The Kiss

By J. Campbell Phillips

This exquisite rendering of a beautiful subject is by a portrait painter of famous men. It is printed in full color for the first time by the courtesy of a lover and patron of art, Amos L. Prescott, who lent it to The Tribune from his New York home. Mr. Phillips is now painting a portrait of the Hon. William G. McAdoo for the Treasury at Washington. In the New York City Hall hangs his painting of the late Mayor William J. Gaynor.

Among his other much appreciated child pictures is the delightful painting, "The First-born," which was bought by the Corcoran Galleries, at the national capital, for their permanent collection.
