Lonely here and worn with sadness,
No lov'd child's sweet voice I hear;
Life hath ceas'd to yield its gladness,
Since without my little dear.
Eva, Eva, lovely daughter,
Are those young lips clos'd and cold,
That so softly spoke of heaven?
Emblem of an angel's mould,
Picture of divine perfection,
Lov'd by all, enslav'd and free,
Oh, my heart and soul's affection,
What is now the world to me.

Home is silent, dread, and drear,
Uncle Tom is seen to weep;
Topsy lingers near the bier,
Strewing roses at thy feet;
Eva, Eva, charming daughter,
Smile upon me from above;
Open those bright gates of pearl,
Bless me with thy spotless love;
Little angel thou art gone, there,
Fill'd at last thy prophecy;
Farewell only child, forever,
What is now the world to me.
