Recognizing familiar landscapes from wholly new angles is none so easy. This toy affair, with its wide approaches of elaborate pattern, is our own Soldiers and Sailors Monument on Riverside Drive, photographed from an airplane.

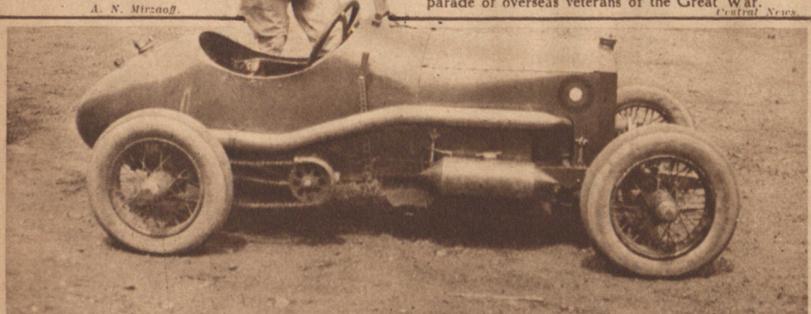

Adolph Weinman, noted sculptor, at work on the bas relief whose simple, dignified design has been adopted by Uncle Sam for the honor button with which each discharged soldier is to be presented.

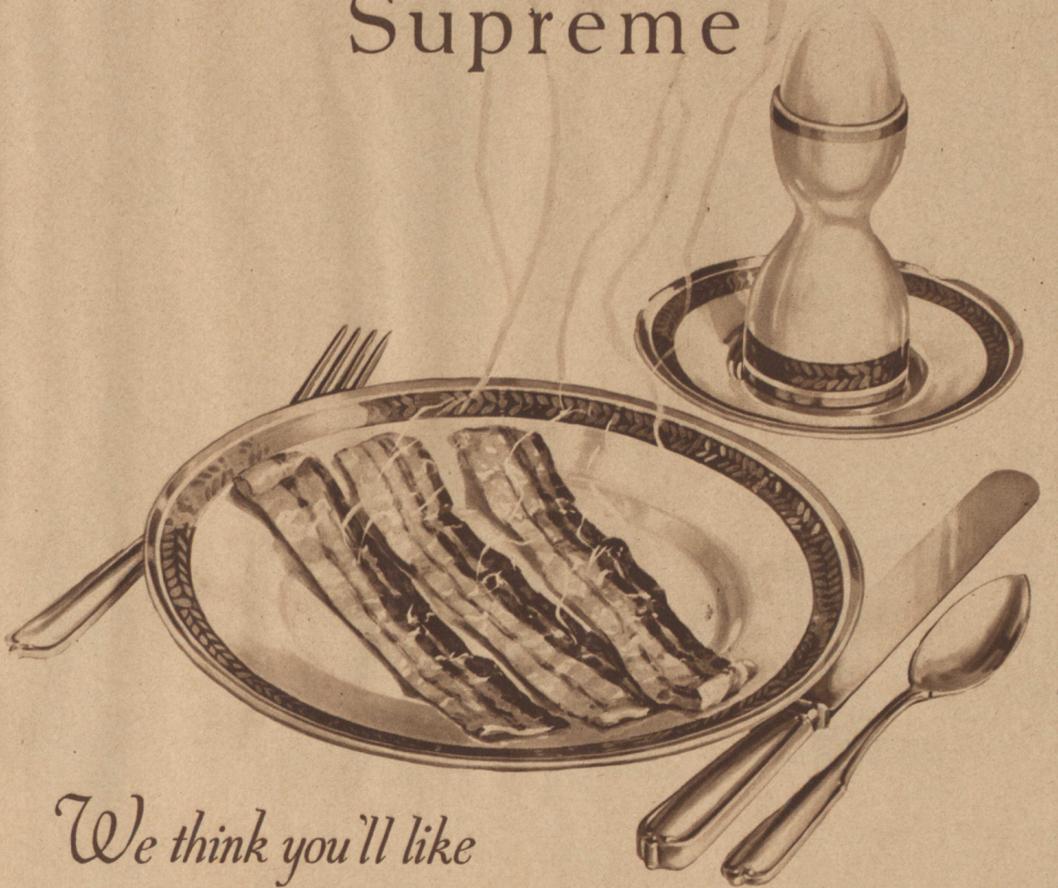

The proud-stepping mascot of the South African troops, a "Springbok," legging it with his men through the streets of London on the recent great parade of overseas veterans of the Great War.

A collection of airplane parts, together with great ingenuity and patience on the part of Lieut. Robert P. Breese, resulted in this diminutive racer. The twin cylinder engine is capable of 20 h. p. and 70 miles an hour, if pushed. The racer has the regular equipment of a standard size car.
