With the sun-ny face and fair! Oft her hand, so small and dain-ty,
As my dar-ling lit-tle Len. O! how sweet, the sun-ny riv-er
Fond-ly rest-ed in my own, Whilst we wan-dered by the riv-er
Murmured whilst we by it roved; But its mel-o-dy was ri-valed
REFRAIN.
Through the coun-try, all a-lone, Whilst we wan-der'd
By the voice of her I loved, But its melo-dy
a tempo.

3.

I remember she would often
Make a pretty paper boat,
And with buttercups and daisies
Fill it, sending it afloat
On the sunny, crystal river
To the fairies good and kind.
‖: O! how eagerly we watched it
Sailing onward with the wind. :‖

4.

She is now no longer little,
But she still must lovely be.
She was taken in her childhood—
Happy childhood!—far from me.
She is often now remembered
Through the day and through the night;
‖: Oft at night in dreams I wander
With her by that river bright. :‖

5.

Oft by day, and after dreaming,
By the real river I
Ramble through the lonely country
And the river scenes to sigh,
Sorrowfully, sorrowfully:
"She will never come again—
‖: Never, never, never, never;
Farewell, loving, little Len!" :‖
