

James Whitcomb Riley, the "Hoosier" poet, who died on July 22 in his home in Indianapolis, surrounded by some of the children who were his playmates. To them he was not only the author of "The Old Swimmin' Hole"; he was also a human being.

Photo by Paul Thompson

All Indianapolis paid tribute to James Whitcomb Riley, the "Hoosier" poet, on the day of the funeral, July 24. The photograph shows the throng following the coffin into the Capitol.

Photo by Paul Thompson

EMPIRE DAY IN A LONDON SCHOOL —The Infant Band played "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary."

Photo from Janet M. Cummings

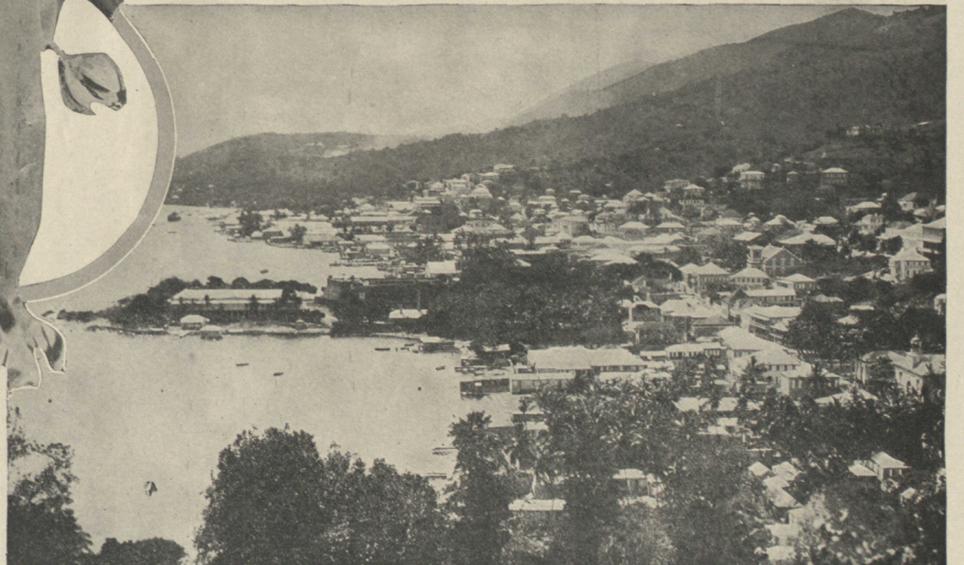

BACK TO NATURE—Also putting the back in front. One of the latest fashion fads if you have a perfectly good decollette back is to place thereon in velvet silhouette the figures of birds, not necessarily of the same feather.

©Underwood & Underwood.

FOR WOUNDED TOMMY ATKINS. —Miss Victoria Wingate, daughter of the Sirdar of Egypt, leaping the

"Trog" in a performance of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Photo from Janet M. Cummings.

A general view of the harbor and town of St. Thomas, Danish West Indies. Negotiations have practically been completed for the purchase of these islands from Denmark by the United States for $25,000,000.

©International Film Service