All for silks and bonnets new,
If you have such inclinations
Now I'll tell you what to do.

DARLING LITTLE JESSIE LEE.

WORDS AMD MUSIC BY THOS. P. WESTENDORF.

Where the brightest flow'rs are growing,
Making life a fairy dream,
Dwells a little blue-eyed maiden,
Who is very dear to me,
Morning, noon and night I'm dreaming
Of my darling Jessie Lee.

Fondly will she then be waiting,
With a happy smile to greet,
And we'll wander through the meadow,
As we whisper words of love,
And her little eyes will sparkle
Brighter than the stars above.

A very neat little love-song, full of loving sentiments, and surely cannot fail to find thousands of admirers. It is dedicated to the Railroad Quartette, of Columbus, O. Price, 30 cents per copy.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

By G. WALLACE DAWSON.

A beautiful Photograph of the Picture, THE PRODIGAL SON, on the Title-page. Everybody who plays the Piano will want a copy. Mailed free of charge upon receipt of price.

The Prodigal Son was painted by Edward Du Bufe, of Paris. The work was begun in 1857, and occupied ten years of patient labor in bringing it to completion. Du Bufe, the artist, is a pupil of Delorche. It created great enthusiasm in Europe, and attracted the attention of critics on every hand, all of whom joined in unbounded praise of the great French masterpiece, and gave it a place first among works of modern art. In May 1876, it was on exhibition at Melodeon Hall, Cincinnati, where a disastrous fire swept it from existence.

This elegant song was written in tribute to the memory of P. P. Bliss, the Evangelist, who was killed at the Ashtabula Railroad Disaster. It had been issued only seven days when over 3,300 copies were sold. The title-page contains a correct photograph of P. P. Bliss, (cabinet size), which is alone worth the price of the song. There certainly should be no home or piano without a copy, as it is both pretty and instructive.

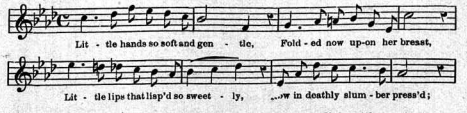
ANGELS HOVER O'ER OUR DARLING.

By GEORGE HASTINGS.



The above song has been sung by well known vocalists with great success. And it bids fair to become a very popular song indeed. It is not very difficult. The music is very sweet and plaintive, in perfect keeping with the words. It certainly ought to be found upon ever piano forte in the land.

The Uncle Tom Combination have been singing it with unbounded success every night over the death-bed of Little Eva.
