There are plenty of sorrows to chill us,
And trouble lasts on to the grave,
But the coldest glacier has its rose tint —
And foam rides the gloomiest wave.
Ah! hope will spring up from its ashes,
With plumage as bright as before,
And pleasure like lamps in a palace,
When extinct you need only light more.

There are fire-flies sparkling by myriads,
And the fountain wave dances in light,
Hark! the Mandolin's first notes awaken,
And soft steps break the silence of night;
Then come all ye young and ye graceful,
Come gay, as the lovely should be,
There's enough of this world's toil and trouble,
So let one night pass, — Sans Souci.
