Within the Walls of London

London's streets are brave to see, and London's towers are splendid,
And Fortune waits at London's gates to smile and speak me fair.
But what would I with Fortune's smile or all the wealth o' London,
Unless the lass I love the best should come to greet me there?

The quays are piled with merchandise, with silk brocades and silver;
I hear the trade wind callin', and the tide is running free.
But what would I with silk brocades, or all of India's wonders,
Unless the lass I love the best should come again to me?
