Owl hath a bride who is fond and bold, and loveth the woods deep gloom, And with eyes like the shine of the moon stone-cold, She a waiteth her ghast-ly groom, Not a fea-ther she moves, not a ca-rol she sings, As she waits in her tree so still, But when her heart heareth his flapping wings, She hoots out her wel-come shrill, But Mourn not for the Owl nor his gloomy plight,

The Owl hath his share of good,
If a prisoner be he in the broad daylight,
He is Lord in dark green wood,
Nor lonely the bird nor his ghastly mate,
They are each unto each a pride;
Thrice fonder perhaps since a strange dark fate, Hath rent them from all beside,
So when the night falls, and dogs do howl
Sing Ho! for the reign of the Horned Owl;
We know not alway — Who are kings by day,
But the king of the nigh is the bold brown Owl.
