Scope and Content Note

The papers of the Short-Harrison-Symmes families span the years 1760-1878, with the bulk of the material dated between 1800 and 1860. Collected chiefly by John Cleves Short (1792-1864), the papers relate primarily to the families' financial interests, especially in land and in land speculation. They consist primarily of correspondence, supplemented by bills and receipts, diaries, account books, ledgers, genealogical material, and some printed matter. The collection is organized in four series: Short-Symmes Families, Harrison Family, Miscellany, and Microfilm.

The family history begins with Judge John Cleves Symmes (1742-1814) who moved to Ohio in 1786, with the hope of amassing a fortune through land speculation, a dream that was not to materialize. His daughter Anna married William Henry Harrison in 1795; his other daughter, Maria, had in 1789 married Peyton Short, brother of the diplomat William Short. Peyton Short worked closely with his father-in-law's land ventures but also failed to achieve the hoped for success. One of his sons, Charles Wilkins Short (1794-1863), became a noted botanist; the other, John Cleves Short, studied law but pursued the family's interest in land, acting as agent for his uncle William Short, who was to become a millionaire after leaving the diplomatic service. When William Short died in 1849, he left most of his estate to his nephews Charles Wilkins Short and John Cleves Short, thereby establishing their fortunes. The connection between the Short and Harrison families was further strengthened in 1814 by the marriage between John Cleves Short and his first cousin Betsy Harrison; and for the rest of his life, he maintained a close relationship with the Harrisons, often rescuing them from financial difficulty.

The Short-Harrison-Symmes families may be seen as a network of business associates engaged primarily in land speculation. The interconnections of their business activities are documented in their letters to one another, which were collected by John Cleves Short, the author or recipient of many of them. The correspondence of his father, Peyton Short, and of his uncle, William, came into his possession through his role as executor of their estates. Similarly, he served as executor of the estates of his grandfather Symmes and of his uncle William Henry Harrison, thereby acquiring papers relating to those men. This body of family papers he transmitted to his heirs, and they were eventually purchased by the Library of Congress. (The papers of William Short are described in a separate finding aid.)

In addition to documenting the families' financial interests, the papers of the Short-Harrison-Symmes families are a source of information about the settlement of the Ohio Valley near Cincinnati, 19th-century business practices and agriculture, and the disruptions inflicted by the outbreak of the Civil War on the financial community. There is a significant amount of information on the Harrison family, particularly about its financial condition after the President's death. John Cleves Short maintained an extensive correspondence with his brother-in-law J. Scott Harrison and sister-in-law Anna Harrison Taylor, and there are a few letters of William Henry Harrison, Jr., and John Cleves Symmes Harrison. Other families represented in the collection are Short's relatives—members of the Ridgely, Dudley, and Breathitt families.

Among the more prominent correspondents are William Branch Giles, Henry Clay, Cave Johnson, Jefferson Davis, James Wilkinson, Robert Pryor Henry, Louis Agassiz, Asa Gray, and Cyrus W. Field. The most notable of the business correspondents is Samuel H. Carpenter of Philadelphia, one of the executors of William Short's estate and business agent in the East of the heirs.

The Microfilm series consists of selected correspondence reproduced from the collection, mainly correspondence between Charles Wilkins Short and John Cleves Short.
