

Another mystery ship. The German submarine mothership Vulcan, which, when Germany turned over her fleet to the Allies under the terms of the armistice, strangely disappeared, and nothing has been heard of her since. Did she meet the same fate as our unfortunate collier Cyclops? Note the heavy cranes amidship for raising the submarine out of the water for repairs. Keystone View

Left—You're wrong, "She's" not Dorothy Dalton, but Walter P. Folmer, of Princeton, and "leading lady" in the Triangle Club's new show, "The Isle of Surprise," an Oriental melo-drama with music which will be presented at the Waldorf on December 18. White
Whichever way you turn at Camp Romorantin, the store grounds of our army supplies in France, you'll find tons of material going to rot and ruin. Here's a corner of the auto wheel and tire pile. What is being done about this wanton wastefulness? Pepullan

Left—The days of real sport in Colorado are the days of winter sport. This happy Denver miss is making the ascent of one of the many famous ski courses that are so popular in the national parks of the Rockies. Wiswall Bros. Denver Tourist Bureau

Did you know that New York has the best buoyed and illuminated harbor in the world? Here's the sturdy little lightship that marks the Ambrose channel for the ships that pass in the night. How would you like to spend the winter on her? That's the wearisome job of the men of the U. S. Lighthouse Service. International

Miss Consuelo Flowerton, the pretty lass who posed for the Army Girl Poster recently painted by Howard Chandler Christy, and who attended the twenty-second Army and Navy football battle a week ago yesterday at the Polo Grounds in the costume designed for the painting. Vanderwood

Left—They rolled the "bones" into one big pile and threw in all the decks of cards they could find for good measure the other day over at Camp Merritt and then destroyed the whole shooting match—the authorities did, you understand, not the soldiers. Included in the bones were a pair used by royalty at Monte Carlo and another pair which won and lost $4,200 in a single game. Ledger Photo
Here's the original Red Cross Christmas seal discovered in the wilds of Bronx Park and being honored by an investiture of the famous tuberculosis campaign insignia of the double barred cross. It cost Mrs. Wm. S. Abbott, of the Red Cross Xmas Seal Campaign, a pail of fish to place the coveted decoration around his sealship's neck.

Who could keep their face straight when being snapped by Master Link, the famous monk, now in great demand as a model by French artists? The ape is able to set up a camera, focus it properly and take the picture. A portrait of the animal by Franz Simons recently sold in Paris for 20,000 francs. How much would you have paid to have it hang on your apartment wallpaper? Gilliams
