Above — The recent heavy snows in the Yellowstone have driven the wild animals from their usually secluded haunts in the reservation and hunger is doing much to tame them. Here shy Mr. Antelope is being fed by a year-old baby. Park officials are spending every dollar they can spare to buy food for the starving antelope, deer and elk, and have asked Congress for emergency action to save their four-legged friends from starvation and from the hunters who are slaughtering them as they leave the reservation in search of food. Underwood.

Below—Woe unto any enemy ship that should come to grips with Uncle Sam off the port of New York. Testing a little sister of Big Bertha — the army's new 14-inch coast defense guns that are having their first tryouts at Sandy Hook proving grounds. From one of the first photographs to be released by the army since the close of hostilities. International.

Over at the foot of the Palisades in Edgewater the houseboat Anna S. helps solve the high cost of rents by affording its owner and his family practically all of the comforts of the folks living in the monster apartments that line the Drive on the other side of the river. Three tons of coal keep the occupants of this little floating kingdom snug and warm all winter. Woods & Dupree.

Above—The new Japanese Ambassador confers decorations upon U. S. naval officers in Washington. Front row l. to r., Admiral Knight, commander of U. S. Asiatic Station; Admiral Mayo, former commander of Atlantic Fleet; Admiral Benson, former Chief of Naval Operations; Kijuro Shidehara, Japanese Ambassador; Rear Admiral Niblack, Director of Naval Intelligence; Rear Admiral Strauss, commander of U. S. mine-laying force, and Rear Admiral Welles. International.

Right—Two distinctive photos showing Lady Astor, the first woman to be elected to the House of Commons, in action during her recent political campaign in England. In the larger one she is saying, "Cheer Mr. Foot, but vote for me." In the other, "Remove your cigarette when you ask questions, please." Lloyd George and former Prime Minister Arthur Balfour escorted the new M. P. to her seat when Parliament opened. Underwood.

Just the thing for baby speeders. A sewing machine, parts of an old baby carriage and a small storage battery are all the materials needed to build this sporty looking raceabout, the proud possession of this little seventeen-months-old New Yorker, Martin Daues. Martin's daddy was the auto factory that turned out this four-mile-an-hour speedster. Wonder how your kiddie would like one? International.

Thrilling scenes were witnessed when the good ship Linerton, out of Newcastle on her maiden trip, was driven ashore by heavy seas and broke her back on the South Shields sands, England. The photo shows the great crack through the middle of the hull of this 10,000-ton freighter. Central News
