

Miss Eva Balfour, one of England's foremost actresses, arrives on the S. S. Baltic. British poets have paid homage to her art and beauty, famous sculptors have modeled her figure and celebrated artists have painted her portrait.

A little Siberian maid and the three husky Russian bear cubs that pull her sleigh over the snow crust to and from school at a lively clip. Northern Russia has so far escaped the ravages of Bolshevism.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, head of "The Outlook" for the past fifty years, who celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday recently. "The Outlook's" editor in chief is as keen and alert as ever and continues to keep in intimate touch with world affairs.

Right—The "Humanity" Flag, supposed to be a combination of the British Union Jack, the French Tri-color and our own Stars and Stripes, which nearly caused a riot when displayed the other day in a Washington novelty shop. The capital authorities have stopped its sale.

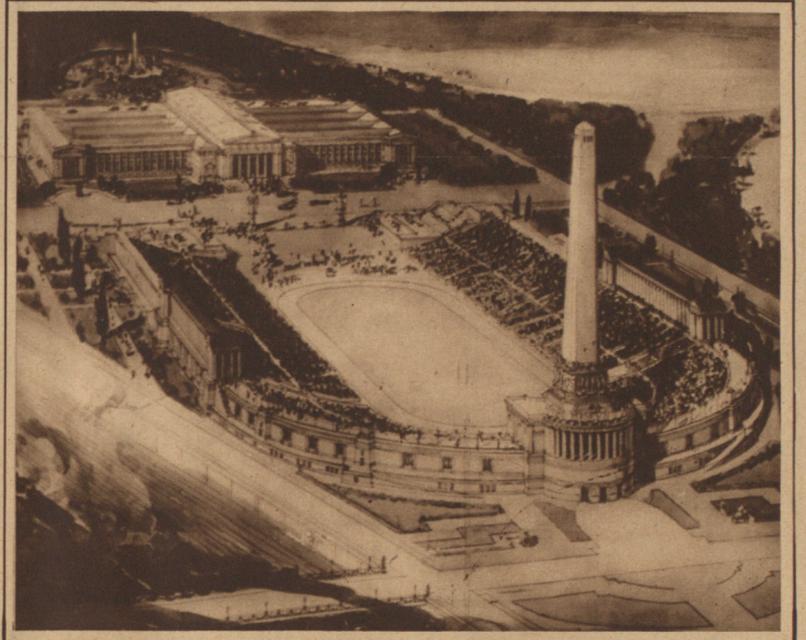

Left—These cheery little misses, warmly hooded and betrousered against the winter elements, are students at an open air school for children in fashionable Bryn Mawr, just outside of Philadelphia — an experiment that so far is proving immensely successful.

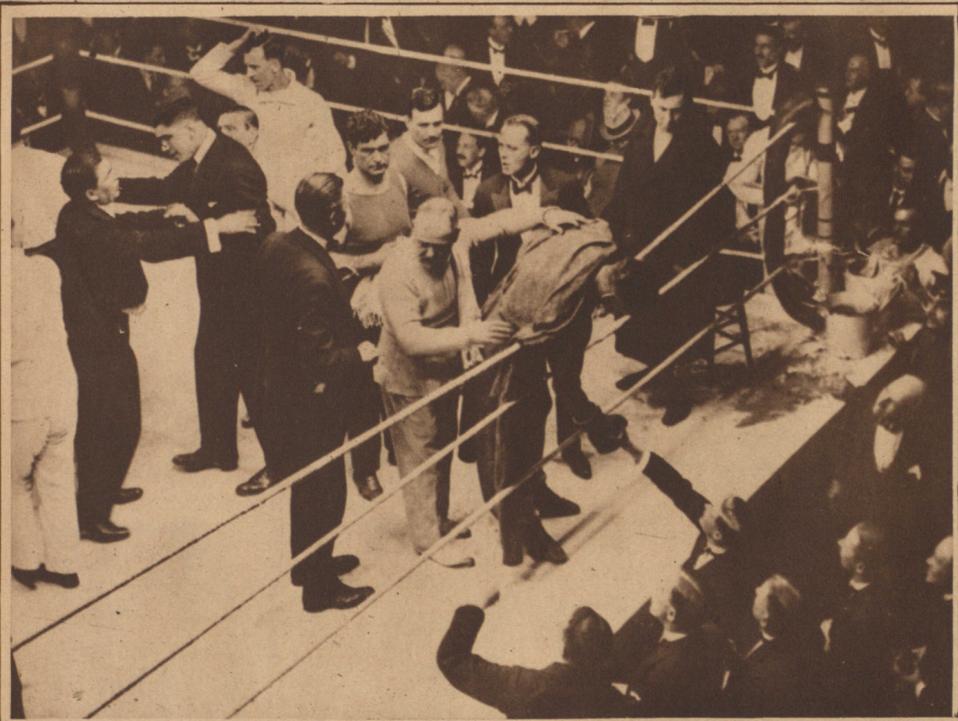

A chip of the old block, Bob Fitzsimmons Jr., in a characteristic fighting pose. Zero weather has no terrors for this hardy lad, who is training for his next fight in the snows of Nutley, N. J. "Fitz jr." is twenty-three years old and weighs 170 pounds.

Brooklyn sets the style in hosiery for pretty girls who would skate. Jean, Claire and Helen B. Moran pose for the photographer at the Prospect Rink and explain how they wear heavy woolen stockings rolled down over their sheer silk ones when they go a-skating.

Here is Chicago's proposed new stadium, the largest in the world, with a seating capacity of 100,000, or a third greater than the Yale Bowl. A stage at one end will seat 15,000 additional. It will cost $1,500,000 and take two years to build.

A dramatic view taken immediately after Carpentier, the French idol, had knocked out Beckett in London for the heavyweight championship of Europe. Beckett, still groggy from Carpentier's terrific knockout blow, is being held up by his seconds as he leans across the ropes to shake hands with the Prince of Wales.

A remarkable smoke picture, showing thousands of barrels of perfectly good American oil and tar going up at Archangel from fires set by Bolsheviki spies, hundreds of which infest Northern Russia.
