Opposite the White House. "Well, it doesn't look to me nearly as big as our place in St. Louis."

Lunch at almost any Washington hotel. Mr. Peck is considering "Scrambled eggs Fougère, 70 cents."

Behind the bars of the Treasury window at lunch time.

"I never want to see another monument or statue, or stuffed animal—I just want to go home and lie down."

The Corcoran Gallery. Mrs. Ruggles discovers that the statue of David is wearing a hat not unlike the one the cook at home has been wearing for the past two seasons.

The Washington Monument. Aunt Hattie, notwithstanding the fact that she is hardly the right size to get through the window, has that sensation of wanting to jump off, and is terribly frightened.

A terrible half hour at the Corcoran Museum while Mr. and Mrs. Grouse, from Little Rock, la., take a flier in art.

Two "cullud pussons" whose regard for proprieties is upset by the suffrage pickets to such an extent that it causes Eliza, on the right, to blush for her sex.
