

Sir William Orpen, at work in Paris on a portrait of Lord Reading, British Ambassador, who returned here last week from France. Sir William is one of the two official artists of the Peace Conference.
Paul Thompson.

The snow-crowned peak of Fujiyama, sacred mountain of Japan, from a new military road. Tradition says that the mountain rose from the plain in a single night. It is the centre of Japanese legend, and with the many picturesque temples on its slopes is the mecca of religious pilgrimages.
A. N. Mirzoeff.

Father Francis A. Kelly, beloved chaplain of the heroic 27th. Cited seven times for gallantry, he was awarded the British D. S. M., the Croix de Guerre and our own D. S. C. Father Kelly was in the thick of it with "New York's Own."
Underwood & Underwood.

One of the rare snowfalls in Paris softens the grim outlines of the captured German guns in the Place de l'Etoile, with the shadowy beauty of the Arc de Triomphe in the background.
Underwood & Underwood.

As the German invaders commandeered and took home with them all available horses in Brussels, the S. C. Dept. of the Belgian capital now uses this humbler means of transport.
Western Newspaper Union.

"David" was a moving picture villain of Los Angeles, who developed an evil eye and a cantankerous temper. Refusing to change his spots he was condemned to the death chair. His execution was a "shocking" affair. The big cat is unsuspectingly waiting for the switch to be thrown.
Keystone View.

The slumbering gentleman on the outside of the empty bottle is the President's newest grandchild, Woodrow Wilson Sayre, aged one week.
Underwood & Underwood.

It's a tenement, but not exactly the kind one cares to move into, with the apartments only eight feet long—a cemetery for the poor in Guatemala, with some 2,000 vaults, in which the bodies are placed. The pigeonholes in this gruesome filing system are then sealed with name plates.
Keystone View.