

An imposing view of the ex-Kaiser's ancestral castle, situated 2,500 feet above the sea near Hechingen in Prussia. This magnificent palace was the home of the first of the Hohenzollerns. It is now an object of special interest to tourists.

Keystone View

The much talked-about gas mask of the trenches and No Man's Land settles down to a useful civilian life in a peaceful community. Here it is fully protecting a workman from the overcoming fumes of hydrochloric acid as he makes repairs on a condenser.

W. N. U.

Little curly-headed Miss December Morn plays polar bear bunnies (we almost wrote bare) with a set of furs made from the skins of rabbits that her daddy recently shot on a California rabbit hunt. Curly-headed Geraldine Jackson, of Los Angeles, insists on being in style, and rabbit fur is all the rage in the Southwest.

International

The future Mrs. Prince of Wales? Rumor has it that the beautiful twenty-year-old Princess Marie of Rumania, now attending school in England and a constant visitor at Windsor Castle, may be the bride of America's recent royal visitor.

International

Goodby 2.75! When the government ordered the destruction of thousands of bottles of America's last feeble stimulant, a group of citizens of Zion City, Ill., assembled for the obsequies as the authorities poured $3,000 worth of light and dark down a runway leading to the river.

Keystone View

Donna Flavia Potenski, an Italian girl whose beauty is doubly enhanced by her romantic war experiences. Living in Petrograd at the outbreak of the war, she became involved in Russian activities. Disguised as a priest she fled from the Bolsheviki and served as a private in the Russian Women's Battalion of Death.

Underwood

The citizens of Munich turn out en masse to witness the first sport games held in Bavaria since the beginning of the war. The men in running costume are competing in a long distance race. Their practice in this art in a recent world conflict should have trained them well for a sport of this kind.

Press Illus.

