The Wilson Club, one of the many underground cafés of the soft coal miners. Here, hundreds of feet beneath the earth's surface, with boxes and cans for furniture and slabs of soft coal for wall paper, the miners gather at noon hour for lunch, rest and recreation. Keystone View

Below is the famous wooden Hindenburg statue at Berlin, recently sold at auction for firewood. The floral decorations and illumination are in celebration of Hindenburg's birthday. To the right is a close-up of the massive wooden head of Germany's former

Mrs. John Milledge, wife of Major Milledge of the U. S. Air Service, and their 16-months-old baby, who is probably the youngest passenger ever carried aloft in an aeroplane. The flight was made in a Curtiss "Eagle" recently at Washington. The youngster, after looking calmly over the side for five minutes, became bored and fell asleep. Press Illustrating
