2

When our sons and our brothers, our husbands and all
Who so bravely have answered the nations great call,
Who have fought in the conflict-but soon they will be
Our heroes; and then they'll sail over the sea.
When the battle is ended, the victory won,
When our transports are sailing for home sweet home
With our boys, though battle scarred, wounded they be,
How we'll welcome our heroes from over the sea

3

When the glad news shall reach us from over the sea,
That their vessel shall sail into port-then that day
How we'll cease from our labors and rush to the shore
To embrace the brave heroes whom now we adore
And with tears of a mother and father and son,
Of sister and brother and sweetheart, as one,
All mingled together for the joy we're to see,
For our boys have come back from far over the sea.
