sea of despond and faith. I trust its sale will be large, both on account of its matter and as a deserved encouragement to the talented and industrious author.

W. F. FREEMAN.
Stockton, Cal. 386 Ophir st.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Summerville.....	Aug. 2, 3, 4	Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16
Heppner.....	Aug. 4, 5, 6	Davenport.....	Aug. 17, 18, 19
Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11	Colville.....	Aug. 22, 23, 24
Rosalia.....	Aug. 13	Buckley.....	Aug. 29
Plaza.....	Aug. 14	Puyallup.....	Sept. 5, 6, 7

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoe maker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bouesteele, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st.

Rapp & Debarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st.

The Social, 1037 Polsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PORTRAITS

[Enlarged and Finished in Pastel and Crayon.] First-class work at reasonable prices. Orders and Correspondence solicited. Satisfaction guaranteed. F. C. Baxter & Co., 432 Sutter st., San Francisco.

A THOUGHTLESS YES.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Price, 50 c.

Address Freethought

838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.

Address The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

THE Wilson Cancer Hospital,

OAKLAND, CAL.

Established in 1886.

Drs. G. H. and M. D. STOCKHAM,

The only Institution for the especial treatment of Cancer, and other humors, on the Pacific Coast. Address as above to 765 Thirteenth Street.

A pamphlet on "The Causes and Treatment of Cancers," containing epitomy of the treatment will be sent on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps by the above, or at this office. 4t29

Washington Secular Union.

Mr. C. B. Reynolds forwards the following list of contributions which he has received for the Secular defense fund:

R. A. Brown, Lynden,	$ 5.00
via C. C. Glenn, Montesano,	10.50
via Jas. Jarrell, Stella,	6.00
via Jacob Drissler, Wallipa,	18.00
R. M. Stinder, St. Louis, Mo.,	1.00
C. F. Charlis, Dallas, Texas,	1.00
Y. M. Sutton, Dallas, Texas,	1.00
Dr. D. M. Angus, Tacoma,	1.00
Horace Brown, Walkerville, Mont.,	2.00
B. F. Brown, Olympia,	5.00
F. A. Day, Costano, Ia.,	20.00
John Gronow, Seattle,	2.00
P. Jensen, Davenport,	1.00

Total received to date, July 31, 1890, $73.50
If any have remitted not here acknowledged please write me at once.

C. B. REYNOLDS Sec.

2104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

Another Pioneer Gone.

Died, July 6, 1890, the Rev. Abraham E. Garrison, aged 69 years, 11 months, and 20 days. He was born in Ohio July 17, 1810, moving to Indiana, where he was married to Margaret Miller, in 1829. Was converted and united with the M. E. church the same year, and licensed to preach in 1830. He came to Oregon in 1846. Arriving in Yamhill county in the winter, he settled on his donation land claim two miles west of Amity, where he died. He was a good man, respected by his neighbors, faithful to his God, and loyal to his church. As a preacher, he was above the average. He was the father of fourteen children, ten living, who, with thirty-three grandchildren, twenty-four great-grandchildren, mourn a loving father. His funeral was conducted by the writer, in the Baptist church at Amity July 7. The house was crowded with sorrowing friends, who furnished a great many nice flowers for the occasion, following the example he has set for many years, furnishing many flowers for such occasions. Bro. Garrison died as he had lived—in the faith of the gospel, the last words uttered by him being, "Come, come, Jesus, come soon."—J. H. in the Yamhill County Reporter.

[The Rev. Mr. Garrison was the father of one of the active Liberal ladies of McMinnville, Or., Mrs. Martha J. Olds, at whose request the above obituary notice is printed in FREETHOUGHT. We are informed that Mr. Garrison was greatly disturbed over the Liberal tendencies of his children, and died in great doubt as to the goodness of God being sufficient to save them.]

Where to Hang the Motto.

Minister—Here's a motto I want the eyes of my congregation to dwell upon until its words are engraved upon the tablets of the people's memory. Shall I hang it here in the center of the pulpit?

Minister's wife—Oh, no, hang it over yonder in the corner right side of the clock.

Same as Elsewhere.

Teacher—What regulates the supply of liquor in Maine?

Bright boy [who reads the newspapers]—The demand.

A Lesson from the Burro.

He stood by the fence of a mountain ranch
 A pitiful, sad-eyed burro;
 There wasn't an edible leaf or branch,
 And the alkali ground,
 For miles around
 Had never a sign of farrow.
 "Ah me!" he sighed, "I'm sad it's so,
 But life is an endless tussle;
 They've let me go in the storm and snow,
 For they know I am used to rustle.
 "I can go a day on a sardine can
 And two on a scrap of leather;
 I have lived a week on a Chinese fan,
 And it's even plain
 That I sometimes gain
 On only a change of weather.
 The lazy ones feed on hay, indeed!
 But I, who have nerve and muscle—
 They say: "He'll do; he will worry through;
 He's a wonderful brute to rustle."
 Oh, sorrowful burro, thin and sad,
 I feel to you like a brother.
 With the human race it's just as bad,
 For the tramp and shirk
 Must escape from work
 By the bountiful sweat of another.
 There are some that stand with glove in hand
 In the infinite toil and bustle;
 They sing and play, but they've lots of hay—
 They never have learned to rustle!

A Difference in Accent.

Saint Wanamaker, with a quickened conscience, rises to a question of privilege and explains to his Sunday-school that he never did anything for himself; he was elevated to the postmaster-generalship by God. That is what a good many men have been saying lately. But with more emphasis.—Bierce.

Looking Up.

Clergyman—How is Brown coming on since he failed in business? Rather down-hearted, I suppose.
 Smith—No, I think not. The last time I saw him he was looking up and trying to be hopeful.
 "Ah, I'm glad to hear that!"
 "He was trying to drink from a jug."

Journalistic Enterprise.

Permit us to introduce to you miss Hattie
 McCall, of Pennsylvania, a young miss of 16 summers, who will pick $400 worth of huckleberries this season and lift the mortgage on her father's farm. It's a little early to give this item, but we want to be ahead of all the other paragraphers, whether there are any huckleberries to pick or not.—Detroit Free Press.

Biblical Information.

Sunday-school Teacher—Who wrote the epistle to the Hebrews?
 Little Mabel—Paul, ma'am.
 Sunday-school Teacher—That is right. Now, wasn't he called Saul at one time?
 Little Mabel—Yes'm. That was his name before he was married.

Census Report.

A furious native American census enumerator (appointed, as alleged, through the influence of Governor Waterman) is said to have summed up his returns as follows: Totals in my district:
 80 Amsterdam Dutch; 63 other d—n Dutch; 44
 Irish; three white men.—Weekly Star.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
7. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
8. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illus- trated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Garduer, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concern- ing Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. Geological Sketches.
39. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History.
45. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. Illusions.
57. James Sully.
58. The Origin of Species. Two Double Numbers.
59. Charles Darwin. 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pes- tilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10 c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Daucing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The first three are single numbers, the last a double number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
75. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
76. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
77. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
78. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
79. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
80. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
81. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
82. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
83. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
84. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
85. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson
86. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
87. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
88. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
89. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No. Chas. Darwin.

90. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
91. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
92. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
93. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
94. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
95. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
96. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
97. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
98. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
99. Ultimate Piñance; A True Theory of Co-opera- tion. William Nelson Black.
100. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
101. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
102. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haekel.
103. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
104. Ultimate Piñance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
105. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
106. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
107. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evo- lution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
108. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
109. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
110. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
111. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nin- teenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
112. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applica- tions. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
113. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applica- tions. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
114. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
115. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
116. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
117. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
118. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
119. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Studer, Whympfer, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
120. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion; Part II.
121. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
122. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administra- tive Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

- JOB PRINTING,
 Especially such work as
- Letter-heads,
 - Bill-heads,
 - Programmes,
 - Envelopes,
 - Business Cards,
 - Postal Cards,
 - Tickets,
 - Placards,
 - Receipts,
 - Posters,
 - Dodgers,
 - Circulars,
 - Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.
 THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foot's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor,
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY
Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS & TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no batter sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entirely satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,
Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,
VINELAND, N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm large profits, quick sale. SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 542 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Sidney Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution: Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science.....1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization.....2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols.....4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species.....2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science......25
 American Addresses.....1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin......50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty.....1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities.....1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours.....1.75
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State......30
 First Principles.....2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc.....2.00
 Universal Progress.....2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic.....2.00
 Education.....1.25
 Organic Evolution......75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science.....1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease.....1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life.....1.75

MISCELLANEOUS.

- By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote......30
 The Distracted Young Preacher......25

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
 BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.
 404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities.
B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
 By W. R. GREG.
 Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
- 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 0
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....2 75
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
- 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....4 00
- 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....4 50
- 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....5 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....6 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm.....Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
P. PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months......75
 Three Months......50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
 12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1.00; cloth $1.50.

NOW READY

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against
LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—
causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures,
embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
538 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,

Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,

Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.

HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m. 25tf

Health AND Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.

Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.

Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer
and Herbert Spencer. $1Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache.
By M. L. Holbrook. $1.Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Ills. 50.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox
Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 centsI HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices
and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE

Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank
and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes
and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time,
therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

LIFE RENEWER

NONE
GENUINE WITHOUT THIS SIG-NATURE.

DR. PIERCE'S
GALVANIC CHAIN BELT.

PATENT. TRADE MARK.

Dr. Pierce's
Galvanic
Chain Belt is ELECTRIC guaranteed to be the latest improv-perfect Body-Battery
The electricity from instantly felt by the Wearer.

ed and only
now in use.
it can be Wearer.

This celebrated Instrument will cure, without medicine; Neuralgia, Rheumatism,
Dyspepsia, Constipation, Diseases of the Liver or Kidneys, Lame Back, Female Weakness, General Debility, Spinal Disease, Sexual Weakness, Impotency, Etc. Suspensory for men free with every Belt. N.B. The Electricity goes directly to all Weak Parts and restores them to Health and Vigorous Strength. For particulars call or send 4 cts. in stamps for sealed Pamphlet
No. 2. Address MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS
COMPY, 704 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal.
PILES. If troubled with Hemorrhoids or Piles, send stamp for Pamphlet No. 3.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without
this Trade Mark on
Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.

AN INFALLIBLE CURE

—FOR—

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,

Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica,
Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all
Kidney, Liver, and Stomach
Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C.H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and
Manufacturer, No. 40
O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S
HÆMONY will not cure.References from People Who Have Used C. H.
Webb's Hæmony.Hon. A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S. F.
Henry I. Dodge, Esq., Pres Sather Banking Co S. F.
Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.

S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco.

Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.

John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.

James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1.

Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.

Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose

Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others

who Have Been Cured by my great remedy

HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed

and shipped by Express to all parts of the world.

Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells,

Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of

BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Four

teenth street, New York,

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 32.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1890.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 9, 1890

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Things are cool and comfortable at Cobb's Hotel, John Day, when I arrive in the heat and dust from the long, mountainous journey. Mine landlord is always ready with a welcome for the Secular Pilgrim. After supper, A. Knight, the veteran of our cause in this community, and a knight indeed without fear and without reproach, found me upon the piazza in a restful mood, and we exchanged congratulations and surveyed the situation with the ardor of soldiers about the camp-fire. The flag was floating though many a weary march had been passed.

I slept well that night and the brilliant morning found me an almost new-made man. Not an ache or pain was left. Sitting at the breakfast table at a not very early hour, and glancing out of the window, the first two I saw were W. B. Davis and Major Magone. They had joined forces somewhere in the valley. With these there is no such word as fail. Major Magone denies that he is one hundred years old. I believe he is growing younger and will greet the next centennial of the republic. He owns a lake about twelve miles out, well-stocked with fish, with beautiful trees about it and a boat with the star spangled banner, and I wanted to visit this gay and festive retreat, but time would not allow. I presume that is the only place in the world where I could catch a fish.

John Day is quite a "corner" for business. All the stages pass by here and much trading is done. Here the immigrants and the miners do congregate, and the cowboy is seen.

Major Magone took me around the little city for a morning walk. In a cool, shadowy place yclept the Methodist parsonage, from which the parsons have disappeared, I found Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Ramsby. Mr. Ramsby's father is a Methodist minister, of gentle and Liberal spirit, who is not afraid to attend the Freethought meetings and shake hands with the Infidel. Him I have met in the land of Silverton. His brother, uncle to "Eph," is Maxwell Ramsby, the stalwart Liberal of Haystack. So the Methodist parsonage was the home of Freethought after all. Mrs. Ramsby is a lover of nature and depicts the scenes about here with an artist's brush. Down below, in the shining valley, are the broad acres of Mr. B. C. Trowbridge, whose house is under the majestic trees. Towards this we saunter. We find Mr. and Mrs. Trowbridge shelling peas, and we join in the "picnic." Then comes the delicious buttermilk, and a rest in the big, long room, with a look at the baby, which is about six months old. There was a temptation to stay until dinner, in this pleasant home, but a lot of work to be done in the afternoon prevented. The major wanted I should take a good look at the bull-calf, which he declared to be the handsomest he ever set eyes on since the landing of Columbus, and I think he is about right, and I hereby record the merits of that calf on the pages of FREETHOUGHT.

So the day quickly passed and evening came on and a fair attendance was at the lecture. It was the hottest day of the season, the thermometer running up to about 104. Generally it grows cool at sundown in this country, but this time the heat lasted until near midnight, and the unusual warmth prevented some from going to the lecture, for the hall was almost like an oven. However, with Ramsby and Davis and Knight as co-workers, the meeting was successfully carried on, and John Day town can be reckoned upon hereafter as a live point.

John Schmidt was present from Canyon City, and he is always ready to be in line, even if he has to walk. A few more such Liberals and Canyon City would also be a live point.

Geo. Nizely, surveyor, is still measuring the earth, but has not yet found the dimensions of the New Jerusalem.

Judge Maxey was present at the lectures. Also John Wolfinger, G. W. Dart, R. V. Bunn, J. J. Comegys, E. O. Comegys, J. Haptonstall, Chas. Timms, Edison Timms, J. D. Combs—deputy-sheriff—S. Elliott, John Shelley, Wm. Burns, etc., can be counted on.

Ramsby takes me home, and I sleep in the Methodist parsonage, but not the ghost of a clergyman haunts me, nor do I hear the whisper of a golden harp. I am well taken care of by my generous hosts, and early in the morning, after bidding good-bye to many friends, I am off for Prairie City. It is the white steeds of Davis that bear us through the glittering sunshine. The John Day valley opens upon the vision in the loveliness of summer's harvest. The Strawberry Butte, and lesser heights for miles away, wall in the green fields with sapphire splendors. The snow is on the Butte still. It has a cooling appearance, as if it would be a nice place for strawberries and cream in its lofty chamber, where winter lingers unwilling to abandon so picturesque a spot. Summer woos with wild and varied beauty, and likes to keep up a gentle flirtation with the frosty king and make him forget the thunders and the tempest. The sunshine is not quite so hot, looking at these brilliant crowns of snow that seem almost within your reach if you but cross the winding river and plunge into the dark brown forest.

Davis's calculations were just right, and we arrived at the hotel at twelve o'clock precisely with a first-class appetite for a first-class dinner, which J. W. Bates, the Liberal landlord, always gives—etceteras likewise—and the traveler can refresh himself, and when the evening comes be ready for work.

Blinn is here, driving all the way from Baker City to be present at the lecture. He is ever a jovial comrade, and has a heart for any fate. Prairie City abounds with Liberals, although many of them are willing to let things drift, trusting in the "manifest destiny" of the American Republic. Things will be all right anyway, seems to be their motto as with multitudes. But there are some staunch Liberals who believe in work, in progress, and that man is his own providence and must make the civilization which he enjoys. I have a good time at Prairie. It has the sparkle of frontier life. I lecture in the evening on "The Religious Conspiracy." Among our allies at this post are M. Howell, Dr. Prudens, Mrs. Thompson, Miss Allie Thompson, Dardoff, Robert and Wm. Tureman, Gillette, Jack Dickson, John Lawrence, Sullens, Sam French, Harding, etc. It is a pleasure to meet these friends in this fair valley, with the bright mountain sentinels on guard for liberty. Orthodoxy doesn't flourish much here, for nature is too big, too grand, too wild and lovely for the dull creeds of the past. People here look ahead and don't believe in trusting in anything but their own grit.

On Friday morning I start for Baker. A long dusty ride is before me of nearly seventy miles. Up and down the mighty hills we go. Over the clouds of dust the green forests roll away. In the splendid evening, dashing down the long arcades of shining trees, we speed into Sumpter valley, with its broad and level fields glittering with gold and green. At Sumpter Valley Hotel Miss Davis, daughter of our good friend W. B. Davis, gives welcome and cheer to the traveler, as landlady of this half-way house. The next morning we pursue the journey. We pass through the "deserted village" of Auburn, a most melancholy place. Only a few Chinamen now work the mines, for a dollar or two a day, where once thousands thronged and gathered treasures.

The first friend I met at Baker was J. L. Baisley. He looks as if the world was using him well, which is not only for his advantage, but for the advantage of Liberalism, for Baisley is always ready to do his share for Freethought, and gives as well as takes of the good things of time and fortune. I can't write of North Powder or Union this week.

I am now at Geo. A. Thompson's ranch, Antelope valley. We are going up on the hills—children and all—with ice-cream, chicken, etc., and get all the heaven there is in this world from the tops of the mountains. Thompson says he is going to treat me after the fashion of the devil; he is going to take me up into a high place and show me the glory of the earth. All of which satanic proceeding will be forthcoming in the annals of the Pilgrim.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

WANAMAKER VERSUS TOLSTOI.

When Comrade Tucker, editor of "Liberty," rebuked Mr. Moses Harman a short time ago for precipitating an "ill-timed and misplaced conflict," he probably did not know that he was himself precipitating something. But such is the fact. Comrade Tucker is the translator of Tolstoi's "Kreutzer Sonata," a weird and unwholesome story—not unwholesome in the sense that it is indecent, but unwholesome in its doctrine, because unnatural. The text of the story is in the words attributed to Christ: "But I say unto you that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart;" and Tolstoi holds that this is equally true whether the woman be the wife of the offender or the wife of another man. Whether Tolstoi is right or not is of no importance, and whether the words attributed to Christ are true or not is equally immaterial, since offenses committed only in the imagination cannot be of a sufficiently serious nature to excite alarm. But the conclusion reached by the author, that because marriage often leads to more or less trouble, therefore universal celibacy is right, is what we refer to as unwholesome; and Comrade Tucker himself confesses that the work is of a reactionary character.

The "Kreutzer Sonata," however, is to be suppressed. Postmaster-General John Wanamaker has issued an order prohibiting the work from being received at any postoffice in the United States for transportation through the mails. It does not transpire who made the complaint, but the book was submitted to the assistant attorney-general, Mr. Tyner, and he decided against its mailability.

It would be superfluous to say that the book under consideration is not obscene, or that it does not come under the provisions of the law against indecent literature. Condemnation by Wanamaker reveals nothing of the character of the prohibited book except, perhaps, that it is worth reading, and a work written with the best of motives and calculated to do good is as likely to be suppressed as one whose motives are obviously vicious and which is capable of doing great harm. The very book that Wanamaker draws his Sunday texts from would not be tolerated in any Christian family except for the superstitious veneration in which it is held. Ostensibly the so-called Comstock laws are for the suppression of obscene literature, but the way in which they are applied shows that such is not their object, but rather the suppression of literature that is obnoxious to Anthony Comstock.

Where this thing is to end nobody knows, although it is easy for anybody to guess. Our present administration went to work early, and already has three victims—Harman, Heywood, and Medium Reid, with Comrade Tucker in sight. If so much can be done in six months, where will four years of it land us? We should not be surprised in the least if the next assault were upon one of the Liberal papers, the "Truth Seeker," for instance, whose weekly cartoons must be a red rag to the orthodox bull. And if a successful drive is made at that paper, attacks upon others will follow until, in the language of Comstock, "the class of literature published by Freethinkers will be stamped out." Rather than have this occur it would be better that all laws regulating the "moral" character of mail matter should be repealed. Some literature is a nuisance, but the whole of it is not so great an evil as Comstockism.

MORE RUSSIAN METHODS PROPOSED.

That superfluous official, Mr. Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States, has recently addressed to Congress a message dealing with the question of a lottery in North Dakota, wherein he recommends that the United States mails be closed to all lottery companies. But Mr. Harrison goes further, and assuming without argument that the mails are "intended only to serve the purposes of legitimate trade and decent social intercourse," says:

"It may also be necessary to so regulate the carrying of letters by express companies as to prevent the use of these agencies to maintain communication between lottery companies and their agents or customers in other cities."

So this supervision is to be extended and an espionage exercised not only over mail matter, but express matter also; that is, the government spies may dip their hands into mail or merchandise intrusted to private carriers, and pass upon its morality; and every office of the great express companies must have a United States inspector to examine all goods received for shipment. This would create new clerkships for such of President Harrison's relatives as are not already provided for at government expense, and the money now invested in lottery tickets would be used to pay their salaries. We confess that we do not see much difference between the two methods of disposing of the people's money, except this—that nobody is obliged to buy a lottery ticket, while to pay for useless clerkships the money is forcibly extorted from citizens in the form of taxes. These gentlemen like Mr. Harrison who live on government pay should be more retiring when the question of robbing the people is up for discussion. Having feathered their own nests at public expense, they might be good enough to let the citizen spend as he chooses such funds as the landlord and tax-collector have left in his possession.

Nothing can be said in favor of lotteries, either in North Dakota or in the city of Washington, where a plaque painted by Mr. Harrison's wife was recently disposed of at a church fair by the lottery method. Lotteries are too much like land speculation, stock gambling, and political office-seeking to be morally defensible. They should be suppressed by means of the boycott, not by a system of espionage that creates bribers on the one side and spies and bribe-takers on the other.

THE editor of the "Pacific Union," in rebuking a contemporary for some reflection on the church, says:

"The man who stands in the pulpit and by the hour draws out sickening twaddle to diamond-bedecked thieves and oppressors of the poor, is no more a representative of Christianity than was Satan when he stood upon 'an exceeding high mountain' and offered Jesus 'all the kingdoms of the world' if he would 'fall down and worship him.'"

If the "Pacific Union" intends by the above comparison to deny that the popular churches accurately represent Christianity, it is in error. Christianity is whatever its exponents make it. The religion known under that name seems to have started out as a sort of Salvation Army, grown into a papacy, got to be a state religion, Catholic in one age and place and Protestant in another, but always labeled Christianity. Its votaries have been ascetics or voluptuaries, virtuous or vile, princes and paupers, yet always labeled Christians. What the doctrine of Christ was, if he had any, nobody knows, and it is not important. We find Christianity to-day, as represented by Protestantism, a social and political force, conservative and mean and reactionary. As represented by Catholicism, it is a political machine working for its own aggrandizement and the augmentation of its own power. In every form Christianity has assumed it has opposed progress and civilization. Its great body of adherents have always been at the tail-end of the procession, and this non-progressive spirit has ever been and is to-day the one distinguishing feature of Christianity, which it is every reformer's province to resist.

MANY people in San Francisco will remember the recent visit to this coast of a woman from India called Pundita Ramabai, whose mission was to raise money to rescue the child widows of India from the state of ignorance to which they are condemned by oriental customs. She succeeded in raising money to the amount of $80,000. How much progress she has made toward rescuing the widows is told by a Mr. Wilson, who has just returned from Bombay. He says:

"We found her in a two-story house of seven or eight rooms some distance from the center of Bombay. When we called she had only one pupil with her, a little widow of six years. She said that she had four or five others, but they were away on a vacation. The Pundita said that it was extremely difficult to get the children, and she expected to have to buy them from their parents. It was three or four months since she had begun her work. As to her future, she talked about renting a larger house, though she had plenty of room then evidently. She did not talk quite as enthusiastically as she did when she was here. I do not know the condition of her fund."

Mr. Wilson adds that he does not think Ramabai has accomplished much or is likely to; and that the same is true of all our foreign missionaries. The natives said to him: "Why do you send missionaries here? We don't want them, and they do more harm than good." The conclusion to be made from Mr. Wilson's report is plain enough. This woman has simply drawn $80,000 from American sympathy, and is doing nothing with it. The "pupil" found with her is doubtless her servant, as it is a well-known fact that missionaries in India rarely convert any more of the natives than they need to wait upon them.

WHEN the Freethought Society discontinued its meetings at Union Square Hall, Mrs. Johnson, the faith-healer, moved in. It is Mrs. Johnson's claim that she was at one time transported to heaven, returning to earth on a ray of light. She brought with her the ability to so imbue a quart bottle of water with virtue that it is worth a dollar, and, taken in faith, has power for the healing of nations. Dr. Dowie, the Australian fakir, denies Mrs. Johnson's pretensions and denounces her as an impostor and a Jezebel. The lady returns the compliment, and doubtless both get pretty near to the truth.

DR. HANNON, pastor of the Centenary Methodist church on Bush street, told his hearers recently that there was no use in improving the fire department because when God desired to rebuke the city he would burn it up anyway. Said he: "If ten righteous men were to be found here, San Francisco would be fire-proof." And we might add that if there were fools enough like the Rev. John Hannon it would not be safe to start a fire in a stove for fear of burning the town. We understand that Mr. Hannon is paid a good salary for preaching this sort of twaddle.

THE First Congregational church is to have a new two-thousand-pipe organ, the interior of the edifice will be renovated, ceilings frescoed, pews and pulpits upholstered luxuriously, and nothing that the decorator can do will be neglected, because the congregation is rich. Nevertheless it must cause the members of the church a feeling akin to sadness to remember that the man who built up the church, the Rev. Dr. Barrows, ran away a few weeks since under charges of immorality and has not returned with his promised vindication, though urgently requested to do so.

THE Young Men's Institute, which had its parade in San Francisco the first of the week, is to the Catholic church what the Young Men's Christian Association is to the Protestant, except that it is more military in its character. The procession last Monday was a St. Patrick's day parade in clean shirts. The motto of the organization is Pro Deo, pro Patria, which means for God and for country, though the existence of such an organization in America augurs worse for the country than for God, whatever God may have the bad pre-eminence to be.

THEY have two chaplains at the Folsom penitentiary in this state—one a Catholic, the other a Protestant—and the convicts can worship in either form they desire. To pay these two chaplains the state appropriates seventy-five dollars per month, of which the priest receives forty dollars and the parson thirty-five. The difference of remuneration in favor of the former is supposed to be justified by the fact that he has a larger congregation.

We have received from Washington, D. C., a copy of "The Working Woman" marked "Important." The leading article in the paper sets forth that Mrs. J. W. Mackay, the Bonanza Queen, was the daughter of Jack Hungerford, who once worked as a barber at the Montgomery baths down town, and that Mrs. Mackay formerly descended to the performance of housework in her husband's service at Virginia City. None of which is of any importance at all.

HAVING examined the grounds upon which Prof. Joseph Rodes Buchanan bases his prediction, mentioned in last week's FREETHOUGHT, that devastation and ruin are to overtake this country, we find that he reasons from "sciences" that he has "esoterically cultivated." This is not so bad as it would be if there were a foundation for Professor Buchanan's apprehensions.

OUR friend and subscriber, the Hon. Max Pracht, has been reappointed collector of customs at Sitka, Alaska. The "Alaskan," published at Sitka, reports that there was an "indecent, malicious, and hypocritical fight against his confirmation," but affirms that the respectable people of the territory are heart and soul with Collector Pracht.

THE "Agitator," a journal of the Young Men's Christian Association at Augusta, Me., invites the Freethought Publishing Company to forward books for "notice of commendation" in its columns. We have sent the "Agitator" Putnam's "Religious Experience" as a starter.

PROF. W. S. BELL's lecture route is outlined on another page. He will follow in the tracks of the Secular Pilgrim with the exception of those made by the latter when he was lost in the dark between Mitchell and Straub's.

COLONEL INGERSOLL and family are spending the summer at Elberon, N. J., where the daughter, Mrs. Eva Ingersoll Brown, has a beautiful cottage by the sea.

To the shame of American jurisprudence, Ezra H. Heywood has been sentenced to two years' imprisonment at hard labor.

OBSERVATIONS.

Charles Watts, after laboring hard in the lecture field in this country, went to Europe a few weeks since for recreation; but the news comes that he has been speaking at London and Birmingham. Mr. Watts's vacation is something like Artemus Ward's intermission. "We will now have an intermission of fifteen minutes," remarked Mr. Ward, in the course of an address, "during which I will proceed with my lecture."

The title of Dr. Anderson's paper, "The Scientific Evidence of the Existence of the Soul," is not a misnomer, provided that the soul is what he thinks it is. The doctor's method is scientific; that is, he takes facts, classifies them under different heads, and from their concurrent testimony draws conclusions which he regards as warranted. I have before read somewhere the statement that man alone reaches the condition of self-consciousness and realizes that he has consciousness. A man, to illustrate, knows that he is a man, but it is difficult to believe that a dog ever stopped to reflect upon the fact that he is a dog. A man knows things, and can so far compound his thought as to know that he knows; while no brute, however sagacious, can be supposed to contemplate his own wisdom. This is a good definition of the difference, in point of intelligence, between the man and the brute. The man's thought doubles on its own trail, returns to its starting-point, and contemplates that, which the dog's thought does not do. But this doesn't demonstrate a soul; it simply discovers a process.

Dr. Anderson desires that Materialists should explain how it is that those born blind see in somnambulism and dreams. No doubt the Materialists will be glad to accommodate Dr. Anderson when he convinces them that blind somnambulists and dreamers do actually see. Blind people have had objects described to them by those possessing sight, and it is quite natural that they should dream of seeing them. It is not scientific, as has been pointed out by Bacon, to suppose a cause any more wonderful than is necessary to produce the result.

I am not quite ready to admit any significance in the dreams of Messrs. de Quincy and Uxhill. No doubt De Quincy dreamed of the events of sixty years while sleeping but five minutes, but the same period can be traversed by the waking individual in less time. In the period of duration required to mention J. Robinson, the thought of a wide-awake thinker can revert to the earliest recorded event in history and proceed thence to that epoch in the future when this old hulk we tread shall be a wreck, a slag, or cinder, drifting through the sky without its crew of fools; and that feat cannot in the nature of things be exceeded in slumber. To crowd into a dream more time than actually elapses while the dream lasts is to repeat the miracle of making a three-year-old calf in a day. Time would still be time though the earth turned upon its axis twice a minute.

When Dr. Anderson says that no building was ever constructed that was not previously present in the consciousness of the architect, he states a general truth. Yet we are not warranted in concluding, hence, that man existed in some superior being's consciousness before he existed in material form. The first house was a cave, and the first man who lived in it was a good way below the popular conception of an angel. In fact, he was not much above the present dwellers in caves, which are brutes. The modern building results from an evolution from the cave to the hovel, from the hovel to the house. The Flood residence on Nob hill could not have existed in the mind of a troglodyte, and it did not exist in the consciousness of the architect who planned it until a similar structure had been carried into his mind by the physical sense of sight. If a superior mind had conceived the human race, it is reasonable to suppose that men would have been made but "little lower than the angels," as taught by the old theological doctrines, instead of beginning low down among the apes.

It strikes me that the believers in a "higher ego" are led off the track by mistaking intelligence for something else than what it is. In the first place, the mind is no "higher" than the body; and when it is defined as higher, nobody knows what the definition really means. Pressed for explanation, the Theosophist leads the inquirer farther and farther away from definite terms, and finally lands him in the track of a "ray from the absolute." As a distinguished orator has remarked, "It won't do." A ray from the absolute might answer for a skylight, but it is too unstable for the foundation even of a philosophy. What we want to do is to trace things downward for their source instead of upward. We may look elsewhere, if we wish, for our destiny, but everything about us that we know of has its root in the earth. If there is an ego separate from the personal one, it had the same source. I am ready to confess that there are two of me—one responsible, the other irresponsible; the one discreet, the other reckless; the one knowing what is the more politic, the other convinced of what is nearer right. The former has my indorsement, the latter my sympathy. There are two of me—one representing judgment, seeing how I should demean myself, recognizing the faults of me and rebuking them—that is what might be called the "higher ego." Again, there is my natural and visible self, the party that works reluctantly several days of the week under the spur of the "higher ego," but breaks away Sunday and goes to the baseball game. That is the lower ego, and I notice that it has to rustle to keep the higher ego from deserting it; in consideration of which service I like to give it as good a time and make life as pleasant for it as I can while it is on earth. Besides, according to Dr. Anderson the higher ego is a stranger—some fellow whose shade hung around the vicinity where my parents lived before the war, waiting for my advent so that he might occupy me, as it were, and subsist on the labor of my lower ego. About this stranger, and his reputation for truth and veracity, I know nothing; he may have been George Washington, or he may have been the champion liar of Kennebec county. There is nothing in my character from which to determine his identity, as I am truthful or otherwise by turns. But I have not much to thank him for. He has not the kindness to inform me when an opinion I may hold is either right or wrong, so that I am often mistaken. He does not even take the trouble to advise me, as he might easily do, that my arguments against his previous existence are fallacious.

THE UNDERSIGNED

In account with the San Francisco Freethought Society,
July 6. Received of Treasurer	$12 50
Later. Frank Butler	1 00
“ W. H. Eastman	1 00
“ C. E. Spafford	50
“ Mrs. Hakius	1 00
“ John Beaumont	1 00
“ A friend	50
“ Jos Larsen	1 00
“ Mr. Sullivan	50
“ F. Luce	50
“ Mrs. Lindal	1 00
“ H. Aiken	1 00
“ J. Schroeder	50
“ E. S. Lemme	50
“ Miss M. Krauer	1 00
“ L. Diamant	1 00
Total receipts	$24 50
July 26. Paid Prof. A. A. Saunders bal. rent of hall for May	$5 00
Rent of hall for June	20 00
Rent of hall for July	5 00
Printed monthly cards	5 00
Notices sent out	1 00
Total expenditures	$36 00
Total receipts	24 50
Due the undersigned	$11 50

A correspondent of the "Examiner" inquires how James G. Blaine came to be called the "Plumed Knight," and the editor replies:

"From the speech of Robert G. Ingersoll in the Republican National Convention at Cincinnati in 1876. In placing his name before the convention, Ingersoll compared him to Henry of Navarre, whose white plume showed where was the front of the battle, and the comparison caught the popular fancy."

The "Examiner" is responsible for the "comparison," and the popular fancy yet remains to be caught by it. Colonel Ingersoll's language was as follows:

"Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the halls of the American Congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen foreheads of the defamers of his country and the maligners of his honor."

Henry of Navarre was not in it.

Mr. Frank M. Coburn, who in a letter to FREETHOUGHT last week declared himself in fact a Nationalist, proposes some measures which I do not indorse. For instance, he says he would have all the churches converted into lecture halls, but he does not explain how that can be done. The churches belong to the people who built them, and however desirable it might be to have them converted, there is no way of effecting that end. I would propose as a substitute the conversion of the members, which can be done by inducing them to read FREETHOUGHT.

Mr. Coburn would stop all immigration of laboring people. I would not. Foreigners do many kinds of work that I would not like to do. Some of them likewise surpass Americans in skill, and we can learn much of them. Besides, they might desire to live in America, and we should give to other human beings all the rights that we claim for ourselves.

"I would have protection for those industries where there is competition of cheap labor in Europe," says Mr. Coburn. By which he means, I presume, that at every port he would station a number of licensed pirates, called custom house officials, with authority to forcibly seize and levy upon the property of passengers. Thus Mr. Coburn would exclude the poor entirely, and not admit those possessing goods until he had reduced them as near as practicable to the estate of those excluded. This seems to me to be a violation of the requirements of common courtesy. It is our first duty to conduct ourselves like gentlemen toward those who have never injured or offended us.

Argues Mr. Coburn: "It must be either right or wrong to sell liquor. If right, the license should be no more than any other business. If it is wrong, it should be stopped," presumably by law. I have come to the conclusion that we should be cautious about resisting by force anything that is not imposed by force. Under Mr. Coburn's rule somebody might remark that if the business of the Freethought Publishing Company is right it should be licensed; if not right, it should be suppressed. Only those having a physical majority on their side can afford to take Mr. Coburn's numerous positions.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The striking ironmolders are doing their part to furnish the residents of San Francisco with a man for breakfast once a week or oftener. Last Saturday evening a striker named Siebert assaulted a non-union molder in a cable car and was shot through the body, dying a few hours later. On the same evening two non-union men were mobbed and beaten on Second street, but defended themselves with a revolver until they could reach a place of safety. Sunday evening James Corcoran, a union man, began shooting at two non-union men who were looking from a window on Howard street. He was wounded in the shoulder by an officer who arrested him. In the melee John Horan, a marine engineer, received a slight wound in his chest. Sunday evening another striker loaded a large shotgun with slugs and fired through the window of the Golden State and Miners' Foundry at the corner of Clementina and First streets, where eight non-union men were gathered. Some of the men were struck, but not fatally injured. The foundries are now guarded by the police.—A Portland, Or., firm has secured a contract to do all the casting for the Pacific Union Railroad Company for the next five years.—The new cruiser, the San Francisco, built at the Union Iron Works, this city, has been tried and makes good speed.—Oakland's population is set at 51,000, which is a few hundred over Los Angeles.—The English ownership of breweries in San Francisco arouses the opposition of German and American retailers, and last week they held a mass meeting to protest against the foreign monopoly.—There were 142 deaths in San Francisco last week against 86 for the corresponding week of 1889.—The Blythe will contest has been settled in favor of the daughter, Florence.—Mrs. Terry has been defeated by an adverse decision in her attempt to show that some of the late William Sharon's estate belongs to her. The great expense of appealing will probably prevent further action at law.—Kerr, the foundryman who shot Cogan, the striker, is held under $50,000 bail for trial in the Superior court.

A blizzard devastated portions of Minnesota and South Dakota last Sunday. Near New Richland, Minn., the damage to crops and buildings is placed at $100,000.—A bridge-jumper named McCaffrey was killed at Boston Aug. 3 by dropping 130 feet into the bay. He struck on his back and sank.—The Rev. W. H. Boone attempted to poison a family of ten persons in Gordon county, Ga., and succeeded in killing three by putting rat poison in the food. All the parties are colored.—Baseball games were stopped at Buffalo and Syracuse, N. Y., last Sunday by the police. The Sunday law is responsible for the outrage.—Failure of crops has forced Kansas farmers to petition the courts "that proceedings in the foreclosure of all real-estate mortgages now pending or that may be commenced within one year from date be delayed."—As many as twenty carloads of California fruit have arrived in Chicago in one day.—Kemmler, the murderer at Auburn, N. Y., who suffered death by electricity, was described as "ignorantly pious."

Tolstoi, the Russian novelist, has been interviewed concerning Bellamy's "Looking Backward." He pronounces the work complete as a story, but a fairy tale, and says its ideas are plagiarized from Carl Marx's "Capital." He added that Henry George's "Progress and Poverty" was a superior work.—Advices from Athens state that Christians in Turkish towns are being persecuted and tortured by the Mohammedans in order to extort money.—Mecca, the holy city of the Moslems, is scourged by cholera. Five hundred deaths from the disease were reported Aug. 3.—Salvador has been victorious in its fight with Guatemala.—Persecution of Jews has been revived in Russia. The government claims that the Jews are Nihilists, which is not to be wondered at if true.

LITERARY NOTES.

The "Weekly Star" is publishing the lectures delivered by Dr. McGlynn in this city. The "Star" may be had at 429 Montgomery street for five cents per copy.

Mr. H. Wettstein, of Marengo, Ill., has sent us an extended review of Dr. Jerome A. Anderson's argument on "The Scientific Evidence of the Existence of the Soul." Mr. Wettstein appears to be unconvinced.

A picture of the Lick Observatory is the frontispiece in the Freethinkers' Magazine for August, and about a score of able writers contribute to the literary make-up of the number. Copies of the magazine are for sale at this office for 20 cents each.

Apparently the "Reconstructor," a Spiritualist paper published at Summerland in Santa Barbara county, does not favor Theosophy. The editor says: "The difference of a few hundred-subscribers will not purchase the columns of the 'Reconstructor,' to air the revived fads of oriental mysticism, thus aiding to stab to death the cause we profess to champion."

The Popular Science Monthly for August contains several valuable and interesting articles. Atkinson on the Tariff is as good as anything on that question. Henshaw's contribution on "Missions and Mission Indians in California" throws new and not very favorable light upon Jesuit practices; and "Ancient and Modern Ideas of Hell," by Frederik A. Fernald, is an important addition to religious literature.

"The Roman Catholic Church as Compared to the Great Republic" is an eight-page pamphlet by Col. H. L. Knight, one of the favorite speakers at the Freethought Society. In spite of its brevity, the pamphlet contains more meat than is found in many books of large size. Colonel Knight has been quite sick of late, and burdened with doctor's bills which we hope the sale of this little work will more than offset. It is ten cents per copy; ten copies for fifty cents. We are selling it for the benefit of Brother Knight.

"Natural Morality" is the title given by Mrs. Mary A. White to a catechism on ethical questions just published by the author. The work, which consists of 57 pages of well-printed matter, is intended to give plain and truthful definitions to natural rights and moral axioms, and to thus relieve moral science of the confusion which has heretofore resulted from making artificial obligations or duties to unknown deities paramount to the obligations which mankind owe to each other. In paper covers the work sells for 25 cents; in cloth, 50 cents. Address Mrs. Mary A. White, 1433 First street, San Diego, Cal.

THE LIBERAL CLASSICS.—The Freethought Publishing Company has for sale the publications of Mr. Peter Eckler, of New York, termed "The Liberal Classics." The books, which are well-named, are as follows: Volney's "Ruins of Empires; and the Law of Nature," with portrait and map of the Astrological Heavens of the Ancients. Pp. 248, paper 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.—"Profession of Faith of a Savoyard Vicar," by Jean Jacques Rousseau, to which is added Olive Schreiner's "Search for Truth." Pp. 128, paper 25 cents, cloth 50 cents.—"Superstition in All Ages; The Last Will and Testament of a Catholic Priest who Abjured all Religious Dogmas." By Jean Meslier. Pp. 339, paper 60 cents, cloth $1.—"Voltaire's Romances." Pp. 480, paper $1, cloth $1.50. Profusely illustrated.—"History of Christianity." Pp. 864, cloth, reduced price, $1.50. These books are all published in the most elegant style, and every Liberal should read them.

IN SEARCH OF A GOD.

Brother Knight, in his rejoinder, conveys the idea that he believes that some persons have, at some time, seen God and that their testimony is of more importance than the single denial of the Atheist. Yet he admits that he has never been so fortunate, but only infers a God from phenomena which no power in nature, not intelligent, could accomplish.

Now to the first point: Having discarded Bible proof, and basing his belief upon rational evidence and reason, let me ask him who are the witnesses who can say, "I have seen God walking here," who have seen God and who have evidences of a God which he, I, and all other "mice in the cathedral" haven't got? If he cannot name them, why then insist that the affirmations of those who falsely affirm to have seen God, and fail to produce evidence, are of more importance than the denial of those who refuse the testimony without proof. Does not the burden of proof devolve upon the former?

Supposing I should advertise that I had on exhibition in my establishment a mechanical donkey who could converse intelligently with anyone on any subject. Thousands, no doubt, would call daily to witness the wonderful automaton but see nothing of the kind, and insist that the nearest resemblance to such a machine was—the proprietor himself! But now one individual goes around the world boldly proclaiming aloud the existence of an intelligent mechanical donkey. Brother Knight believes the mystery, relates the anecdote of the Irishman who stole the bread, in confirmation, and asks everybody to believe in the donkey because the one witness who saw him, or said he saw him, is more reliable in evidence than the millions who didn't.

Brother Priestley has kindly and ably answered my opponent's "footprint" arguments, inferring from certain natural phenomena a designer. But I will add that in searching for final causes in explanation of phenomena we must include all phenomena. If, then, a God is a fact, a reality, as such he is a very important part of existence which philosophers in search of a final solution of all existing problems cannot and must not ignore. If, then, in explanation of the complex organism of man, a vastly more complex organism of a God is postulated, it must then be conceded that the mystery of existence is not only not solved, but infinitely augmented by the presentation of a far higher being which now also necessitates a logical explanation.

This being conceded impossible, the greater mystery—God—cannot be reasonably accepted as an explanation for the lesser mystery—man.

Now to the second point: "Like causes ever produce like effects." In five parts of this globe are evolved from the apes different races. All are composed of males and females, the same as all organisms, down to their crudest form; "all marry." This astounding circumstance baffles Brother Knight, and from it he infers in profound awe the existence of a God. Of course without a God they would not marry, continue old bachelors and maids, die celibates, and behold! soon the race would die out! And they all speak; another evidence of a God! Of course they all have vocal organs, and intermingling with each other, it might be supposed that in the course of ages the crude screeches of the monkeys would evolve into more articulate sounds, conveying ideas, etc., yet Brother Knight thinks this is impossible and postulates a great teacher for them who teaches the dumb how to speak!

They all invent. Again profoundly miraculous without a God, isn't it? Why should ape-men ever think of shaping a log into a boat which would lessen their chances of drowning, if there wasn't a God to tell them how? Why should these ignorant Hottentots kill bears, and wear their skins, if a God didn't tell them they would freeze to death without apparel? Why do all races seek to protect themselves from the heat, cold, and general inclemencies of the weather if no God tells them they must seek shelter from the heat in the shade, and shelter from the cold in dug-outs, huts, or houses; and why should, in course of time, all races seek to increase their store of knowledge and degree of comfort if no God to guide them?

Profoundly mysterious indeed! Why should these identical things happen the five different races, on five different continents, if no God? Why?

As advised before, let our friend study the fascinating philosophy of evolution, and all will be explained.

"They all look to a God." (Not "to God," because this implies there is one, and this God, Brother Knight's God). Certainly; all being alike abjectly ignorant of the profound mysteries of nature, all invested with personal attributes the natural operations of nature which they could not otherwise explain. But the ideas concerning God of no two nations were alike, all had a different conception of their God, and Brother Knight will concede that all believed in false gods, or in gods which his superior intellect now emphatically repudiates. But, being false, will he kindly state how the superstitious notions of the ape-men concerning gods can prove the existence of his God? He believes all these crude notions to have been absurd; what logical sequence then is there between the grotesque notions these nations jointly entertained and Brother Knight's "only true God" which he worships? And if there can be no relationship between the two isolated circumstances, why will he persist to advance, as a proof of a God, something entirely foreign to a God, even if there is one?

"They all hope for a future." Certainly, as I said before, "like causes produce like effects." All nations being alike ignorant, and all individuals alike selfish; all alike placed in similar environments and conditions and all yearning to attain a higher state of bliss than attainable during life, they, in their egotism, postulated this imaginary future life. Cunning priests soon took the advantage of this tendency of man to believe in supernaturalism, and, for their individual gain, universally encouraged these absurd beliefs; and Brother Knight well knows that the several beliefs of all races about a future life, a heaven and hell, have been the sheerest nonsense. Why then bring it up as evidence to prove a God? Only facts will do.

He says: "Man is impossible without a God," but fails to tell what part of the work in the origin of man God performs. Physiology teaches man is conceived, evolved, born, and grows, precisely as the lower animals, and fails to show the mission of God in the work. Indeed Brother Knight knows well that conception and gestation is purely a physical and chemical process, both in animal and man, and God has nothing to do with it. We simply grow, the result of the eternal chemistry of nature.

Whatever can be traced to a cause, can be traced to nature—nothing to a God. Whatever can be understood, is nature—never God. Whatever we can see with eyes and strongest lenses, is nature—never God. Whatever is, is nature—never God.

"There is no creator." This concession annihilates the last conception of our friend's God. Both a creator and a creation are facts or both are fiction. Let him take his choice.

Rochelle, Ill.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE IN WASHINGTON.

RELIGIOUS EXERCISE AND INSTRUCTION IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—This being vacation, no further action can be taken in regard to religious worship in public schools till they reopen. But I have in my possession a letter written by R. B. Bryan, state superintendent of public instruction, sent by him to one he supposed to be very desirous to continue the use of the Bible and the Lord's prayer in public schools, in which he writes: "The supreme courts of other states where the provisions of the Constitution and laws are similar to ours, have decided that religious exercises cannot be conducted in connection with school work even to the repeating of the Lord's prayer." When the schools reopen we may have to appeal to the courts so as to definitely settle the question throughout the state.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY.—In regard to our state university I have already, in the leading daily papers, published protest of the Washington Secular Union against the resolution of the board of regents "that religious exercises at the university shall be confined to reading the Bible and the repeating of the Lord's prayer." Such religious exercise is most gross violation of the plainest provisions of the state constitution. I am now preparing a personal letter to each of the regents, giving the law and the facts, and am sanguine that before the time arrives to reopen the university they will be induced to rescind that resolution. Should presentation of facts fail to induce them to comply with the law, we must be prepared to try the effects of a mandamus of the courts, and the forfeiture of the $10,000 appropriation of the legislature. There is no shadow of doubt about the final result.

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.—It is admitted that under our state constitution and laws of the legislature, all exemption from taxation of church property is annulled, but the design of the church fanatics is to obtain delay. They insist on exemption of all church property of less value than $5,000, ignoring the provisions of the constitution, claiming assessments must all be made this year, under the old law; in the hope that if thus the law is allowed to lie dormant, interest in the matter will decrease and the law become a dead letter. The Washington Secular Union will dispel such hopes by its vigilant and persistent demands for justice, and obedience to the law by church folks. Attorney-General Jones has so far failed to reply to my letter, but the "Post-Intelligencer," leading Republican paper of the state, gives this significant item, under date, July 26: "Governor Ferry has summoned Attorney-General Jones for consultation on important legal business for the state."

The Northern Pacific railroad will hardly pay taxes on its right of way, on the claim of the attorney-general that its exemption from taxation was annulled by the passage of our state constitution, while the exemption of church, private school, and hospital property is continued despite the constitution. The wilful neglect to assess all property equally, as the law provides, may result in serious difficulty in collecting taxes from any property owner who has courage to protest, for it is undeniable that the omission of hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property from the tax lists creates greatly increased burdens, and does gross injustice to honest taxpayers.

ENFORCEMENT OF SUNDAY LAWS.—I have again visited the victims of Sunday laws, at Tacoma, who were arrested and fined $25 and costs each, for selling clothing on Sunday. The cases are appealed to the superior court, and arrangements made that when the cases are called the Washington Secular Union will be represented by able counsel. C. B. REYNOLDS, Sec. W. S. U.

2104 Sixth street, Seattle, Wash.

P. S.—Members of the W. S. U. are respectfully reminded that one dollar, six months' dues in advance, July 29 to January 29, 1891, is now due. Please remit, accompanied with such contribution to the Defense fund as your interest in the work prompts. C. B. R.

ELDER L. T. NICHOLS, of Claremont, Minn., and W. F. Jamieson, of Des Moines, Iowa, are engaged to hold an eight-nights' debate, some time in September, at Kasson, Minn. Questions: 1. The Bible is wholly of human origin, abounds in contradictory, immoral, absurd, and inconsistent teachings. Jamieson affirms for four nights. 2. The teachings of the New Testament are all moral and elevating. The elder will affirm the next four nights. Mr. Jamieson wrote the resolutions, and the elder accepted them at once, avowing that he is not only willing but anxious to debate them, whereupon Jamieson challenged him to debate them wherever the people desire a debate and will arrange for it. Mr. Jamieson may be addressed at Des Moines, Iowa, until further notice.

THE Portland "Oregonian" contains this notice of a well-known Oregon Liberal: "S. B. Ives, who was a steamboat captain on the Columbia river between The Dalles and the upper Cascades in 1862 and 1863, is now in The Dalles. His recollections of early days are very vivid, and he has an inexhaustible fund of information of pioneer times. Mr. Ives navigated the Columbia river when the inland empire was little known, and relates some thrilling experiences of early days, when every employee, from captain to deckhand, kept his hand on his revolver, to be ready in any emergency for an attack from Indians."

THE CHICAGO SECULAR UNION.

For some months past two Freethought societies have existed in Chicago—the "American Secular Union of Chicago" and the "Chicago Secular Union." The two have united, the "American Secular Union" returning its charter and combining with the "Chicago Secular Union." Of this latter organization the honorable Judge C. B. Waite was elected president, John F. Geeting vice-president, Dr. Joseph H. Greer treasurer, and Mrs. M. A. Freeman secretary. The society considers itself fortunate in its selection of president. Judge Waite is a well-known Liberal, the author of the "History of Christianity," a work which has received the most favorable commendations from the press, both in this country and in Europe. Judge Waite was one of the speakers at the congress of the American Secular Union held in Chicago three years ago, and it added no little interest to his remarks that he was personally acquainted with many of the Liberals of the old world, his subject being "Freethought in Europe." He is an able jurist, and under General Grant's administration was appointed judge of Utah. Mrs. C. V. Waite, his gifted wife, is the editor and publisher of the "Chicago Law Times," and has recently brought out a pamphlet written by her husband entitled, "Conspiracy Against the Republic"—a consideration of the Blair amendment to the Constitution, a reptile that has been scotched—not killed.

Mr. Geeting, the vice-president, is a young lawyer actively interested in the secularization of the state. In the combination of the two societies the Nine Demands were adopted as a basis for work, the new society declaring itself an auxiliary to the national organization.

Dr. Greer, the popular treasurer, is peculiarly fitted for his office. If the society happens to be in arrears, the doctor is able and willing to supply the deficiency, qualities that render him valuable as a treasurer. The society trusts, however, that under its present management it will not be compelled to impose upon the doctor's good nature.

Mr. James Abbott, the retiring president of the American Secular Union of Chicago, remains with the society as an active worker, being a member of the board of directors. Mr. Abbott is a man of culture and ability, and has taken a deep interest in the welfare of the society.

Last evening, July 27, Judge Waite lectured before the Union on "Church and State." The night was warm, but quite an audience greeted the judge, many prominent citizens being present. The judge said:

The Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law prohibiting free speech, free press, the right of the people to meet in peaceable assembly, and it shall not infringe upon religious liberty. These provisions were in the form of amendments, and without them the Constitution would never have been adopted. These amendments were made to guard the rights of the states and of the people against the encroachments of the federal power. There were ten of these amendments, and they were part of the Constitution itself. The last five amendments, from the eleventh to the fifteenth, inclusive, have been made to meet the exigencies of the government. The powers of the state government are inherent in the peoples of the state. Certain limitations have been placed upon that power. But within these limitations the state is sovereign. It is just as dangerous for the federal government to encroach upon the rights of the state as it would be for the state to usurp the powers of the general government. Every amendment to the Constitution is a danger to our form of government. The Blair amendment, proposed in time of profound peace, is a plain encroachment upon the rights of the states. No such emergency exists as gave rise to the amendments following the war.

The Blair amendment is in direct and dangerous antagonism to the original Constitution, which gave Congress no power over the subject of religion or education. The resolution proposing this amendment provides that "each state in this Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and eighteen years, inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion."

If the principles of the Christian religion could be easily determined, the matter would be simplified. Jesus had far less to do in establishing that religion than Paul. Jesus denounced hypocrites. Paul denounced those who differed with him honestly in opinion, declaring in Galatians v, 12, "I would they were even cut off, who trouble you."

In a speech in a convention of the National Reform Association held in New York in February, 1873, the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., said: "We want state and religion, and we are going to have it. It shall be that so far as the affairs of the state require religion, it shall be revealed religion, the religion of Jesus Christ. The Atheist is a dangerous man. Tolerate Atheism, sir! There is nothing out of hell I would not tolerate as soon. Atheism and Christianity are contradictory terms. They are incompatible systems. They cannot dwell together on the same continent."

The spirit here exhibited is the same as that which left its footprints in the blue laws of several of the American colonies. It is inherited from the Inquisition, and turns for its justification or excuse to the teachings of those who founded the Christian religion. It is no answer to the Blair bill to say that no public money shall be expended in the teaching of the doctrines of any religious sect. It still remains that a combination of sects might declare what should be taught. Nor does it detract from its dangerous character that the author should say that "no state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

This is mere subterfuge. What more efficacious law respecting an establishment of religion could its votaries desire than an act requiring the principles or doctrines of that religion to be taught at the public expense?

The ecclesiastical power has lost its hold on the reason of man. This attempt to gain control of the Constitution is a desperate effort to bring the aid of the civil power to the support of a lost cause. The attempt should be met with a prompt and merited rebuke.

Let the Constitution remain what our forefathers intended it to be, the common heritage of a great, a generous, and a free people.

At the conclusion of Judge Waite's address, of which I have given only the merest outline, a vote of thanks was tendered.

On Sunday evening, Aug. 3, a discussion was held before the society on "Protection and Free Trade." Moses Hull, the redoubtable knight who met Samuel P. Putnam in debate on the Pacific slope, will lecture August 10. Mrs. M. A. FREEMAN, Secretary Chicago Secular Union.

THOMAS PAINE.

BY WILLIAM HENRY BURR.

IV.

WAS HE JUNIUS?

The only other allusion to Junius by Paine is in "Casca's" "Epistle to Lord Mansfield," May 13, 1775:

Should galling Junius make a new attack,
(Whose lashes still are flagrant on your back),
The libeller by some state blood-hound trace,
And make him feel the terrors of your place.

Lord Mansfield was "that Scotchman" whom Junius hoped to "pull to the ground;" and "Casca's" essays abound with severe reflections on the Scotch.

But if more positive proof is needed that Paine hated the Scotch, we have it in Grant Thorburn's "Reminiscences."

An old lady from Scotland wished an introduction [to Paine]. Said I, "Mr. Paine, this is Mrs. Bruce, from Scotland." "Scotland!" he repeated, "a country of bigots and fanatics."

Of the forty or more writers on whose behalf a claim has been made to the authorship of the "Letters of Junius," one after another has been set aside until the ablest critics have given up the discovery in despair. The claim for Sir Philip Francis alone has in recent years maintained any degree of stability. On the evidence of handwriting a very plausible case has been made out, sufficient to convince many that he wrote the disguised hand of Junius. Twisleton and Chabot's "Handwriting of Junius" (1871), I never examined until two years ago. But when I did, I soon found positive proof that Francis was not Junius. In a private letter to Woodfall, without date, but certainly written a day or two after November 10, 1769, Junius says:

I have been out of town these three weeks, and though I got your last could not conveniently answer it.

He then requests Woodfall to "reprint a letter in the London Evening Post of last night to the Duke of Grafton." That letter is dated November 10, and is signed "A. B." who was not Junius.

But on the fourth of November, 1769, Philip Francis wrote a letter at his desk in the war office, London, to his brother-in-law in Philadelphia. ("Handwriting of Junius:" Francis, No. 38).

Since my discovery of this alibi I have been happy to learn that not less than half a dozen others have been proved in Notes and Queries.

There are more than three hundred parallels of character, conduct, opinion, style, sentiment, and language between Paine and Junius, and no fact incompatible with their identity has been found. No writer of the time came so near to the style of Junius as Paine, and as a penman he was certainly capable of writing the disguised hand of Junius. See how different he writes his name:

Mark, now, the variations of the letters T and P in the disguised hand of Junius:

Even the signature of Junius is not uniform, and his private mark "C." is much varied:

In Junius's "Dedication to the English Nation," he says:

You are roused at last to a sense of your danger. The remedy will soon be in your power. If Junius lives, you shall often be reminded of it.

Did he not fulfill that promise? Did he not come again as "Casca" in 1775, as "Common Sense" in 1776, and as Thomas Paine in 1791?

Who started the publication of The Crisis in London? Franklin had been insulted at court and was about to leave England forever. Already he had sent Paine to Philadelphia with letters of introduction. But he himself did not embark until three months after the first issue of The Crisis. I believe that Franklin was the only man who detected Junius. Hence in all his writings he never alludes to him. Paine and Franklin were bosom friends, and worked together even when far apart. Without their secret work American independence would not have been achieved. Is it, therefore, any exaggeration to say that Paine and Franklin made this nation?

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

For wronged America let pity cease,
Let all her sons be massacred in peace.

—CASCA'S "Epistle to Lord North," May 20, 1775.

The Newark Gazette of October 5, 1802, contained the following editorial paragraph:

It has long been supposed that Mr. Jefferson drew up the Declaration of Independence. This report was raised to further his election, and the philosopher has thought fit to countenance it. It was thought absolutely necessary to prove that he had done at least one good act in his life, and this was pitched upon. Mr. Jefferson was one of a committee of five, indeed, and after they had jointly drawn up the instrument it was given by Congress to a certain person, who, above all others, the Democrats would dislike to hear had corrected the writings of Mr. Jefferson, for revision and amendment, and it was from this person it received the ELEGANT DRESS it now appears in.

The italics and small capitals are the editor's own. Who was that "certain person" whose name the editor kindly suppressed, lest it should humiliate his political adversaries? Did Jefferson employ a "certain person" to correct his writings? And did Congress assign to that same person the task of revising and amending the draft of the Declaration reported by the committee of five? And did that "certain person" give to the instrument the "elegant dress it now appears in?"

The fact that the committee appointed to prepare a Declaration of Independence assigned the task to Jefferson does not appear to have been publicly known in 1802. Jefferson himself had not so recorded it in his "notes written on the spot," nor in his letter to the Journal de Paris in 1787, giving a history of the transaction "with precision." That the draft reported by the committee was "generally attributed to Mr. Jefferson," is all that Chief Justice Marshall could say in 1804. But Jefferson himself never claimed that he wrote it until he was eighty years of age. Therefore the public must have been unenlightened as to the authorship of the instrument not only up to 1802, but for many years thereafter; and if Jefferson had died three years earlier than he did, the only evidence that he drew the Declaration of Independence would have been:

1. That the original draft is in his own handwriting.
2. That the task of drawing it was assigned to him by the committee; and
3. That (in his own equivocal words, as recorded in 1821) "It was accordingly done, and being improved by them, I reported it to the House."

Twenty-five days after the appearance of the above editorial paragraph in the Newark Gazette, Thomas Paine landed at Baltimore, having sailed from France in a national ship by order of President Jefferson. And Thomas Paine, as I shall undertake to prove, was that "certain person" referred to by the editor of the Newark Gazette.

The very first literary work of Paine after his arrival in 1802 was a series of seven anonymous letters in support of Jefferson's administration, published in the National Intelligencer, signed "Plain Sense," and afterward reprinted in a pamphlet with the following title:

Plain Sense; or Sketches of Political Frenzy and Federal Fraud and Folly. Washington City, 1803.

In Jefferson's works, vol. 1, is a fac simile of his own draft of the Declaration of Independence. It is in his own handwriting except four verbal amendments by Franklin and two by Adams. There are many other erasures and interlineations, all in Jefferson's handwriting being amendments made by Congress. The first paragraph of the original draft, as reported by the committee, is as follows:

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for a people to advance from that subordination in which they have hitherto remained, and to assume among the powers of the earth the equal and independent station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the change.

The italicized words were erased, and other language substituted therefor by Congress.

The second paragraph of the Declaration was amended still more, the original being as follows:

We hold these truths to be sacred and undeniable, that all men are created equal and independent, that from that equal creation they derive all rights inherent and inalienable, among which are the preservation of life and liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; etc.

The following paragraph in regard to the slave trade was entirely stricken out:

He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of infidel powers, is the warfare of the Christian king of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where men should be bought and sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or to restrain this execrable commerce. And that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished die, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them, by murdering the people on whom he also obtruded them; thus paying off former crimes committed against the liberties of one people with crimes which he urges them to commit against the lives of another.

The italicized words are as underscored by Jefferson; two of them I reproduce in fac simile, together with a single word which he drew in capitals:

infidel
Christian
MEN

This paragraph of the Declaration "was struck out," says Jefferson, "in complaisance to South Carolina and Georgia, who had never attempted to restrain the importation of slaves, and who, on the contrary, wished to continue it." And he adds that the northern people, who had been carriers of slaves to others, may have "felt a little tender under those censures." Why then did Jefferson put it in? Did he not know the state of feeling in regard to slavery before he made the draft? It is true that he, though a slaveholder, deplored the existence of the institution; but he was not so ardent an opponent of it as Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this paragraph in the original draft of the Declaration, Mr. Denslow, author of "Modern Thinkers," says, "The English language possesses no clause more elaborate in its rhetoric;" and he unhesitatingly assigns its composition to Thomas Paine.

To be Continued.

WHAT FREETHINKERS HAVE DONE FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

W. S. Beattie in the Brighton Register.

James Lick was one of the pioneers of California, and made millions of dollars in real estate at San Francisco. At his death he gave his fortune to the people by the way of bequests. To found the Lick Observatory he gave $700,000, and large sums were given to scientific and benevolent institutions. Although Lick died fourteen years ago the execution of his will still goes tediously along, the trustees each receiving a thousand dollars a year for looking after the estate.

One fact of particular interest regarding James Lick is that he was an Atheist. Believing in no deity, hoping for no heavenly crown, and, like Benjamin Franklin, wishing for none, he died, leaving his wealth to his fellow-beings in a way calculated to do the most good. It is said "cleanliness is next to godliness," and if James Lick took any stock in this saying, he must have considered cleanliness next above godliness, for, while he left no money to be used in teaching religion, he bequeathed to the people of San Francisco and Sacramento elegant free bath-houses. Mr. Lick also gave a large sum to help commemorate the name of Thomas Paine.

Adolph Sutro, another millionaire, and proprietor of Sutro Heights, one of the famous resorts of the city, and which is to be given to the city at his death, is another Infidel; and it is probably much owing to the influence of these liberal-minded gentlemen that California is so free from religious laws. In this glorious state churches are taxed and there is legally no Sabbath day, Sunday being proclaimed a legal holiday. So the question of "Sunday-closing" is not argued here. There is perhaps as much freedom from petty legal restraints as in any state in the Union.

Speaking of James Lick reminds me of an anecdote I heard of him. On the 4th of July, 1876, while Mr. Lick lay on his deathbed at the Lick House, he was informed that the managers of the Centennial procession had refused to carry a life-size painting of Thomas Paine. Now, while Mr. Lick was an Atheist and Mr. Paine was a believer in God, Mr. Lick loved the author-hero of the Revolution sufficiently to resent the insult to his memory. The procession was bound to pass by the Lick House, so Mr. Lick declared that if the managers of the procession would not carry this painting he would be cremated if they didn't walk under it, and he had it swung out across the street from the very room in which he lay, and they did walk under it; and only to-day I saw this same painting, which greets your eyes as you enter the office of FREETHOUGHT, the leading Liberal journal of the West.

Schools and Universities.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In renewing my subscription for FREETHOUGHT, please allow me to call attention to the article in your issue of the 5th ult., "A Liberal University," by S. B. Martin, of Brownsville, Oregon. Schools are what we need, and a "Liberal university, the property of the Liberals of this coast," is indeed a consummation most undevoutly to be wished. Yes. The school is a good idea. We need it. But let us not relax effort to secularize the district school. Let freethinkers everywhere take an interest in the schools which their children attend, and which they pay taxes to support. Let them learn from personal observation what is being taught to their children. Ask questions. Require religious teachings in any form to be explained. Demand proof. Show your children how to use their reason and common sense in finding out truth. There is nothing that religious teachers fear more than truth. It is the devil of theology, and honest inquiry is the unpardonable sin. You can make it so pleasant and sociable for a teacher who undertakes to pack these religious frauds into the innocent and undeveloped minds of your children, that little harm can be done them. Our children must of necessity be brought into contact, more or less, with vice and iniquity, and the frauds and rascalities of life; and their minds need to be fortified as best we can to detect, avoid, or overcome them. Show the children what a fraud religion is; what a curse it has been, and still is, to society. Tell them its falsity, its evils, its meannesses, its cruelties, its viciousness, and hypocrisy; encourage them to think for themselves, to reason, to investigate, and to accept truth and truth only. By such course the evil influences of Christian teachings may be counteracted, at least to a great extent.

F. S. MATTESON.

Aumsville, Or.

P.S.—"The Chronicles of Simon Christianus," is the "boss." It is way up. It removes the dilapidated linen from off the shrub. It should be published in book form.

[It is so published; price 25 cents.—ED.]

On the Trail.

Leaving Bandon I journeyed southward, down the coast, thirty miles by stage to Port Orford, one of the most interesting points on the coast. A high promontory projects out into the sea nearly a mile, making a fine deep-water cove on the south side, that is a splendid harbor from the gales that often sweep from the north and northwest with terrible effect. The government made, so I hear, an appropriation of $14,000,000 several years ago to build a breakwater on the south side, perhaps a mile away from the promontory; then it would be one of the finest harbors in the world. The high point is covered with a fine growth of evergreen forest. It is near to Cape Blanco, which is farther west than any point in the United States, except Alaska. Why the appropriation has never been used, nobody seems to know, but all the people in this part of the country are looking to see a big town grow up at Port Orford whenever the government goes to work in earnest. There has been a small town here thirty to forty years, and a more beautiful location for a city I have never seen, but it is dead, dead, dead.

The ride all the way down from Bandon was through a timbered country, level as the sea, a most beautiful valley, or "bottom," as they call it. Here nearly all the timber is dead, from a fire that swept through it a few years ago. The dead trees stand like grim sentinels, black and stolid in their silence, while charred stumps give the landscape anything but an inviting appearance. Some parts seemed to be good soil, and others again looked worthless. Some fine farms and dairy ranches were passed, but most of it is still a wild solitude of burnt up forests. They tell me the land is all taken up on the "bottoms," but in the mountains and bluffs are still fine government lands. A road is just completed for the first time from here down into California. Heretofore no wagon road led into this "neck of the woods" from anywhere, which probably is the reason why there is still good government land to be had in Curry county. Curry county joins California, being the southwest county in Oregon. It is a very rough and mountainous region, with much valuable timber, tan bark, mines of all kinds, plenty of deer, bear, elk, cougars, and speckled trout, but no railroad or wagon roads, except the one being finished this month, up and down the coast.

I find families living here, back in the hills miles from any wagon road, who have quite comfortable homes, orchards, etc., but their furniture, stoves, and wagons, where they have any, have all been "packed" in here over the trail on pack horses or mules. Their buildings are built of white cedar, split out of large trees and then planed down smooth, and make a number one house or barn. There is much cedar here, also Oregon pine, fir, hemlock, spruce, oak, etc. Blackberries, huckleberries, salmon berries, thimbleberries, raspberries, and gooseberries, currants, prunes; in fact, all kinds of fruits, both wild and tame, are very plenty. For the poor man who wants a home and is willing to hew it out in the thickets and jungles of the mountain slopes, far from railroads and cities, making his own trail for miles along the steep hill-sides, or up the long, deeply shaded canyons where the pure soft waters flow filled with speckled beauties; where his cattle and sheep can live the year round, and horses too; where bees do splendid, and ten acres of cultivated land is a big farm; where it will take him years of hard toil to thus get started, Curry county, Or., is just the place; but the "tenderfoot," the dapper bandbox man, or society woman, or those who do not like bear, deer, and elk as companions for their children, will find pioneering in Curry county "a hard road to travel." To get here come to Port Orford by steamer from San Francisco, or by wagon road, from San Francisco up the coast to Eureka, Crescent City, and Gold Beach; or via Roseburg and Coos county, Or.

I gave two lectures in Port Orford to good audiences, and stopped with Louis Knapp, who keeps a splendid hotel and is a regular nor'wester for energy, fun and frolic, his only fault being that he is a poor old froze-to-death bachelor whom no fair maiden has yet taken pity on.

Port Orford is the farthest point west yet reached in the United States by any of our Liberal lecturers; hence I claim the cake till some other genus homo makes a lecturing tour to Alaska. Perhaps a mile below Port Orford, as I was taking a stroll down the beach among the black, threatening rocks, watching the surf come thundering in, tossing its spray over the cliffs, driftwood, and myself, enjoying, as I always do, nature in her wildest moods—the grum deep bass music of the ocean as it thunders in on the rock-bound shore—I found three dead sea lions, some ten or twelve feet long, that the waves had thrown up on the land. They looked like whales, so swollen up by decomposition. They are really fearful looking monsters with carnivorous teeth two to three inches long, head broad and savage as a lion's, no legs but two large flippers or fins in front and a double one behind in place of a tail. By means of these flippers they crawl all over the rocks and islands. They fasten these flippers by means of a powerful suction, like the devil fish, and thus propel themselves along. When disturbed up on the rocks they let go their hold and tumble down into the water, sometimes falling many feet in their hurry to get away. At other times they make a stubborn fight for their lives, and in their pairing season the bulls are said to be very dangerous. They are hunted for their hides, which are said to be an inch thick; also for the oil they contain. They have no hair or fur, like the seal, but evidently belong to the same genera. Their heads and teeth are more like those of some ferocious land animal than a denizen of the sea. They are said to be very swift in the water and can catch the salmon and other fish upon which they live.

From Port Orford I staged it back to Denmark and joined in with the people there to help celebrate the glorious Fourth. The youth and beauty, as well as the gray-haired sires and dames, were all gathered in a neat, shaded dell where the usual patriotic effusions were indulged in. Here I met many of our staunch Liberal friends: W. Cope and family, J. M. Upton, Major Brown, Mr. Hawkins, and many others. A royal dinner was served, the Declaration read, beautiful music rendered, speeches made, etc. Your correspondent was called on to blow his trumpet and made a short speech, when all retired to the hotel and the dance was indulged in "till dewy morn was ushered in." Dancing is the principal amusement in this far-away sunset land. Lectures, "divine service," everything, has to stand aside for the chance to "hug 'em tighter," as we promenaded around. And why not? Nature intended the sexes to enjoy life together and made the attraction almost irresistible, and the dance is but the safety-valve that keeps from more dangerous relations. I went home with Mr. Cope and wife and rested until Sunday evening, and had a most enjoyable time. Cope's people are very Liberal and radical, and I found piles of Truth Seekers and other Liberal literature, and thus I replenished "my famished soul." Sunday night I began a course of five lectures at Dairyville, in the school-house. I had full houses and good attention, and made hosts of friends. Professor Geering and family, from Philadelphia, Pa., reside here. Mr. Thrift has lived here thirty years, and has a splendid family, keeps a very fine store, post-office, dairy, ranch, etc. The Langlois brothers have large property interests here; also the three Nelsons, father and two sons, who own the hotel, a large wagon and blacksmith shop, and some fine farms near by. Mr. Basson and Mr. Thorhaven, from Denmark, have built up a fine home here, and are Liberal and cultured gentlemen. There are many others whose names I can not now remember.

Mr. Cope has a fine dairy of eighty cows. While there I was let into the mysteries of butter making—the regular gilded edge article. This climate is so cool, the grass green all the year round, with no snow or ice to speak of, no cyclones or blizzards, and no flies or mosquitoes to annoy the cattle, it is the dairyman's paradise. Only one trouble exists: market is so far off, except what the logging and lumbering camps take. The butter goes to San Francisco. It is first made into two-pound rolls, then wrapped in thin muslin and packed in layers in barrels or kegs; then covered with a pickle or brine, and headed up, and thus shipped to your city. But enough for one letter.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURE APPOINTMENTS.

Dayton.....	Aug. 10, 11	Davenport.....	Aug. 17, 18, 19
Rosalia.....	Aug. 13	Colville.....	Aug. 22, 23, 24
Plaza.....	Aug. 14	Buckley.....	Aug. 29
Oakdale.....	Aug. 15, 16	Puyallup.....	Sept. 5, 6, 7

Enemies.

It is not all a loss to have enemies; it spurs one to a higher endeavor, it shows that there are two sides to all our word, and acts, it makes it plain to us when we have gone wrong. Then, too, we prize our friends all the more from the contrasts. The more decision of character we have, the more power we have, the more we are really worth to the world, the more we are apt to have enemies. Some will be jealous of us and think by pulling us down they can uplift themselves; others will depreciate our work, thinking so to make their own shine brighter; and still others can never bear to have any one honored and happy. They seem to exult in seeing vice, misery, and wrong triumph, but these are so few that we only find here and there one. The good man's friends are legion, and he can well afford to have now and then an enemy as a thorn in the flesh to urge him on to higher and still higher works of goodness and truth and right.—Elmina D. Slenker, editor of the Plaindealer.

The Old, Old Lie.

READING, PA., July 7—Detective William T. Lyon was acquitted two weeks ago of a charge of extorting $10 from a woman to settle a case in court. At the trial he refused to kiss the Bible, merely affirming in this language:

"I hope that God will paralyze me if I took that $10 gold piece."

When Lyon appeared on the streets to-day he was unable to talk even in a whisper. It is thought that his vocal organs are paralyzed.

Prayer-Cured Hams.

Weeks—A town out West has discovered a brand new wrinkle in the faith philosophy.

Simpson—Indeed!

Weeks—Yes, they're curing hams by prayer.—American Grocer.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

In order to make our friends better acquainted and to enable them to patronize one another in trade, we will publish in this column the name, calling, and place of business of any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT at the rate of One Dollar a year. The list need not be confined to San Francisco and Oakland. It is open to any reader, anywhere in the country.

Architects and Builders.

F. Emil Neubauer, 1955 Market st.

Art-Glass, Bending and Cutting Works.

Hopper & Schroeder, 39 1/2 Fremont st., cor. Mission.

Assayers.

H. W. Walker, Teacher of Assaying, and Practical Worker of ores. Office 109, Montgomery Block, corner Washington and Montgomery streets.

Boot and Shoemaker.

George Schwab, Fashionable and Practical Shoemaker, 438 Bush street, above California Theater. C. Heick, Boot and Shoe Store, 119 Fourth street.

Cabinet-makers.

A. J. Forbes & Son, 213 Mission st.

Carpenters and Builders.

A. H. Schou, 677 Twenty-fifth st., OAKLAND

Contracting Painters.

Jos. Larsen, 240 Montgomery st., rooms 25 and

Crockery, Glassware, Etc.

Davis & Cowen, 929 Market st.

Dentists.

S. P. Chalfant, N. E. cor. Market and Mason sts. (Entrance, No. 8 Mason st.)

Geologist.

Chas F Blackburn, Practical Mining Geologist, Seattle, Wash.

Hides, Pelts, and Furs.

C. Rogers, dealer, Prineville, Oregon.

Independent German Congregation.

Frederick Schuenemann-Pott, speaker, 845 Golden Gate ave.

Laundries.

J. W. Selzer, People's Laundry, Office 221 Grant ave.

Lawyers.

Geo. W. Schell, 320 California st.

Lodging Houses.

S. H. Morse, Inglewood House, 126 Fifth st.

Merchant Tailors.

Chas. F. Burgman, 101 Fifth st.

Wm. W. Noble, 1222 Stockton st.

Magnesia Sectional Covering.

C. B. Johnson & Co., 59 Clay st.

Music Teachers.

Henry Krause, teacher of Piano and Zither, 1467 Grove st., (OAKLAND.)

Physicians and Surgeons.

G. W. Daywalt, M.D., rooms 14 and 15, Murphy Building, 1236 Market st.

Dr. C. A. Bonesteel, Consulting Physician in all forms of Nervous and Mental Diseases for MEN ONLY. Office, 105 Stockton st., Rooms 4 and 5, San Francisco, Cal.

Stoves and Plumbing.

Koch, 1063 Howard st.

Stoves (Gasoline).

Thomas Curtis, 24 Hayes st.

Upholstering and Furniture.

August Lutge, 1144 Howard street.

Wine, Beer, and Liquor.

Fredericksburg Brewing Co., 529 California st. Rapp & DeBarry, U. S. Beer Bottling Establishment cor. McAllister and Franklin sts.

J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento st. The Social, 1057 Folsom street, A. G. Wood & Co.

Watchmakers and Jewelers.

Glindeman & Schweitzer, 303 Kearny st.

Otto Sinz, 320 Kearny st.

SING, BROTHERS, SING,

USE THE

LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. THE LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets, adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly recommended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parson, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and, indeed, by all who have examined it. Price 25 cents. Address Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PORTRAITS

[Enlarged and Finished in Pastel and Crayon.] First-class work at reasonable prices. Orders and Correspondence solicited. Satisfaction guaranteed. F. C. Baxter & Co., 432 Sutter st., San Francisco.

The Landlord's Prayer.

Lord, keep us rich and free from toil,
For we
Are honored holders of Thy soil,
Which democrats would fain despoil
With glee;
O Lord, our fathers got the land
For serving men whom Thy right hand
Had chosen to be great and grand
As kings.
Tho' ta'en by stealth, we're not to blame,
Thou knowest, O Lord! it is a shame
To say to us, of titled name,
Such things.
Lord, let us live in Wealth's content,
And peace;
Lord, we are by Thy mercy meant
To rule mankind, and make our rent
Increase;
The birds that haunt the moors and hills,
The fish that swim in streams and rills,
The beast that roam as Nature wills,
We own;
E'en, Lord, the minerals that lie
Beneath the earth's periphery
Belong to us—Thou knowest why Alone.
Lord, on the ragged rabble frown,
For they
Are foes to us, Thy church, and crown;
Lord, bare Thine arm and grind them down
To clay!
O Lord! our God, we make their laws,
Which they reject with wild applause,
Be Thou a buckler to our cause
And caste;
They scorn our love, Thy Name and Word,
They reverence now nor squire nor lord,
Lord, them consume with fire and sword
At last!
Lord, they are poor and ignorant,
And worse,
Compared with us!—how different
In manner, garb, and lineage,
And purse!
Lord, never let them get or see
The power which lies in unity;
Keep us apart from them—for we
Are men!
Protect us from their greedy hands!
Protect us from their vile demands!
Protect us in our wealth and lands!
Amen! Amen!
—William Allan in Dundee, Scotland, People's Journal.

Loyal to his Mother.

"Willie," said his father as he came home at night, "have you been a good boy?"
"Did you ask mamma?" said Willie, doubtfully.
"Don't you know?" inquired his father.
"Well, it's this way," explained Willie.
"Ma's ideas and mine differ as to what is being bad, and I don't want to go back on anything she might say."

An Optical Illusion.

"Observe, ladies," remarked the professor, "that optically in their impress upon the retina of the eye we actually see all things standing as it were upside down."
"Oh, sakes alive!" excitedly exclaimed the Boston girl clutching at her skirts.

The Three Sexes.

A noted evangelist not long ago announced at one of his meetings: "The services to-morrow will be for women only. Pastors of churches will be admitted, but no men." Was this an acknowledgment of the ancient tradition that there are three sexes—men, women, and ministers?—Congregationalist.

A THOUGHTLESS YES.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

Price, 50 c. Address Freethought
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE "COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

A COLLECTION OF

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price, $1.50. Address orders to THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO., 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

TRAVELING ALONE

A WOMAN'S JOURNEY

AROUND THE WORLD.

By LILIAN LELAND,

(Daughter of the late T. C. Leland, Secretary of the National Liberal League.)

THE BRIGHTEST AND LIVELIEST
OF BOOKS.

Price, by mail, 30 cents.
Address The Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought Poems & Lectures

DR. J. L. YORK,

Author and Compiler. Price, $1.
Address, FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma, cor. 5th, S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

THE

Wilson Cancer Hospital,

OAKLAND, CAL.

Established in 1886.

Drs. G. H. and M. D. STOCKHAM,

The only Institution for the especial treatment of Cancer, and other humors, on the Pacific Coast. Address as above to 765 Thirteenth Street.

Neither knife nor caustic is used in treating cancer at this institution.

A pamphlet on "The Causes and Treatment of Cancers," containing epitomy of the treatment will be sent on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps by the above, or at this office. 4t29

Salvation Army Tactics.

The people of San Jose, says the "News," will remember a slight, girlish figure that appeared some months ago in the Salvation Army parades in this city. Her name was Carrie Hall, and she has had a peculiar experience, which she has told to a reporter in Oakland. About three years ago, when she was scarcely sixteen years of age, she left her home in the hope of entering the Salvation Army. She had lost her mother and wanted to go into the work of the army, and so, rather than enter the army in her home, which her father opposed, she went to Oakland. That is why she went to Oakland and began her work as a lieutenant.

She did not have a pleasant time in the army, and she tells a story of peculiar treatment that has placed her in a very unhappy position. She is a very slight little lady, with a pathetic, spiritless way about her that threw a peculiar shade of sadness over the story she told.

"I thought that the story might go in straight," she explained in a funny little apologetic way. "This is how it occurred. I was sent down to Pomona, and while I was there I met Fred Koenig and he wanted to marry me. I didn't want to get married and I told him so, but when I came up here I began to write to him. After a while I got tired of writing to him and stopped. In the meantime I met a young captain in San Francisco and we began to correspond. Suddenly I stopped getting his letters and he stopped getting mine, and we each thought that the other had thrown off, but we hadn't.

"I found that all our letters had been sent to Brigadier-General Fielding, and as he had never approved of it we had never received our letters. You see, General Fielding thought that a captain was too high for me, and as everything of that kind is in his hands he decided to break it off.

"About that time they found out that Koenig wanted to marry me, and as the army owed him $200 or $300 they thought that it would be a good scheme to get me to marry him and get him back into the work. You see, when any one joins the army they have to sell all that they have to give it to the army, so if Koenig married me the army would not have to pay him what they owed and the army would get a good bit besides. So they got down and prayed with me, and they got me to say yes. He said he would kill himself if I did not, and so we were married in Pomona."

Not Guilty.

"Who wrote the Psalms?" asked the superintendent, severely.

And then a little girl in the infant class began to cry. "It wasn't me, sir," she said.

A DIVINE preached one Sunday morning from the text, "Ye are children of the devil," and in the afternoon, by a funny coincidence, from the words, "Children, obey your parents."

LAWYER—Do you swear positively that you know more than half this jury?

Witness—Yes, sir; and now that I have taken a good look at 'em, I'll swear that I know more than all of 'em put together.

The Humboldt Library

—OF—
POPULAR SCIENCE.

Price 15 cts a number. Double numbers 30 cts.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. R. A. Proctor.
2. Forms of Water (19 illustrations). John Tyndall.
3. Physics and Politics. By Walter Bagehot.
4. Man's Place in Nature. Illustrated. T. H. Huxley.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. (With Appendix). Chas. Kingsley.
7. The Conservation of Energy. Ills. Balfour Stewart.
8. The Study of Languages. C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Illustrated. Professor Pietro Blaserna.
11. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. Henry
12. Walter Bates. (Not sold separately).
13. Mind and Body. Alexander Bain.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Ills. C. Flammarion.
15. Longevity. Prolonging life. John Gardner, M.D.
16. The Origin of Species. Thomas Huxley.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Richard A. Proctor.
20. The Romance of Astronomy. R. Kalley Miller.
21. The Physical Basis of Life. Etc. T. H. Huxley.
22. Seeing and Thinking. William K. Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. Review of theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. Sam'l Wainwright.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Ills. Prof. Helmholtz.
25. The Origin of Nations. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. Jos. Fisher.
28. Fashion in Deformity. Ills. Wm. Henry Flower.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Andrew Wilson.
30. The Study of Words.
31. Richard Chenyix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. R.A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. Grant Allen.
34. The Philosophy of Style. Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. John Caird and others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Ills. Thomas H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. John Tyndall.
38. (Geological Sketches.
39. Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. Evidence of Organic Evolution. G. J. Romanes.
41. Current Discussions in Science. W.M. Williams.
42. History of the Science of Politics. F. Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. Huxley, Agassiz, others.
44. The Dawn of History.
45. C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. The Diseases of Memory. Th. Ribot.
47. The Childhood of Religion. Edward Clodd.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. James Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution, its Phenomena, its Condition. Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange.
51. Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. The Diseases of the Will. Th. Ribot.
53. Animal Automatism, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
54. The Birth and Growth of Myth. Edward Clodd.
55. The Scientific Basis of Morals. Wm. K. Clifford.
56. (Illusions.
57. James Sully.
58. The Origin of Species. } Two Double Numbers.
59. Charles Darwin. } 30 cents each.
60. The Childhood of the World. Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. Richard A. Proctor.
62. The Religions of the Ancient World. Prof. Geo. Rawlinson. Double Number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. Thomas Fowler, LL.D.
64. The Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development. Wm. Clifford.
66. Technical Education, Other Essays. T.H. Huxley.
67. The Black Death. An account of the Great Pestilence of the 14th Century. J. F. C. Hecker.
68. Three Essays. Herbert Spencer. Special No. 10c.
69. Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. Fritz Schultze. 30 c.
70. Essays Speculative and Practical. Herbt. Spencer.
71. Archæology. (with an appendix). Daniel Wilson.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science.
74. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation
75. to Sex. Illustrated. Charles Darwin. The
76. first three are single numbers, the last a double
77. number. Price of the entire work, 75 cents.
78. Historical Sketch of the Distribution of Land in England. William Lloyd Birkbeck, M.A.
79. Scientific Aspect of Some Familiar Things. W. M. Williams.
80. Charles Darwin. His Life and Work. Grant Allen.
81. The Mystery of Matter, and the Philosophy of Ignorance. Two essays by J. Allanson Picton.
82. The Illusions of the Senses. Richard A. Proctor.
83. Profit-Sharing Between Capital and Labor. Six essays by Sedley Taylor, M.A.
84. Studies of Animated Nature. W. S. Dallas.
85. The Essential Nature of Religion. J. A. Picton.
86. The Unseen Universe. Wm. K. Clifford, F.R.S.
87. The Morphine Habit. Dr. B. Ball.
88. Science and Crime. Other essays. Andrew Wilson.
89. The Genesis of Science. Herbert Spencer.
90. Notes on Earthquakes. Richard A. Proctor.
91. The Rise of Universities. (double No.) S.S. Laurie.
92. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the action of Earthworms. (dbl No. Chas. Darwin.

93. Scientific Methods of Capital Punishment. Special number 10 cents. J. Mount Bleyer, M.D.
94. The Factors of Organic Evolution. H. Spencer.
95. The Diseases of Personality. Th. Ribot.
96. A Half-Century of Science. T.H. Huxley, G. Allen.
97. The Pleasures of Life. Part I. Sir John Lubbock.
98. Cosmic Emotion. Special No. 10 c. Wm. Clifford.
99. Nature—Studies. Prof. Eaton Lowe and others.
100. Science and Poetry. Other essays. And'w Wilson.
101. Aesthetics; Dreams and Association of Ideas. James Sully and George Croom Robertson.
102. Ultimate Finance; A True Theory of Co-operation. William Nelson Black.
103. The Coming Slavery. Other essays. H. Spencer.
104. Tropical Africa. Henry Drummond, F.R.S.
105. Freedom in Science and Teaching. Ernst Haeckel.
106. Force and Energy. A Theory of Dynamics. Allen
107. Ultimate Finance. A Theory of Wealth. Black.
108. English, Past and Present. Part I. Richard C. Trench. (Double Number 30 cents.)
109. English, Past and Present, Part II. Trench.
110. The Story of Creation. A Plain Account of Evolution. (Illustrated.) Clodd. (Double No., 30c.)
111. The Pleasures of Life, Part II. Lubbock.
112. The Psychology of Attention. Th. Ribot.
113. Hypnotism. Fredrik Bjornstrom. 30c.
114. Christianity and Agnosticism. A controversy. Consisting of papers contributed to the "Nineteenth Century" by Henry Wace, D.D., Prof. T. H. Huxley, the Bishop of Peterborough, W. H. Mallock, Mrs. H. Ward. (Double No., 30c.)
115. Darwinism. An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its applications. A. R. Wallace. Part I. Ill. (Double No.)
116. Darwinism: An Exposition of the Theory of Natural Selection, with some of its Applications. Part II. A. R. Wallace. Ill. Double No.
117. Modern Science and Modern Thought. S. Laing. Illustrated. (Double Number.)
118. Modern Science and Modern Thought, Part II.
119. The Electric Light and the Storing of Electrical Energy. Illustrated. Gerald Molloy.
120. The Modern Theory of Heat and the Sun as a Storehouse of Energy. Ill. Gerald Molloy.
121. Utilitarianism. John Stuart Mill.
122. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion. Maps and Illustrations. Ramsey, Ball, Murchison, Stüder, Whymper, Favre, and Spencer. Part I. (Double No. 30c.)
123. Upon the Origin of Alpine and Italian Lakes and upon Glacial Erosion, Part II.
124. The Quintessence of Socialism. A. Schaffle.
125. Darwinism in Politics. Ritchie. Administrative Nihilism. Huxley.

Address the Freethought Publishing Co.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

PRINTING!

The Freethought Publishing Company is prepared to do first-class

JOB PRINTING,

Especially such work as

- Letter-heads,
- Bill-heads,
- Programmes,
- Envelopes,
- Business Cards,
- Postal Cards,
- Tickets,
- Placards,
- Receipts,
- Posters,
- Dodgers,
- Circulars,
- Etc. etc

Orders taken for any kind of printing, from a one-line card to a newspaper, and estimates made on book work.

COUNTRY ORDERS SOLICITED.

THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING CO.,
838 Howard st., San Francisco.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Wm. W. NOBLE,
Merchant Tailor.
1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY
Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

FREETHOUGHT PAMPHLETS AND TRACTS.

God in the State. By E. A. Stevens. Best and most concise argument for State Secularization ever written. Price, 10 cents; six for 50 cents.

Brains, Science, and Civilization. By Hon. A. Schell. Price, 5 cents; per dozen, 50 cents.

Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government. By Prof. W. S. Bell. A thought-compelling tract. Price, two for 5 cents.

God and Religion. By G. W. Thurston. Hard knocks at kingcraft and priestcraft. Price, 10 cents per dozen.

Roman Rule and Ruin. By Z. Shed. A condensed history of the Catholic church. Price, 10 cents; one dozen, 50 cents.

Nameless. By Voltairine de Cleyre. A touching poem. Ten cents per dozen.

Sabbath Imposture. By Harry Hoover. Price, 10 cents; a half-dozen for 50 cents.

The Glory of Infidelity. By Samuel P. Putnam. Price, 10 cents.

Two Creeds—The Catholic and the Cathartic. A travesty. Ten cents per dozen.

The Girard College Theft. From FREETHOUGHT. Ten cents per dozen.

"BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS, 15 cents.

THE NEW MODEL "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH!

World Renowned, Magnificent, Perfect. Again Improved.

Has 16 Jewels, Patent Regulator, Breguet Hair Spring (non-catchable), Beautiful double-sunk paneled Dial, and all modern improvements. Is finely adjusted to heat, cold, and position; Stem wind and set, and new model. Made both for hunting and open-face cases and guaranteed a Perfect Time-Keeper.

PRICES: In Silverine Cases, $19; 3 ounce pure Silver, $22.50; 4 ounce, $23.50; 5 ounce, $25; 6 ounce, $27; ounce, Best Dust-proof cases, $24—no better sold elsewhere for $35. In Best Filled Gold Cases, guaranteed 20 years, Patent Open-face, Screw Dust-proof, $27; Hinged Back, $30; Hunting, $33; Louis XIV. style, either kind, $2 extra. All elegantly engraved or plain. In cases guaranteed 25 years, special artistic chasing, $5 and $10 more.

In 14 kt. Solid Gold Open-face Cases, $45 to $80; Hunting, $50, $60 $70, $90 to $100. Sent prepaid with written guarantee, and cash refunded if not entered satisfactory. No one else in the world sends out or sells so GOOD AND ELEGANT A WATCH FOR THE PRICE.

Regular Grades American Watches. All Stem-Wind.

Three ounce Silverine case, seven jewels, $7.50; eleven jewels, $9; fifteen jewels, $10; do., adjusted, $16. In three ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $13.50, and $19.50. In four ounce case $1 extra, and in four ounce dust-proof case $1.50 extra. In best open-faced, dust-proof, filled Gold case, seven jewels, $16; eleven jewels, $17.50; fifteen jewels, $18.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, gold cap, $3 extra. Extra fine engraved $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, gold cap, seven jewels, $23; eleven jewels, $24.50; fifteen jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special, artistic engraved cases, $5 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen even in best stores. All filled cases guaranteed twenty to twenty-five years. Beware of others!

Ladies' Gold Hunting American Watches.

Best filled, seven jewels, $17; eleven jewels, $18.50 fifteen jewels, $25. 14 kt. solid Gold, $27; eleven jewels, $28.50; fifteen jewels, $35. More elaborate and heavier cases, $2, $5 to $10 extra. Diamond, Ruby, Emerald, embossed and enameled cases, $10 to $100 extra. ALL WATCHES ARE STEM-WIND AND SET. All guaranteed one year, after the expiration of which time they will be cleaned for $1 and returned free. 10 kt. filled gold cases $2 less

Diamonds.

I am an expert in this line and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market prices. Rings, Pins, Hardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do. worth $70 for $50; do. worth $100 for $75; do. worth $200 for $150; do. worth $500 for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

Watch-work.

Nine-tenths of the "jewelers" of America are botches, and don't know as much about "handling" a fine watch as an elephant does about a Beethoven symphony. A noted phrenologist once told Wettstein, "If you are not a first-class mechanic the Lord Almighty never made one." Send me your work. Cleaning, $1; jewels, $1; springs, $1. Best work guaranteed and returned free. LIBERAL EDITORS' AND LECTURERS' WATCHES REPAIRED FREE.

Rings and Emblems

A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of latest designs. Select from any catalogue and I will fill orders at lower prices or send better goods.

Sundries.

Best Spectacles or Eye-Glasses, $1; Gold, $5 and $6. (Send line of finest print you can read 14 inches from the eyes, and I can fit you.) Best razor, $2—a luxury; a good one, $1. Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives, $1.75; Forks, $1.75; Teaspoons, $1.70; Tablespoons, $3.40 for six. Solid Coin Silver Spoons, $1.60 per ounce, marked. Silver Thimbles, 35 cents. An elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, $4.50, worth $6. Four best Violin strings, 50 cents; six Guitar strings, 75 cents. Fountain pens, $2. All prepaid, except cutlery and clocks.

Established in 1857.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. FELLOWS

Is a regularly educated and legally qualified Physician, and the most successful in his specialty as his practice will prove. Send 10 cts. for his "Private Counselor," a book for young and middle aged men, suffering from that Life-Wasting Weakness as the result of youthful follies, indiscretions and excesses. It sets forth an External Application.—A POSITIVE CURE. The book is worth many times its cost, and should be in the hands of those afflicted.

AN HONEST STATEMENT. "Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been frequently assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. FELLOWS stands foremost in his profession, and it is safe to trust him."—The National View.

Address,

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS,

VINELAND N. J.

And say where you saw this advertisement.

Dr. Fellows is an outspoken Liberal, a humanitarian, and a generous patron of the Freethought press. He has many testimonials to the value of his progressive and successful method of treatment, and deserves patronage.

AGENTS WANTED by an old reliable firm (large profits, quick sale). SAMPLE FREE. A rare opportunity. Geo. A. Scott, 542 Broadway, N. Y.

W. S. BELL'S "Popular Delusions Concerning Popular Government," has been issued in tract form—two for five cents. Address the Freethought Publishing Company.

THE MODERN SCIENCE ESSAYIST.

1. Herbert Spencer: His life, writings, and philosophy. By Mr. Daniel Greenleaf Thompson.
2. Charles Robert Darwin: His life, works, and influence. By Rev. John W. Chadwick.
3. Solar and Planetary Evolution: How suns and worlds come into being. By Mr. Garrett P. Serviss.
4. Evolution of the Earth: The story of geology. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
5. Evolution of Vegetable Life: How life begins. By Mr. William Potts.
6. Evolution of Animal Life: The order of zoological evolution. By Dr. Rossiter W. Raymond.
7. The Descent of Man: His origin, antiquity, and growth. By E. D. Cope, Ph. D.
8. Evolution of the Mind. By Robert G. Eccles, M. D.
9. Evolution of Society. By James A. Skilton.
10. Evolution of Theology. By Z. Siduey Sampson.
11. Evolution of Morals. By Dr. Lewis G. James.
12. Proofs of Evolution. By Nelson C. Parshall.
13. Evolution as Related to Religious Thought. By John W. Chadwick.
14. The Philosophy of Evolution; Its relation to prevailing systems. By Starr Hoyt Nichols.
15. The Effects of Evolution on the Coming Civilization. By Minot J. Savage.

ANY SIX OF THE ABOVE FOR 50 CENTS.

ALL FOR $1.40.

SINGLE NUMBERS 10 CENTS EACH.

One volume, fine cloth, 408 pages. Illustrated. Complete Index. $2 post-paid.

The whole Evolution Theory clearly set forth in simple popular language by famous writers. Some of the numbers are illustrated. Address FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Standard Scientific Works

- Works by Alexander Bain.
 English Composition and Rhetoric.....$1.75
 Education as a Science..... 1.75
- Works by Charles Darwin.
 Origin of Species, 2 vols.....$4.00
 Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization..... 2.00
 Life and Letters of Charles Darwin. By Francis Darwin. 2 vols..... 4.50
 Different Forms of Flowers on Plants of the same Species..... 2.00
- Works by J. W. Draper.
 History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.....$1.75
- Works by Ernst Haeckel.
 The History of Creation. 2 vols.....$5.00
- Works by Huxley.
 Lay Sermons.....$1.75
 The Advance of Science..... .25
 American Addresses..... 1.25
 More Criticisms on Darwin..... .50
 The Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals..... 2.00
- Works by John Stewart Mill.
 Principles of Political Economy. 2 vols.....$4.00
 On Liberty..... 1.25
- Works by Richard A. Proctor.
 Other Worlds than Ours.....$1.75
 Our Place among Infinities..... 1.75
 Light Science for Leisure Hours..... 1.75
- Works by Herbert Spencer.
 Studies of Sociology.....$1.50
 Man versus the State..... .30
 First Principles..... 2.00
 Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Psychology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Principles of Sociology. 2 vols..... 4.00
 Discussions in Science, Philosophy, etc..... 2.00
 Universal Progress..... 2.00
 Essays, Moral, Political and Esthetic..... 2.00
 Education..... 1.25
 Organic Evolution..... .75
- Works by Andrew D. White.
 Paper-Money Inflation in France.....$.50
 The Warfare of Science..... 1.00
- Works by Sir Henry Maudsley.
 Body and Mind.....$1.50
 Responsibility in Mental Disease..... 1.50
- Works by Prof. E. L. Youmans.
 Handbook of Household Science.....$1.75
 Culture Demanded by Modern Life..... 1.75
- MISCELLANEOUS.
 By Asa Gray.
 Darwiniana.....$2.00
- By L. L. McLaughlin.
 Mill's Principles of Political Economy.....$3.50
- By C. Marcel.
 Study of Languages.....$1.25
- By Lester F. Ward.
 Dynamic Sociology. 2 vols.....$5.00
- By Frederick Overman.
 A Treatise on Metallurgy.....$5.00
- B. F. G. Fairfield.
 Ten Years with Spiritual Mediums.....$1.25
- By W. B. Carpenter.
 Mesmerism, Spiritualism, etc.....$1.25
- By Prof. Jos. Le Conte.
 Evolution.....$1.50
- By Sir John Lubbock.
 Origin of Civilization.....$5.00
- By Charles A. Abbott.
 A Naturalist's Rambles about Home.....$1.50
- By Garrett P. Serviss.
 Astronomy with an Opera Glass.....$1.50
- By Nathan Sheppard.
 Darwinism States by Darwin Himself.....$1.50
- English as She is Spoke.....$.30
 English as She is Wrote..... .30
 The Distracted Young Preacher..... .25
- Address the Freethought Publishing Co.

NATHANIEL VAUGHN

A Splendid Radical Novel.
 BY FREDERIKA MACDONALD.
 404 pages. Price reduced to $1. The Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. E. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR..... 35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR..... 6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Crimes Against Criminals.

By R. G. INGERSOLL.

Price, 10 Cents.
 Address, The Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

A HAND-BOOK OF

FREETHOUGHT.

By W. S. BELL.

Containing in condensed and systematized form a vast amount of evidence against the superstitious doctrines of Christianity, selected from the writings of the most distinguished authors.
 The work consists of 381 pages and an index. Bound handsomely in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale by the Freethought Publishing Company, 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

CREED OF CHRISTENDOM

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

By W. R. GREG.

Complete in one volume, 12mo, 399pp., $1.50.
Freethought Publishing Co.,
 838 Howard st., San Francisco, Cal.

Prof. W. S. Bell's Lectures in Oregon.

Mitchell	Aug. 20, 21
Prineville and vicinity	" 23, 28
Monument	" 30
Hamilton	" 31
Fox	S. pt. 1, 2
John Day	" 4
Prairie City	" 5
Baker City	" 6, 7
Union	" 8
New Bridge	" 10, 11
Summerville	" 12, 13
Heppner	" 15, 16
Dayton	" 20, 21
Rosalia	" 23
Plaza	" 24
Oakdale	" 26
Spokane	" 27
Davenport	" 28, 29

- 14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....$ 4 0
- 10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 0
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin..... 2 75
- 14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
- 10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin..... 4 00
- 10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 3 00
- 14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain)..... 4 50
- 10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 5 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain)..... 6 00
- 14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
 Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUNNAM & MACDONALD,
 04 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE WEEKLY STAR,

THE PEOPLE'S PAPER!

Per Year.....$1.50
 Six Months..... .75
 Three Months..... .50

EDITED BY

F. B. PERKINS, JAS. H. BARRY.

OFFICE:

429 Montgomery st., San Francisco.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
 12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth $1.50.

NOW READY

MY RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

Address, THE FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING Co., 838 Howard St., San Francisco, Cal.

Ireland and the Pope.

A History of Papal Intrigues Against LIBERTY,

By JUDGE J. G. MAGUIRE.

Condemned by the Catholic hierarchy. Price 50 cents. Address this office.

PLAIN HOME TALK

—BY—

EDWARD B. FOOTE, M. D.,

ABOUT THE

Human system—the habits of men and women—causes and prevention of disease—sexual relations and social natures, embracing

MEDICAL COMMON SENSE

APPLIED TO

Men, women, society, love, marriage, parentage, etc.,

Two hundred illustrations. Price $1.50
FREETHOUGHT PUBLISHING COMPANY,
338 Howard st., San Francisco.

The Same in German.

OFFENE VOLKS-SPRACHE.

PRICE, $1.50.

Dr. ELLEN D. MOORE,

Hygienic Physician.

Office and Residence: 1169 Brush Street,

Corner Brush and 14th sts., Oakland.

HOURS: 10 to 12 a.m.

25tf

Health and Hygienic Works.

Eating for Strength. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D., $1.
How to Strengthen the Memory. By M. L. Holbrook, M.D. $1.

Relation of the Sexes. By Mrs. E. B. Duffy. $1.
Hygiene of the Brain. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.50.
Parturition Without Pain. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
Aids to Family Government. By Bertha Meyer and Herbert Spencer. $1

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, and Headache. By M. L. Holbrook. $1.

Deep Breathing, as a Means of Promoting the Art of Song, etc. By Sophia M. A. Ciccolina. Ills. 50.

Marriage and Parentage. M. L. Holbrook. $1.
Medical Hints on the Singing Voice. By Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S. 30 cents

I HAVE THE LARGEST FACTORY ON THE PACIFIC COAST and the most reliable work in the market, and it will be to your interest before buying to write for descriptive circular and prices and reference sheet from the best and leading merchants of San Francisco and other places, who have discarded cheap, unreliable Eastern work and adopted mine.

CHAS. WALTZ

INVENTOR AND MANUFACTURER OF

THE WALTZ SAFE
Fire and Burglar proof Safes, Time Locks, Bank and Vault Work.

13 & 15 Drum St., San Francisco.

Expert work done in Opening and Repairing Safes and Locks. Special Styles of Safes, Boxes, etc., built to order.

The Waltz Safe is absolutely fire-proof. The Waltz Safe is entirely damp-proof. It is fire, fall, and thief resisting. It is the only safe worth refilling after a fire. It is not the cheapest safe in the market, when compared by size only—it is the cheapest safe when all of its merits are considered. Bear in mind that ordinarily, the purchase of a safe is for a life-time, therefore seek the best and avoid one that is offered on its merit of cheapness only.

Second hand safes always in stock which have been taken in exchange on new for sale Cheap.

RUPTURE

In advertising Dr. PIERCE'S Patent MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS, the assurance is given that we are offering the Best Truss in the World. This Celebrated Appliance has been extensively sold for many years and has Radically Cured thousands of cases of Rupture! This is an Electric Truss (the only successful one ever invented); has no Iron Hoops or Steel Springs about it, and being elastic, can be worn with ease and comfort Night and Day. It's a perfect restainer! For further particulars of Truss, send 4c. in stamps for Pamphlet No. 1 and REMEMBER that Dr. Pierce's Genuine Electric Trusses contain our Private Signature exactly like that shown at top of this advertisement. Beware of inferior imitations!

Address: MAGNETIC ELASTIC TRUSS COMPANY, 704 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL STREET.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

THE MONARCH.

TRADE MARK.

None Genuine Without this Trade Mark on Every Bottle.

PURELY VEGETABLE.

AN INFALLIBLE CURE

—FOR—

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, GOUT,

Lumbago, Asthma, Constipation, Sciatica, Dropsy, Malaria, Indigestion, and all Kidney, Liver, and Stomach Troubles.

$1 PER BOTTLE, SIX FOR $5.

C. H. WEBB, Sole Proprietor and Manufacturer, No. 40 O'Farrel Street, San Francisco.

For sale by all druggists. Send for Circulars.

NEVER FAILS. CAUTION—Beware of imitations. Note my trade mark closely

$25.00 REWARD $25.00

For any of the above diseases that C. H. WEBB'S HÆMONY will not cure.

References from People Who Have Used C. H. Webb's Hæmony.

Hon A. Van R. Paterson, Judge Supreme Court, S. F.
Henry L. Dodge, Esq., Pres Sather Banking Co S. F.
Captain Ferris, Steamer Apache, San Francisco.
S. M. West, Esq., 1209 Bush street, San Francisco.
Robert Smith, contractor, 1810 Larkin street, S. F.
John Birmingham, Police Officer, 340 18th street, S. F.
James T. Bonefield, Member of Lincoln Post, No. 1. Residence, 8 Harriet street, San Francisco.
Mrs. W. Gerdes, widow of Ex-Chief Gerdes, San Jose Fire dept. Residence, Haywards st. Los Angeles.

And I can also refer you to hundreds of others who Have Been Cured by my great remedy HÆMONY.

C. H. Webb's Hæmony. Carefully packed and shipped by Express to all parts of the world. Send money by P. O. Order or through Wells, Fargo & Co.

"SHORTHAND" is a pamphlet of information by the editor of BROWNE'S PHONOGRAPHIC WEEKLY, that tells how to learn the art in the shortest time; sent free by addressing D. L. Scott-Browne, 251 West Fourth street, New York.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. III—No. 33.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1890.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, | EDITORS. | SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to The Freethought Publishing Co., 838 Howard Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 16, 1890

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

We all went to the picnic. It was a slow climb over the hills, winding through the canyon. It did not seem as if we ascended much, but in a little while we rode a thousand feet above the valley. It was a beautiful place, like a chamber in the midst of the vast forest, with a green waving carpet, speckled with flowers, and the wild strawberry as sweet as honey. The horses were unharnessed, and like Nebuchadnezzar went to grass and enjoyed a luxurious dinner, while we also spread the good things on the shining ground, and satisfied a healthful appetite. Overhead the trees boomed with long delightful harmonies, as if an ocean surged against the mountain. We consisted of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Thompson, Leslie and Otto, the children; but we were children all for the time being, exhilarated to "divine youth" by nature's primeval beauty. When the chicken and the ice-cream had grown "small by degrees and beautifully less" and appetite became a memory, we wandered through the glorious arches to where the big rocks loomed over the splendid valleys. From point to point magnificent views unfold. The Granite Hills, of almost solid rock, in snow-white splendor, with tremendous peaks, tower to the left. At the right, the Blue mountains in softer lustre appear. The crowning panorama is the Grand Round valley, resplendent in the sun, with harvest fields, groves, the glinting river along the winding shrubbery, the beautiful villages. Union amidst a mass of trees, La Grande in the faint distance, and on the remote edge of the valley Summer-ville, towards which Hunt's railroad is pointing straight from Union. Around and beyond the valley sweep the azure heights. If one had ears keen enough he might catch the music of a hundred machineries gathering the abundant products. Tourists are charmed with this valley as they come into it from the mountains. It has a delightful appearance, gemmed with homes, a picture of prosperity. Antelope valley, and, beyond that, North Powder and Baker City, might be seen. It was a paradise of which Oregon might well be proud, the wealth of man mingling with nature's beauty and grandeur.

At sunset we get back to the ranch in Antelope Valley, where Thompson is cultivating about five hundred acres. The roses bloom about the house where a few years ago the sage-brush held sway. I enjoyed the picnic, the hills, the trees, the grand sceneries, and the Freethought companionship. At eight o'clock, I am ready for my onward journey. I came pretty near missing it, however. The "overland flyer," the evening train, does not stop at Telocasset—the station near Thompson's—Union being nine miles away. How to get to Baker was a perplexing question, a distance of about thirty miles. To see the train rush right by and then get "left" was tantalizing in the extreme. However, a "special providence" came to my rescue, namely, a special freight train, together with the fact that the "flyer" was two hours behind time. The freight train took me in somewhat after the same fashion that the whale took Jonah, and deposited me at North Powder, where I then mounted the "flyer." It was a happy transformation scene. Really, if anybody ever had a "miracle" performed in their favor, was I not that lucky individual? To have a freight train slide in before the express and transport me to that same express, is something that never happened to any of the ancient pilgrims. They never got to Jerusalem or Mecca in that way. They never had anything better than a miraculous donkey. How much better is a special freight train. That is the kind of providence in which I delight.

I must now go back a little in my story and tell of North Powder and Union. I was at North Powder for lectures Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening, July 26 and 27. I presume if I had gone to this place a couple of years ago, I shouldn't have had a corporal's guard for hearers. But the fire has been burning on and the powder has been ignited, and now it flames. J. Newman is the worker here, formerly of the Methodist church and converted very much after the fashion of myself. It was a pretty solid conversion for the time being, but the skeleton of the church very soon came into conflict with the spirit of religion, and his religion became too broad for the ecclesiastical creeds, and the creeds went to smash. Like myself, he drifted into the Unitarian camp, where everything is so delightful, and only rose-colored views are presented to the religious imagination. By the distribution of Unitarian tracts he has greatly enlightened the people, and destroyed the gloom of orthodoxy. He has given several lectures which have produced a marked effect. He is still ready to progress and accept truth at any cost. The value of his work was attested by the good and attentive audiences at the lectures. I found an educated people.

Side by side with Newman labors N. S. Blank, for eighteen years a Methodist class leader, but his Methodist enthusiasm did not depart with his class-leadership. It blazes in the fields of Freethought. It was by his earnest efforts that the meetings at North Powder were such a success.

Jack Plummer keeps the colors flying also. He is not a sunshine soldier, but is ready for the wars if need be. However, the Christians here did not seem disposed to take our scalp, but quietly listened, and did some thinking, I guess. There is quite a bunch of Mormons here, and, like Jacob, they know how to make a thing or two in the way of business. Bible and business are what the Mormons are expert in. If there is a chance to make money they generally see it. The Mormons are religious materialists and believe in a solid god and a solid earth.

The country about North Powder is excellent. There are fine farms, and a glance over the wide plains shows that everybody is busy. The harvests are good. North Powder is not a very large village, and probably will never be a city, but it will not lack prosperity and comfortable homes. I believe it always will be favorable to Freethought, now that this has found an opportunity to be presented, and the people have shown a generous appreciation.

Mr. and Mrs. White, of the hotel where the traveler is pleasantly entertained; Mr. and Mrs. Brobear, Mr. Beveridge, and others, are among our Liberal allies. James Gilkison is on the list of FREETHOUGHT. There are enough to keep the camp-fires a-going, and we shall pitch our tent here from time to time.

On Monday, July 28, I go from North Powder to Union—handsome as ever, with victory on its brow, for it has just come out of a big fight with La Grande on the county-seat question, and the court-house, where I give the lecture, still abides in this picturesque town, and I guess it will stay here for several decades. As I have never lectured at La Grande, but have lectured at Union and found many warm friends here, I can but rejoice at the fortune of war which puts Union ahead. Hunt's railroad is pointing straight for this place and it is certain now to be an important point.

Coming from the station I was met by Thompson and Jones with a team that went considerably faster than the mail coach, and so I took my station in it. I was driven to the home of A. K. Jones, and enjoyed the Liberal hospitality of himself and wife. After supper, in the cool shade of evening, I meet friends until the lecture hour.

Judge Brainard has moved into new quarters, and they are so neat looking that I was tempted to stay over a whole day and enjoy the serene atmosphere and discuss poetry and philosophy by the hour with my genial friend. At the last election he was about unanimously chosen treasurer of the county, both parties considering him the best man. He is worthy of the honor and always keeps his accounts straight. There is no vicarious credit.

The McComas Bros., whom I met in Chicago under the genial administration of Stevens, I met here on their old camping-ground. E. S. McComas is editor of the Freewater Herald. He makes a lively journal, and is not afraid to give a few hits at the "susceptibility to gullibility" in the American people.

I met Bert W. Huffman, who has been up in Idaho and Montana, and whose facile pen has been giving descriptions of the land he has visited. The Jones Bros. still make the Oregon Scout a foremost journal both for party and for principle, but it never sacrifices principle for party. When Senator Norval, of opposite politics, was attacked by some religious bigots for his Liberal opinions the Scout informed these members of its own party that if they had no better reason for voting against the senator than his Liberalism they might as well give up the campaign, for on such an issue he would be triumphantly elected.

Our good friends Mr. and Mrs. Tarter are as interested as ever in the morning of the world's progress, while the evening of life prevails. This is the "eternal youth" of the free mind.

C. Vincent is also with the flag every time. As the Indians couldn't kill him, so the orthodox shot is equally unavailable. He sticks to the solid earth, and takes no stock in the winged soul, but in the sole that is trampled under foot, which really furnishes the most genuine locomotion for the world's good. Better walk this globe than circle about an immensity of nothing.

Dr. Day, in the same line, industriously and skillfully keeps people from the New Jerusalem. He will not give them a pass to the "better land." Grand Round Valley is more attractive. "Is life worth living?" "That depends upon the liver," would be the doctor's sage advice.

B. Chancey and others give the hand-shake of the Liberal heart.

The Rev. Sam Driver, son and image of Rev. I. D. Driver, of Portland, was present at the lectures, and I was pleased to make his acquaintance. He even said amen to some of my utterances with fine Methodist fervor. I gave him a copy of "My Religious Experience." He may travel the same way. His head is not altogether after the orthodox fashion.

So the campaign went on, short but good. I wanted to stay longer, and shall the next time, for there is always a combination of good things at Union. "The Union forever!"

In the moonlight I go out nine miles, with G. A. Thompson and family, to their home under the hills. The next day the picnic, with whose description I began this article, joined its glad array to the line of march. In the evening I went on to Baker, via Special Providence. Wednesday morning I take Clark's stage for New Bridge, and of New Bridge and Eagle Valley I have many good things to write hereafter. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

IRELAND'S WORST ENEMY.

The fact that the rulers of church and state always work together as long as their co-operation is of advantage to either is illustrated by the present attitude of the pope toward Ireland. Whenever the English government has wanted an ally in its oppression of the Irish people it has found one at the Vatican and in nearly every diocese on the Emerald Isle. Judge J. G. Maguire, in his work on "Ireland and the Pope," has pointed out the truth of this, and it is confirmed by the present attitude of Pope Leo XIII. Reports from the seat of difficulty relate that papal interference on behalf of coercive government in Ireland is becoming a very grave problem for the Irish party. One Bishop O'Dwyer, of Limerick, who has attacked the Irish leaders with a virulence unequalled by their bitterest political opponents, has been favored by the pope with a letter strongly commending his action, and an ecclesiastic known to be a sympathizer with the people has been summoned to Rome, as McGlynn was in this country, to defend himself before the college of cardinals.

There is and always has been an intrigue between the Tory government of England and the pope at Rome. The government knows that the pope can control the masses of the Irish people through their superstitions, and finds it cheaper to purchase the pope's influence than to govern the people wholly by force. The Tories are not Catholics. They are mainly supporters of the Established church, but, like all politicians, they are ready to enter into illicit relations with the scarlet woman. They impoverish their Irish subjects by taxation, and the pope robs them by extorting tribute and Peter's pence; and between the two thieves the Catholic Irish are kept in a perpetual state of pauperism. There has been no time within the memory of this writer when there was not a subscription paper open for the "poor of Ireland;" yet the same poor of Ireland have always been wealthy enough to send the pope from fifty thousand to a hundred thousand dollars per year in Peter's pence alone, and to support a priest or two for every one hundred inhabitants besides. In return for this the pope sends the Irish people an occasional benediction, which they naturally hold dear, since it has cost them about five thousand dollars a word; and he gives letters of encouragement and all the weight of his political influence to their oppressors. And after all this, the Catholic journals, like the "Monitor" of San Francisco, assure Irishmen of the "holy father's" deep love for them and of his earnest solicitude for their welfare. At the same time the pope never makes a protest against the imprisonment of some humble priest who advocates the rights of Ireland. They might all rot in jail before he would take their part; and if their violation of the laws against free speech does not land them in jail, he calls them to Rome for discipline.

Ireland never had greater enemies than the popes it has helped to enrich, and the human race never had a greater enemy than the church of which the popes have been the head.

OREGON SECULAR UNION CONGRESS.

By virtue of the authority vested in us as directors of the Oregon State Secular Union, we hereby call the Second Annual Congress of said union to meet in Portland, Oregon, at New Arien Hall, corner of Second and Oak streets, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the 11th, 12th, and 13th days of October, 1890.

Persons from all parts of the world who are willing to guarantee civil and religious liberty to the people, secure the taxation of church property, favor the total separation of church and state, and oppose ecclesiastical legislation, are invited to attend and join the union, there being no fees or dues required of the members.

The members of the union will take notice that a motion will be made to change and amend article twelfth of the constitution so that it will be made to read as follows: "Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any annual congress of the union by a two-thirds vote of the qualified members present."

C. BEAL,
LEE LAUGHLIN,
J. K. SEARS.

HOW THE "KREUTZER SONATA" WAS EXCLUDED.

It appears that a Chicago post-office clerk was the first to discover that Tolstoi's new story was dangerous. The Chicago "Tribune" thus relates the circumstance:

John M. Hubbard, the assistant postmaster of Chicago, who sings in a church choir, was the first to discover the true inwardness of the "Kreutzer Sonata." One day about two weeks ago a representative of Sergel & Co., a publishing house, called on Mr. Hubbard and said he desired to send a new translation of Count Tolstoi's novel through the mails. The representative handed to Mr. Hubbard a book of 170 pages, with a yellow cover. Mr. Hubbard said he would glance through the book and give his opinion. That afternoon he adjusted his eye-glasses and got a focus on the yellow-covered novel. When he reached page thirty-three he placed the eye-glasses in the water-cooler. When he reached page forty-seven he tore into Colonel Sexton's room.

"Who is this Tolstoi?" he demanded.

"One of Hertz's people in the carriers' department," Colonel Sexton replied without looking up.

"Oh, no, he isn't," Mr. Hubbard roared. "He's some foreign fellow. He's written the awfulest book I ever read."

"Let me look at it," said Colonel Sexton, starting up.

"But I'm not half through myself."

"Oh, you can get another copy," said the postmaster, and he took the book.

That evening the postmaster read as far as page 44. The result was that he wrote to Postmaster-General John Wanamaker in Washington, appending a copy of the "Kreutzer Sonata," and asking the opinion of Mr. Wanamaker as to whether it was proper to ship Count Tolstoi's novel and the Northwestern Christian Advocate in the same canvas bag. Mr. Wanamaker's reply came in two days. It read: "Refuse to receive the 'Kreutzer Sonata.'"

And when the representative of Sergel & Co. called at the postoffice, Thursday, he was informed that the mails were closed to the "Kreutzer Sonata."

"This work," Colonel Sexton said, "is directed particularly against the institution of marriage, and it uses gross language to convey the author's ideas. It is not the most immoral book I know of, but particular attention was called to this, and I decided to leave the task of deciding whether it should go through the mails to the Washington authorities."

The result of the prohibition has been to increase the sale of the "Kreutzer Sonata" twenty fold. Just after Wanamaker's decision was made public a Kearny-street bookseller informed us that within the past two days he had sold twenty-five or thirty copies, though previously he had sold none.

The pretense is that the Comstock laws are for the suppression of obscene literature, but the suppression of Tolstoi's book shows that they are to be used for the suppression of anything our postal officials, in their wisdom born of idiocy, do not happen to approve. It is not charged that the book under discussion is obscene, because the book itself would refute that charge. There is not even any gross language in it. When Colonel Sexton, of Chicago, says it is directed against the institution of marriage he misunderstands the work. Marriage itself—that is, the sexual association of men and women—is attacked, but the marriage law or institution is not. Tolstoi takes the ground assumed by Cardinal Manning in his discussion with Ingersoll, that celibacy is the highest estate; and it is to be presumed that Cardinal Manning, besides advocating this doctrine, is criminal enough to practice it, along with such other members of the priesthood as are compelled by physical infirmities to do likewise. If Tolstoi may not recommend continence in the "Kreutzer Sonata," why should Cardinal Manning be permitted to do so in the "North American Review," the pope in an encyclical, or the priest in a sermon?

It is humiliating to an American citizen to say it, but Wanamaker has written himself an immortal ass. He appears to be under the delusion that when he was raised, by God, as he thinks was the case, from the Sunday-school to the post-office, he came at once into the same relation toward the whole people of the country that he had previously occupied toward the promising class of imbeciles to whom he taught Bible lessons in his Philadelphia church. Consequently he regards it as his duty to overlook their literature, and is happy to be so situated that he can use the law of the land to enforce his supervision. Wanamaker illustrates powerfully the pernicious effect of rewarding an incompetent man with an office of honor and responsibility for no other reason than that he can raise a large sum of money for one political party to use in defeating another.

It might be proper to suggest to post-office officials everywhere, and to Wanamaker especially, that they are appointed to forward the people's mail matter, not to detain or delay it; and that they have no more to do with the moral character of such matter than the conductor of a train has to do with the reputation of his passengers.

THE power of the Catholic Index Expurgatorius is shown in the fate of Lilian Leland's book, "A Woman's Journey Around the World." No work by a previously unknown author ever received a more cordial welcome from the press of the country. If editorial commendation could carry a literary venture through to success, this one would have had a tremendous sale. But it seems that the Catholic church has its agents in the headquarters of the News Company at New York. These agents discovered that Lilian Leland had satirized the holy pictures and relics at Rome, and her book was condemned. Not only were all the agencies throughout the country ordered to cease handling it, as soon as this discovery was made, but they were instructed to gather up and return all unsold copies; the result being that a large part of the edition was piled back upon the publisher's hands, and he had to pay express charges on the books returned. The thing was done quietly but effectively, and we know of no place where "A Woman's Journey Around the World" is for sale except at this office. We were lucky enough to get in an order in time to catch some fifty copies that were about being shipped East to the publisher. We take some pleasure in the thought that we have been instrumental in circulating four or five hundred copies of the book.

THE advocates of Sunday laws should brace up and know something. Mrs. J. C. Bateman, who flourishes the sesquipedalian title of "National Superintendent of the Sabbath Observance Department of the Women's Christian Temperance Union," said in a lecture here last Sunday evening that the Sunday newspaper was a Sabbath desecration in that it compelled editors, reporters, and printers to work on Sunday. Mrs. Bateman ought to inform herself that the work done by these Sunday workers is for the Monday morning edition, which a strictly enforced Sunday law would make impossible, as it would the reporting of her lecture and the sermons of the clergy.

CALIFORNIA is said to be flooded with petitions to Congress for the closing of the World's Fair at Chicago on Sunday, though the flood has not yet reached this office. We would like to know what Congress has to do with the matter. The World's Fair concerns every citizen as much as it does the select gentlemen who compose our national legislature; and these few select gentlemen have no more right to shut other citizens out of the fair on Sunday than the other citizens have to shut them out on Monday. Congressmen are public servants, not little two-legged gods on salary.

IT would be interesting to know whether President Harrison, when he wrote his anti-lottery message, was aware that a law prohibiting the advertising of lotteries would have the effect to imprison his son Russell, who runs a pro-lottery paper in one of the interior states. Also what his opinion is of "Mrs. President" Harrison, who raffles off plaques at church or charity fairs at a dollar a chance.

EXPLORER STANLEY, talking about missionary prospects in Africa, says that he foresees trouble between Protestant and Roman Catholic converts. In view of this possibility it might be well for the churches to recall their missionaries, and thus avoid introducing new elements of discord among the Africans, to whom Mohammedanism seems to be a quite satisfactory form of superstition.

E. A. LYTKEN, a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, has recently been drawing to himself the attention of the religious people of this city on account of his extreme piety, and by his evidence of distress over the lax Christianity prevalent in San Francisco. The news which comes from Brantford, Ontario, that he is a fraud and a swindler is not therefore at all surprising.

FROM the many replies to Dr. Anderson's lecture that have been sent to this office we have selected for publication the one which appears to cover the most ground in the fewest words. We are quite willing that Dr. Anderson's lecture should be discussed, but cannot give up the whole paper to it. The review found in another column is by a well-known Oakland physician.

THE Rev. J. W. Army, whose horserace at Saranac, Mich., last week excited the people of the two hemispheres, will be hauled over the coals by the coming conference. He will be compelled to abandon his fast horses or his ministerial charge. As between horses and the longer-eared specimens composing the conference, Mr. Army will be wise if he sticks to his horses.

THE St. Paul, Minn., Spiritual Alliance, which met recently, passed resolutions condemning the prosecution of Walter E. Reid, and recommending a National Medium's Association for mutual protection. It now looks as if the whole unorthodox community would have to combine for mutual protection unless Wanamaker and Comstock are repressed.

THE death of Cardinal Newman, the English theologian, which occurred last Monday, removes one of the most civilized men in the Catholic church. The great blot upon his memory is that he used his talents and his learning to help perpetuate despotism over the minds of his fellow-men.

THE czar of Russia, who is the head of the Greek church, demands that the pope shall address him as an equal, which the pope refuses to do. His Roman holiness is justified in his course. He is a greater humbug than the czar, and should insist upon his pre-eminence.

OBSERVATIONS.

The case of Nationalist Ashton against Nationalist Sinz has been tried in court and dismissed. The interested reader will remember that Mr. Otto Sinz, having examined the books kept by Mr. Ashton as financial secretary of the Central Nationalist Club, reported a shortage in the accounts, and thereupon accused Mr. Ashton with embezzlement, putting his charges on paper in a good legible hand. The unpleasantness was added to by a paragraph in FREETHOUGHT relating to the circumstance, and Mr. Ashton swore out a dreadful warrant, wherein it was set forth that Mr. Sinz had libeled the complainant. Then a large policeman, with heavy soles on his shoes, walked into Mr. Sinz's place of business and escorted Otto to the station house. But Mr. Sinz rallied his old friends and found a new one in Judge Lawler, who set him at liberty without bail. Then Mr. Sinz got a lawyer to attend to his case, and went back to his jeweler's bench. His attorney desired to move to have the case dismissed, but Otto wouldn't have it. His reputation for veracity was at stake, and he wanted it vindicated. The trial was had in installments of from thirty minutes to one hour each. It came up sometimes twice in one week, and then was shot over into the next one, and every time it got interesting the court adjourned. Messrs. Ashton and Haskell acted as witnesses for the prosecution—Mr. Ashton confident and aggressive, Mr. Haskell glib and complaisant. Mr. Haskell, throughout the trial, occupied the left ear of their attorney, Walter Gallagher, while Mr. Ashton filled the right ear with hints and advice. Mr. Sinz's attorney was Mr. Hutton, a gentleman who brings to the practice of law a high intellectual forehead and a deep-sea voice. He asked questions bearing upon the case, to all of which Mr. Gallagher objected on the ground that they were "irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial." At this display of legal lore on the part of his attorney Mr. Ashton would fall back with his elbows resting on the rail of the prisoners' pen behind him, and gaze upon Mr. Gallagher with an expression of the greatest admiration. Nothing but the austerity of the court, apparently, restrained him from bursting into applause. Mr. Ashton told his story and said the books had been kept to the best of his ability, such discrepancies as were visible being due to inadvertence. Mr. Haskell testified to the same effect. Mr. Sinz, when placed on the stand, showed some errors in addition in favor of the financial secretary, and exhibited receipts signed by Mr. Ashton not entered in the records. Upon these and some other irregularities he had based his charges. Mr. P. Ross Martin, called by the defense, pointed out that there were entries against his name in the books of which he knew nothing. The transactions there recorded had never taken place. Mr. Albert Currlin's testimony was the same as that of Mr. Martin. Mr. Gore, treasurer of the society, said that he had handled none of the funds of the society, and had resigned his office because he had nothing to do. To the most of this testimony Mr. Gallagher objected on the ground that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial. The last witness for the prosecution on the last day of the trial, August the 6th, was Mr. Haskell, who related a conversation alleged to have taken place between himself and Mr. Sinz, in which was unearthed a deep conspiracy against Mr. Ashton. The witness also casually testified that Messrs. P. Ross Martin and Albert Currlin had told untruths while upon the witness stand. When Mr. Haskell's flow of language had ceased, Mr. Sinz was recalled and asked if the testimony of the preceding witness was true, and replied that, leaving out one obscure and immaterial point, it was totally false. Thereupon Mr. Hutton, addressing the court, said: "Your honor, Mr. Haskell's testimony is of an altogether unexpected nature, and if true would show malice on the part of the defendant. I desire, therefore, to have the case continued in order that I may introduce a large number of reputable citizens as witnesses who will testify, as to Mr. Haskell's reputation for truth and veracity, that he is not to be believed under oath."

The Court replied that it did not consider such testimony necessary, as the Court would be prepared to render a decision on the following day. Thursday morning the case was dismissed, Judge Lawler remarking that while the charge of libel had not been proved, it was evidently made in good faith. So Mr. Sinz again returned to the jeweler's bench; but the last time I saw him he had not recovered from his astonishment over the ability of some people to testify with unblushing countenance to that which is not. The trial was about the driest I ever listened to, and it emptied the courtroom of spectators every time it came up. But there was one ray of light. When Treasurer Gore had the stand the prosecuting attorney inquired if there was not a "faction" in the club opposed to Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Gore replied that there was but one kind of faction, which affected six hundred and eighty out of seven hundred, and that was dissatisfaction.

A case was tried in the police court the other day which the papers have not reported. It was the case of the People of the State of California against James Mehaffey, aged 9. The defendant, accompanied by his mother, sat in a chair with his feet dangling eight inches from the floor. The judge, the prosecuting attorney, all the police officers, and a hundred spectators gazed sternly upon the culprit as the clerk, ordering him to stand up, read the indictment in a terrible voice. "Statecaliforny, ci 'n count' Sanfancis," yelled the clerk, and then rattled on: "Personally 'peared before me this steenth day of August, 1890, Peleg Yohansen, who on oath makes complaint, and deposes and says that on the blankety-blank day of August, annie domino, 1890, in the cit 'n count Sanfancis, state of California, the crime of ROBBERY was committed, to wit, by James Mehaffey, who then and there did feloniously, and with force and arms make an assault upon Peleg Yohansen, and with violence to his person, and against his will, did then and there feloniously and violently steal, take, and carry away by force from the person of the said Peleg Yohansen ONE POCKET KNIFE of the value of TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, good and lawful money of the 'Nited States, and of the personal property of said Peleg Yohansen. All of which is contrary to form, force, and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace of the People of the State of California and their dignity."

When the clerk got through with what "this complainant" alleged, said, deposed, and prayed, little Jimmie Mehaffey, who had violated the peace and offended the dignity of all California, was broken in spirit and ready to ask the state to forgive him.

I did not stay to learn how the case terminated; but who ever heard of a two-bit offender going unwhipped of Justice?

I print this second letter from Mr. Frank M. Coburn all the more readily because he seems to have more light to throw on the labor question than I have:

I think your criticism of my letter in FREETHOUGHT on the 2d inst., when put on the scales of reason and self-preservation, will be of light weight. In regard to foreigners doing many kinds of work that you would not like to do, there are other people who would be glad of the opportunity to do it, as you can find out by going along the city front of your city any working day at seven o'clock in the morning. You will there see men who would do any kind of honest labor if they had the chance. In fact, this country is flooded with laboring men. If an employer of labor needs one man to work and two apply for the situation, being honest men, he knows they would rather work than steal or beg. He can tell one of them that he can not work without eating, so he will give him something to eat if he will go to work for him; put all the profit of the laborer's work in his own pocket, and tell the other man he has no use for him. Now if an employer needs two men and can find only one, does it not occur to you that the working man will have a better chance to make a trade with him? In regard to the intelligent foreigner that you learn from, if there is a surplus of skilled labor he is a more dangerous competitor, for he can take your place when the ignorant man could not. You are mistaken when you think I would not give all men an equal chance, but you are rushing things when you want one nation to supply labor for its own children and all the world besides. In regard to converting the churches into lecturing halls, it would be the best way to have the intelligent Christians honestly read the Bible; they would immediately be converted to Infidelity. Take the well-organized Roman Catholic church, free immigration, and parochial schools; how long would it be before they will outvote the unorganized Protestants, Jews, and Infidels? And as a majority rules in this country, when you have brought things to this beautiful condition, don't you think it will be time for men of your and my belief to take passage in the first boat for heathen lands? Not wishing to emigrate from my native country, I think it is time for Americans to take stringent measures to avert such a calamity.

FRANK M. COBURN.

I am not able to say how long it will be before the Roman Catholics will outvote the "unorganized Protestants, Jews, and Infidels." I am under the impression that they do so now in the larger cities. They certainly have grasped San Francisco firmly by the umbilical cord, and control many of its departments, but their rule has not as yet become quite as bad as was that of the puritans in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and contiguous localities. To be generous we might credit them with blunting the edge of puritan bigotry by opposing it with their own, and it is the foreign custom of a free Sunday that has thus far saved the country from the enforcement of Sunday laws. Catholicism has deviltry enough at its door, and inside of its doors, but it is not responsible for Comstock and Wanamaker, the American Sabbath Union, and Senator Blair.

A fairly stringent measure, which I regard as more equitable than exclusion, would be to demand that before proceeding to vote upon our affairs the immigrant should forswear allegiance to all foreign potentates, including the pope of Rome and the Jehovah of the Jews.

Dr. Jerome A. Anderson had me among his auditors again last Sunday evening, on which occasion he delivered his entertaining and anon thrilling discourse on "Post Mortem States." The lecture dealt with the condition of the human being subsequent to its demise, and was illustrated by a chart, which represented three differently colored circles one above another. The lower circle stood for the earth plane, where, in the expressive language of the Theosophical speaker, we are at present functioning. The next circle above covered the locality of disembodied souls, while the upper one embraced the realm of nirvana, where the spirit is reabsorbed into the absolute, as the doctor explained it. Some souls never get farther than the middle circle, or the Karma loga, if I understand the matter; while the souls of Materialists, if they may be said to have any, are in danger of perishing everlastingly on the earth plane.

After the lecture, the president, Dr. Griffiths, invited questions from those present. The first querist was a self-possessed gentleman, who, after paying a deserved compliment to the ability of the lecturer, announced himself very much interested in the facts set forth. He then went on to say that he would like to be told where Dr. Anderson acquired his extensive information about post mortem states.

Dr. Anderson, in reply, said that by taking the proper course of study the gentleman would know as much about it as he did. Dr. Griffiths added, as an appendix to Dr. Anderson's explanation, that Theosophy could have no affinity with Materialism, which he described as non-existent save in an illusion of the mind.

Other questions were asked by those seeking light, including a clergyman who took special interest in the views set forth, and who made several inquiries without satisfactory results. The next morning this clergyman called at the office of FREETHOUGHT and left some thoughts he had jotted down, and which I here append:

I am in distress of mind, and though I am a preacher, I know of no other paper in the city but FREETHOUGHT that will sympathize with me. Having a vacation, I came to the city to furbish up my mind by contact with the fine minds here. I was progressing favorably, until last night I received a severe backset at the Theo-sophist Society. I had an idea that I am about forty years old; it is probable I am as many million years old! I can no longer plead my youth in excuse for error or mis-doing! Theos pity me! I had a notion that this is the only experience I have had with the earth; but it is certain that I have been on the earth in many instances before. This may be the thousandth or ten thousandth time I have been reincarnated, refreshed. I ought to be pretty familiar with the flesh by this time, understanding it in its abyssms; but I am not, and I have no excuse! Sophos enlighten me!

What a different view this gives of life! I have begun to put it to use already. Pardon one illustration. At the breakfast table this morning at the hotel, a seeming baby cried out in pain. The "mother" pitied it and petted it. I laughed in superior wisdom. I knew it was some old fool who had come all the way from nirvana to enjoy the colic. He got no sympathy from me for his fraud and folly. But I must abandon this tempting field. When I go home I intend to preach a sermon on the subject that will be worth hearing.

